But attracting these conservatives is a precarious undertaking. The old line Republicans do not think he can do it. That is why they have been sprucing up lately. The only question to date has been: will the radicals scare the conservatives enough to turn them to Roosevelt for safety?

One answer to this question is: not unless Roosevelt shows the country that he is really leading it back to prosperity. Otherwise the conservatives would not put their trust in him, but would rely on voting for some Republican. Which would mean that the radicals, withdrawing so much of Roosevelt's support, would seriously jeopardize Roosevelt's chances.

Economic Menace

So that the threat of a strike epidemic is more than an economic menace. It is a political bugaboo of darkest shade. And no one better than F. D. R. appreciates it.

Which explains why shrewd observers in Washington are not writing off the Wagner labor relations bill as sure to die—why they are not certain the 30-hour week bill will not be compromised (say at 36 or 38 hours), and why there is so much uncertainty about NRA.

Union labor officials would rather have the Wagner bill than a continuance of NRA. Down in their hearts, but most confidentially, they would far rather have the Wagner bill than the 30-hour week—even without compromise.

The answer to both is simple, but you cannot confirm the second in public. As to preferring the Wagner bill to NRA, the Wagner bill would be permanent legislation. As to preferring it to the 30-hour week, the Wagner measure leaves more to be done by union officials, whereas the 30-hour week leaves less appeal to unorganized workers to join labor unions and begin paying dues.

NRA and the 30-hour week together move directly toward an ultimate goal which would sharply curtail the power, influence, need for perquisites of union labor leaders. The government would step in and perform most of their functions. It would gain for the workers what the unions now have to fight with private industry to attain. And union labor leaders are very human. They like their jobs and their power, and want to keep them.

Hits Export Trade

Great Britain's highly successful drive to compel Poland and other European countries to buy more British goods, if Britain is going to continue buying theirs, has played hob with prospects for American export trade. So has Italy's setting up of an "Amtorg"—called the National Institute for Foreign Trade—which is to handle all imports and exports for that country.

This government will beyond doubt denounce its commercial treaties with Italy, Portugal, Denmark and Poland in the near future. Secretary of State Cordell Hull, father of reciprocal trade agreements as a means of lowering economic barriers, has been reluctantly forced to this position. The action would have been taken already had it not been for the delicate situation in Europe caused by all the war talk. There is no real hope that any negotiations short of the strong arm methods of treaty denunciation will lead to results.

One of the effects of discriminations against American goods in Europe has been to boost the stock of George N. Peek, who stands for barter as the only effective way of hurdling artificial national barriers, as against Secretary Hull's reciprocal plan. For example, the Chrysler automobile people, enthusiastic about the Hull plan until Poland imposed a quota system, have reluctantly come to the conclusion that only the forthright Peek methods can accomplish anything.

As showing the wheels within wheels, this Chrysler situation is most interesting. Chrysler has enjoyed a very profitable market in Poland, selling many American cars there. Now Poland, under pressure from Great Britain, has instituted a quota system, which will cut auto imports from America to the bone.

But this does not hurt General Motors, or Ford, anything like as much. Both have factories in European countries, which are not hurt by the quota.

American Labor Loses

But every General Motors car sold in most European countries, instead of a Chrysler, deprives American workmen of just so much labor. For example, in its factory in Belgium, General Motors, building the Opel car, uses European made motors and European made tires. Whereas the Chrysler plant in Antwerp is really more a warehouse than a factory. All American parts are used.

Moreover, the purchase of European made parts is not all. The reciprocal treaty with Belgium provides for a much greater reduction in the tariff on parts than the tariff on cars.

But the Italian situation is even more serious. Within a few weeks her new restrictions will bar all American wheat and tobacco, and will limit to 25 per cent of 1934 figures imports of American autos. The restriction to one-fourth of last year's imports applies to 200 different products!

On Italy's part this is at once an attempt to adjust her long enduring unfavorable balance of trade, and an attempt to stimulate domestic production. But even 1934 exports from America to Italy were not big. They represented a very lean year for most American exporters. The restriction on cotton is expected to have repercussions all through the South. Meanwhile Italy hopes either to increase the output of her Fiat and other auto factories, or to encourage all American manufacturers of cars to establish branch factories in Italy. Either of which would provide work for Italians.

Wheat is in a different category. Formerly the United States shipped about 80,000,000 bushels of wheat a year to Italy. With the boosting of the tariff on wheat to protect American farmers from hard Canadian wheat, Canada simply took over this market.

Annoys White House

White House irritation against the radio companies, for permitting Huey Long to get so much free time, is growing pretty hot. But it is not easy to make the case. To put it clearly and simply would lay the White House open to a charge of attempted censorship, and give Senator Schall of Minnesota more to talk about. That was irritating enough at the time.

But the fact is that Huey's attacks have been annoying the administration, from the President down, more than any other one thing. It is not really the immediate political prospect of a third party, at all. It is just plain annoyance.

The political situation, from the administration standpoint, is fine. If Huey succeeds in stirring up a radical third party, the President, moving slightly to the right, will simply annex what is left of the old Republican Party's conservative wing. Roosevelt's re-election would be as sure as was Hoover's defeat last time, or more accurately, as Taft's defeat was in 1912.

Moreover, the Republicans have played the Huey Long-Father Coughlin game. They have been hoping these malcontents would get somewhere. They have thought that only in a split of the President's following could any Republican have a chance. But a radical Democrat, garnering Democratic votes here and there, would or at least might elect a Republican.

This phase of it was all right with the White House. There were even smiles when General Johnson took Father Coughlin over the jumps, in his broadcast, and threw a little mud over Huey.

But Huey did not respond as the White House had anticipated. He did not follow the course of Coughlin and devote himself to annihilating Johnson, while professing the highest admiration for the President. Huey proceeded to ignore Johnson and to belabor the President, taking up his policies one by one and presenting them in an almost ludicrous light. Too many people are annoyed at the codes, the processing taxes, at cotton mills closing down while Japanese imports flow in, for such tactics not to hurt. And they do hurt.

Too Much Free Time

Now what burns up the administration is that Long has been getting most of his time over the radio for nothing. The radio companies do not like this. They are very uneasy about it. They know that both Long and Father Coughlin are tremendous drawing cards over the radio. But they do not like the idea of giving away time to some one who will produce irritation at the White House. It may spell trouble for them in other ways. They would much prefer to cut them off altogether.

But they had agreed, some time back, to give a certain amount of time to discussions of public questions, on the theory that such use of radio time was educational, in the best interest of the country, and a generous contribution by a prosperous business to general welfare.

They did not originate this attitude. It was virtually forced on them. Partly by the radio commission and partly by senators and members of the house.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A HISTORIC CIGAR WRAPPER

"HALT!" B. W. Mitchell of Muncie, Ind., a private in Company F of the Twenty-seventh Indiana Volunteer infantry in the Army of the Potomac, heard that command with a feeling of relief. He was tired after the long march that his general, George B. McClellan, had ordered on that hot September day in 1862.

Then his eyes sparkled. A prize! It was his lucky day, though it happened to be the 13th. Three cigars, wrapped in a small piece of paper and tied with a string, lay at his feet. He ripped off the paper and started to throw it away. Then he swore softly . . . and ran quickly to his sergeant who made haste with him to the colonel. He took one look at the paper and a few minutes later it was in the hands of General McClellan.

It happened to be Special Order No. 191, signed by Gen. Robert E. Lee, who was leading his ragged hosts in gray north, singing "Maryland, My Maryland!" It revealed how Lee had divided the two wings of his army, and told of the routes over which they were moving. It was addressed to Gen. D. H. Hill, but some staff officer or courier had used it for a cigar wrapper, and then lost it.

George Brinton McClellan was a champion "staller," but this little piece of paper wrought a magic change in him. Here was his chance to smash the invading army. For once he moved with incredible speed. Within two hours he had a division on the march toward South mountain as the first step toward driving a wedge between Lee's divided force.

Just in the nick of time the amazed Confederate commander learned the reason for the Union leader's swift action, so he changed his plans. The result was that the gray "Army of Liberation" was forced to the defensive, Pennsylvania spared from invasion and there ensued the "bloodiest battle of the whole war." . . . that of Antietam. Lee lost 10,000 men and McClellan 12,140 . . . a total casualty list of 22,140, all because of a piece of paper wrapped around three cigars!

A CAPTAIN'S COMMISSION

IF, IN the summer of 1777, a young Pennsylvanian had been given the commission of captain instead of second lieutenant, many an American settler in the Ohio valley would probably have been saved from Indian tomahawks and Simon Girty would not have come down in history as the "White Renegade," a "monster," and a "wretched miscreant."

At the outbreak of the Revolution, Girty with most of the frontiersmen around Fort Pitt joined the Patriot cause. He served loyally and well until a disagreement with his superior led to his discharge. When Gen. Edward Hand took command at Fort Pitt Girty's enemies spread the story that he was plotting with the British. He was jailed on suspicion but, when brought to trial, proved his innocence.

Despite this injustice, Girty helped enlist men for the Continental army and hoped to be rewarded with a captaincy of a newly-organized company. But the command was given to John Stephenson and Girty was offered another second lieutenant's commission. To be slighted thus rankled in his heart so he made his way to Detroit and offered his services to Gen. Henry Hamilton, British commander there.

This was the beginning of the reign of terror which the "White Renegade," as leader of many an Indian war party, spread along the Kentucky and Ohio borders for nearly 20 years. How different frontier history might have been if Simon Girty, instead of Stephenson, had been made captain of a company in the Continental army in 1777!

AN UNWASHED SPOON

EARLY in 1800, a young Frenchman named Daguerre began to experiment with the "Diorama." The reflected light from a scene was made to come through an aperture and make a picture on the opposite wall. Lenses were used for strengthening the images and here was a camera in almost working order.

Daguerre thought that nature should take her own pictures and that light could be made to record itself. He began many futile experiments, hunting for a chemical that would make a picture forthright. For more than two years he was a recluse, shut in his laboratory and refusing to see even his closest friends. He wanted to be the one lucky enough to make the discovery. One day, by a queer occurrence, he stumbled on the secret.

He had eaten his noon-day meal and not waiting to wash his spoon, he tossed it in one of his cupboards. There was a metal plate coated with iodine on the shelf and the silver spoon lay on this until the next morning. The young man opened the cupboard door at breakfast time to get his spoon and found a clear picture of it on the metal plate.

Immediately he began to coat more plates with iodine of silver and then followed the experiments which resulted in successful photography.

Vessels Put Together Like Children's Blocks

In more than 10,000 separate parts and packed in crates, an admiralty designed river gunboat was recently shipped from Southampton to Shanghai in a liner.

Originally the vessel was completed at a Southampton shipyard, the work of building taking eight months. It was then dismantled and the various parts were made into 260 packages, the largest of which was over 20 feet long and weighed about three tons.

It is expected that the vessel will be completely assembled three months from the date of the delivery at Shanghai.

Vessels are occasionally shipped overseas in parts because it is not always expedient to send them long distances under their own power.

Not long ago a twin-screw passenger steamer constructed in England was shipped in pieces to Lake Albert Nyanza, Africa. It had a dead weight tonnage of 280.—London Answers.

Not to Be Trusted

He that from fear doeth good, will do ill if he durst.

"No more tired, let-down feeling for me"

"I reasoned that my red blood corpuscle strength was low and I simply took a course of S.S.S. Tonic and built it back."

IT is all so simple and reasonable. If your physical let-down is caused by lowered red blood corpuscles—which is all too frequent—then S.S.S. Tonic is waiting to help you . . . and will, unless you have a serious organic trouble that demands a physician or surgeon.

Remember, S.S.S. is not just a so-called "tonic." It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying red corpuscles in the blood.

This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved . . . food is better utilized . . . and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should naturally.

You may have the will-power to be "up and doing" but unless your blood is in top notch form you are not fully yourself and you may remark, "I wonder why I tire so easily."

Let S.S.S. help build back your blood tone . . . if your case is not exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food . . . sound sleep . . . steady nerves . . . a good complexion . . . and renewed strength.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today.

SYNOPSIS

Theodore Gatlin adopts a baby, "Penelope," in an effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But his wife has never wanted her, and their affairs end in the divorce court. At a baseball game a ball strikes ten-year-old Penelope on the nose. Mrs. Gatlin spirits the child to Europe. Gatlin wills Penelope all his money, and is about to begin a search for her when a motor accident ends his life. Some ten years later, in San Francisco, Stephen Burt, rising young psychiatrist, is presented by Dan McNamara, chief of police, with a new patient—Nance Belden, a girl with a dual personality, for which her "saddle nose" is in part responsible. McNamara does not think she is a criminal and obtains Burt's testimony in court. Lanny, the doctor's office nurse, is also won over. Nance's criminal record outweighs Doctor Burt's explanation of her case and she is sent to San Quentin penitentiary. Nance escapes, and goes to Lanny's apartment. From one of the men in the boat on which the girl escaped McNamara learns that her real name is Penelope Gatlin. He also discovers that she is heiress to $750,000. Fearful of McNamara, in his official capacity, Nance flees. Lanny finds her in her apartment, asleep. Then she disappears, and McNamara learns that she is living in Paris. He also discovers he is in love with Lanny. Stephen warns Penelope by cable to leave Paris, as her whereabouts are known. She flees before the French police get on her trail, and pops back into Lanny's home in San Francisco.

"We'll not fix it in this city, my boy." Thus McNamara.

"Why not?"

"Because when that girl is well she'll probably elect to live her life here, and I don't want a soul in this city, with the exception of ourselves, to know that once she had a saddle nose and a dual personality."

"We can trust the ethical integrity of the man I purpose—"

"I'll trust nobody but myself—and then not too much. Where is the best plastic surgeon in this country?"

"In New York city."

"Lanny, I'll ask the police commission for a sixty day leave of absence. We'll be married at once and take this child to New York with us, put her in a hospital there and have the job done. While it's being done we'll have our honeymoon."

"Three is a crowd—on a honeymoon," Stephen warned.

"It's nothing of the sort," Lanny defended. "Stevie, you mind your own business. Dan and I know our way about."

"Indeed? Well, just because you're so contumacious, I'm going to tell you something. If I hadn't promoted this engagement, you and Dan would not now be engaged. Dan had you up on a pedestal—which is where you never belonged—and you're so naturally manshy you never even learned the rudiments of the come-on as practiced by the dullest, so I talked the matter up!"

"You didn't talk it up to me."

"No, but I listened sympathetically when you raved about what a grand man Dan McNamara was, and my neck is still stiff from nodding agreement. I told Dan you were crazy about him and worked up his courage—"

"You're a liar," McNamara charged, feebly and without malice.

"Dan McNamara is one man who doesn't have to have help with his courage or thinking," Lanny declared pridefully. "And you do, Stephen Burt. You're adept at lording it over your befuddled patients, but Rebecca P. Lanning is a horse of another color."

"I think I'll go home," Stephen retorted, and went.

He was back in the morning with the impedimenta of his profession. Penelope greeted him gravely. "Good morning, Doctor Burt."

He started. The strident note of Nance Belden was gone from her voice. She spoke now in the low, level tone of the girl of breeding. Then she sat down, and they conversed for half an hour on topics of general interest, but during that time she did not move once from her seat. Her vocabulary was free of underworld expressions, her diction perfect, her sentences grammatical.

"You have had a good night's rest, Miss Gatlin," he ventured.

She nodded, smiling a little. "I am not at all nervous this morning, Doctor Burt. When I am very tired, or excited about something, I am always horribly nervous."

"And you get dreadfully depressed, do you not?"

She nodded. "So depressed that at times I want to die."

"Well, we might as well start your physical examination. I'm going to try to ascertain why you can't be cheerful always. There's a reason, of course, for your nervousness and depression, so I want to examine you very meticulously and see if your trouble can be charged up to some physical condition. Let me feel your pulse."

It was eighty-three, full and strong.

Stephen's examination of the girl was as complete as modern medical science could make it, and when the last laboratory report came in three days later he [illegible]ed Lanny in to discuss the girl.

"With the e[illegible]tion of a subnormal chest expansi[illegible]anny, that girl is without doul[illegible] healthiest young woman I hav[illegible]examined. Her sole physical def[illegible]er nose. But for that I thin[illegible]be a husky little athlete righ[illegible]e told me she always wante[illegible]ter on outi[illegible]l in tennis, golf and dancin[illegible]f course she'd want to [illegible]omething. She couldn't co[illegible]ood looks. I'll write up n[illegible]C[illegible]er and you can hand a copy of it to the man who is to do the operation. I've wired him that I was sending on a patient, and he has agreed to care for her. I see by this morning's paper that Mac has been given a leave of absence."

Lanny nodded.

"When are you and Dan to be married?"

"Tomorrow. We're flying to Reno to avoid the three-day notice of intention to marry demanded by the California law."

"Penelope flying with you?"

"Naturally. She's my bridesmaid!"

"Who's going to give the bride away?"

"Nobody. Dan and I are too old to stand for a long-drawn-out marriage ceremony."

"Well, I suppose I'm stuck for a wedding present. How much money have I got in the bank?"

"Approximately twenty thousand. I'm going to buy you some Argentine bonds today. There's no reason why those bonds shouldn't be selling at—"

"Lanny, you're mercenary. I don't care for a dissertation on bonds. Draw yourself a check for ten thousand and spend it all in riotous living. Give old Dan a real blow out—"

"Stevie, you're mad!"

"Quiet, please. Love from the boss, Lanny, and no back talk from you. And for heaven's sake do get a half-way intelligent nurse to take your place while you're away."

"I've engaged Miss Ordway."

"Horrible. Her face would stop a parade. She's efficient, but terrible to look at."

The tears were welling in Lanny's eyes. "Oh, Stevie, I want you to be safe—while I'm away," she choked.

She Nodded, "So Depressed That at Times I Want to Die."

"No hoity-toity—young thing—with her sweet smile—and winning ways—and you such a—softy—oh, Stevie, Stevie, I can't bear to leave you. If I do, something dreadful will happen to you." And Lanny laid her head on her desk and sobbed quite heartily.

However, Stephen knew what was good for Lanny. "You make me ill," he said coldly. "You carry on like a girl of sixteen."

Instantly Lanny was furious. "You don't appreciate me," she charged.

"Be still. Where's the check book? On an occasion such as the present I suppose I should sign the check myself."

"It wouldn't do any good if you did, darling. You've never registered your signature at your bank and you have no authority to sign checks on your own bank account. How funny!" and Lanny commenced to laugh. "How lucky I thought of that before leaving!"

Thereupon Stephen put both arms around her and kissed her three times and told her she was as the shadow of a rock in a weary land; that she was very dear to him; that whatever she did was O. K. with him and he'd miss having his daily fight with her; and finally so softened her that she consented to let him fly to Reno and give the bride away. It developed that she had always wanted him to do this but loathed putting him to so much trouble.

At the expiration of his leave McNamara returned to duty, but Lanny remained with Penelope in New York. Performed by a master, the operation had proved successful thus far. The actual work of the operation had been the least of it; the subsequent care of the bone and skin graft, and the surgeon's artistry in reshaping the nose were what required time and patience. Lanny reported that the patient would not be discharged for at least three months more.

"How did Penelope approach the operation?" Stephen queried of McNamara.

"Happily. Not a whit nervous. Lanny had complete control over her." He grinned. "I passed as her Uncle Dan and the wife as Aunt Lanny. Lanny saw to it that the girl didn't do any talking while the doctor was present."

"You're a good fellow, Dan."

"Well," McNamara admitted humorously, "it wasn't much of a honeymoon, I'll admit. However, we'd set our hands to the job and we couldn't turn back, God help us."

"Well, you have this consolation, my friend. Your job is over, and mine will commence when Lanny returns with the girl."

"D'ye think you can pull her through, lad?"

"I'm sure I can, Dan. A psychoneurosis generally is impossible to cure unless you know its causative factors and can remove them. If you can do that, it's as simple as removing a wart. Dan, have you looked up the girl's ancestry?"

"I have not."

"Then do so immediately. We might run into a situation that will shed a bright, effulgent beam of light on my job."

"The attorney that handled Gatlin's affairs ought to be a good man to start with, Stephen. I'll motor to San Jose tomorrow and look him up. The bank will know who he is."

The bank president did know the name of the attorney, but added the disconcerting information that the man had been dead six years. McNamara thereupon called the man's widow to ask if she still retained her late husband's files. He had a faint hope that if she would permit him to look into the Gatlin file he might find a clue. He was informed to his amazement, that about two years and a half before, Mrs. Merton had called upon her, asked for the file and had been given it.

There was but one club in the city—the Elks—and McNamara wondered if Theodore Gatlin had belonged to that. He discovered Gatlin had, and from the dining room steward, who remembered Theodore Gatlin very well, he ascertained the names and addresses of three men with whom Gatlin had according to the steward, seemed very friendly.

Of these three men, one was dead and the others were unable to shed any light upon the parentage of Gatlin's adopted daughter, although one man had a hazy recollection that the child's father had been an army officer and had been killed in the Philippines. The chief's questionings, however, elicited the names of two women who had been friendly with Mrs. Gatlin, so McNamara called upon both. They could furnish him no information beyond the fact that Mrs. Gatlin despised the child Penelope; that she had never been enthusiastic about the adoption; that she had never been kind to the girl; that Gatlin and Penelope had been inseparable pals. They had a feeling that Mrs. Gatlin, while apparently delighting in persecuting her husband, was, nevertheless, insanely jealous of his love for his adopted daughter; that up to the day of her accident, Penelope had been a bright, healthy, normal child, fun-loving and affectionate and humorous, and the delight of her foster father.

CHAPTER XI

Dan reported to Stephen, somewhat depressed, because he had returned, he thought, without a scintilla of worthwhile information. Stephen, however, thought otherwise. "I'll have to question Mrs. Merton again," he decided. He rang for Miss Ordway. "Telephone to Mrs. Merton," he ordered, "and tell her I wish she'd drop in here some day soon. Tell her I'd like the latest report on her health."

"What are you going to do?" McNamara asked.

"Hypnotize her again, of course. I've got to release her from the mental inhibition I set upon her in the case of her adopted daughter. Otherwise she'll not talk."

A minute later Miss Ordway entered the room. "Mrs. Merton says she will be down for her interview in half an hour, Doctor."

"When she arrives, Dan, you step out into the nurse's office until I have her under control; then I'll admit you. I want you to take copious notes."

Mrs. Merton fluttered into Stephen's consultation room forty minutes later. "Oh, Doctor Burt," she whined, "I'm so glad you've sent for me. My insomnia is worse than ever," she wailed. "Oh, Doctor, do you think I'm going crazy?"

"Not at all, not at all," he soothed her.

"You are excited over nothing. But you are in a highly nervous condition, of course, and until you have settled down it would be useless for me to attempt to examine you. If you could have a little nap for, say half an hour on the couch in the next room, I'm sure you would awaken much refreshed."

"Oh, if I could only sleep half an hour, Doctor, if I only could. What a relief it would be."

"Nonsense, my dear lady. We doctors have ways of inducing sleep even in the most obstinate cases of insomnia."

At his command she lay down on the couch and Stephen place a cushion under her head. Employing the appropriate method of inducing hypnotic sleep, Stephen had her drowsy within three minutes; in ten minutes she had passed into a profound state and Stephen summoned McNamara, gave him a pad and pencil and silently indicated a chair.

Mrs. Merton, however, was aware of his presence. "Who's there?" she demanded in a drowsy tone.

"Doctor McNamara, Mrs. Merton. I have called him in to confer with me on your case."

RENDER TRIBUTE TO "APPLESEED JOHNNY'S" LABOR

He was a gentle lunatic, "Johnny Appleseed." Or perhaps he was a saint. His first appearance in history, where he is now secure of his niche in the saga of American pioneering, is in the year 1800 when he is seen drifting down the Ohio in a strange craft with a queer cargo: two canoes lashed together bearing a load of rotten apples from the cider presses of Pennsylvania. His errand is to plant apple seeds in the wilderness that orchards may be there awaiting the white settlers when they arrive. This was his errand for 46 years. Like a good many other beneficent cranks he is supposed to nave been born in Boston, and perhaps the wine of revolution mixed with his blood, for his birth year is given as 1775. Of holy books he had two: the Bible and Emmanuel Swedenborg, which he read aloud to border families by the light of cabin fires; he ate no meat, killed no living creatures—not even venomous reptiles—befriended animals, went unharmed, though all but naked, in a savage wilderness that teemed with wild beasts and Indians, and these last venerated him as a powerful "medicine." In 1812 he spread the alarm of an impending Indian attack and saved hundreds of settlers from massacre. But more than saint, he was artist, and his art-form was the apple. It was a passionate conviction with him that the tree should be raised from the seed, and he chose his orchard sites for fertility and picturesqueness with the fastidious taste of poet and painter, fenced the enclosure, and returned each year to tend his trees. Ohio people still remember him with affection for his were the first fruits of their wilderness.—Boston Globe.

MAINLY ABOUT COLUMBIANA

By BILL SIMS

The past two weeks in this town has brought the most astounding things. First the opening of two horseless vehicle dealers, one selling Henry Ford's latest version of what automobiles should be. Across the street we see Dodges and Plymouths displayed prominently. so some afternoon when you are leaning against one of the posts in front of Lefkovit's store, "Watch the Fords go by", also keep an eye on that Plymouth Floating Power; then when you have made your selection, dig down in the ole sock and either of these two dealers will be only too glad to sell you a modern car. Simple isn't it?

We notice that a lot of paint is being splashed on the various buildings along Main Street. One such building is to house the latest in hardware.

Last week when Mother Wind gave Alabama a taste of the dust storm, which occured out West, many of our neighbors raised a howl about the dust getting in their eyes; we should think about the poor fellows up in Kansas who didn't know whether they were eating their usual grapenuts for breakfast, or swallowing some of the terra fiornia from the plains of Nevada.

Since this column is for High School News, we had better begin telling what little Johnnie and Mary have learned this week. A few days ago we were honored by having Mr. Bob Jones lecture during chapel. Mr. Jones, being one of the Jones boys. is the representative, manager, president and what have you, of the Bob Jones College in Cleveland, Tenn. Mr. Jones' theme was the Philosophy of Love and he sticks to it. Every one enjoyed his helpful talk.

Your school has progressed rapidly the past few months. We sent the largest collection of gals ever sent by this school over to Montevallo to enter the Annual Inter-State High School Meet. All the girls had a swell time, but top honors go to Miss Beatrice Looney, who won first place in voice. She was awarded one of the many scholarships given by the college on that occasion.

I have just been informed that another bigger and better dance is to be given next Saturday evening at the Airport, of course we all know who will administer the music. I notice that the boys have been practicing until the wee hours of the morning lately, and chances are ten to one that you will hear sweeter melodies than ever—so remember, don your best dress and wear your best smile. I'll pick you up at nine sharp because we don't want to miss a minute of good wholesome entertainment offered us every two weeks at a very moderate cost.

Now if you will excuse me, I remain your Shelby County school boy who just found out that it is only 5 weeks or 42 days, or 1008 hours until school closes for summer vacations.

BOY SCOUTS

By WILLIE THOMASON,
Editor, Siluria, Ala.

Let's start this week off with a bang by giving three cheers for Helena's newly organized Scout Troop.

During the last few weeks, Helena has begun to organize a much needed Scout Troop. The boys have gotten off to a fine start, with over 20 boys reporting for the first meeting.

The Troop as yet is not a registered one, but expects to be within the next few weeks. They have already begun their Scout Training and have already taken one Camping trip to their credit for 1935 program.

It is the purpose of the newly organized Troop to interest every boy in Helena of Scout age into becoming a registered Boy Scout.

Come on Helena, we are all watching you and expecting great things of you.

Helena and Siluria Scout Troops spent Friday night on Cahaba River. This is the first Camp trip taken by either Troop. The rain made things pretty miserable for this initial night out, especially about the time the Bugler was supposed to sound taps. It was finally discarded and the boys sat humped under rocks and water—the rain spoiled their "beds of nature". With cramped quarters, the boys were forced to become night owls. They returned home Saturday with eyes red and swollen from lack of sleep. However, Scout Forest Numan was "dry" and reported a good nights sleep on account of not being able to find the Camp when he reached the river.

We are hoping for better luck next time.

CALERA NEWS

IN MEMORY

Just one year ago, "April 17, 1934, the death angel came to our home and said to our dear Papa, 'It is enough, come home'," and he peacefully fell asleep.

Oh! how we miss him for he had always been with us. Many friends cherrish the memory of Mr. T. W. Whatley and feel thankful of the privilege of knowing him.

He was an honest upright citizen and highly respected by all who knew him. Influence does not go down into the grave but lives on and on and on.

There is no death anyway.
What seems so, is transition,
Just passing from a world so gray
To a higher world of sweet elysian,
Only passing over to the other side
There to wait so happy and free,
Till the gate shall open wide,
And he will beckon to you and me.

Hectic Days Sleepless Nights

Miss Currier reBeved of nervous days and sleepless nights.

IF YOU are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.

Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nervine. It will relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.

Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.

Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.

Christene Lanier finds Nervine best nerve medicine she ever used.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nervine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier, New Market, N. H.

I have used Dr. Miles Nervine in liquid form and find it the best medicine for the nerves I have ever used. Christene Lanier, Middleton, Tennessee

Miss Redman takes Dr. Miles Nervine whenever she feels restless.

Whenever I have over-indulged and feel restless I take one or two Nervine Tablets just before I retire. In the morning when I awake I feel like a new person and can go about my work as usual. Dr. Miles Nervine Tablets quiet your nerves, brace you up and are the simplest, most convenient tablets to take I have ever found. Miss Grace Redmann, St. James, Minn.

Before using your Nervine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that my family notice the difference. I still take it from time to time and the good result is wonderful. J. H. Redding, 1027 18th Ave., Rock Island, Ill.

E-A-S-T-E-R!

Imbued with a tinge of the early Easter spirit, we took a search thru the files of the Democrat for the past three years, and found an excerpt from "Moods and Fancies", by Clarice White Luck, which we reprint. The descriptive beauty of this "glorious morn" is graphically painted by her fluent pen:

"E-vening. Dark the Calvary sky;
A-stone hewn guarded tomb;
S-lumbering winds that softly sigh;
T-ears fall where roses bloom;
E-ternal night, and then, East born
R-essurrection, Christ given morn!

Dark cold bitterness of Winter, suddenly, Spring, the Magic Weaver, with her looms of silver dew, wove a mist of jeweled veiling and draped the day worn twilight, blue; a wild young wind of evening in abandonment of care, tore the fragile drapery and scattered jewels everywhere! The peach trees found pink corals left within their care; the pear trees were given emeralds and diamonds to wear; the earth awoke in sparkling robes and banished the wind so bold, while the Weaver moved her shuttles and threaded her looms with gold. And so,

"The little cares that fretted me
I lost them yesterday,
Among the hills above the sea
Among the winds at play".

Easter, symbol of Life Everlasting! We can now no longer speak of a "bourne from which no traveller e'er returns"—However, until the Ressurection of Christ, for forty centuries, in one long unbroken column, the race of man had "marched into the shadows". Of all the millions of men who had descended into the Valley of Shadows, not one had ever returned. There was not an empty grave in all the Earth—No human heart believed, no human voice declared that there was the possibility of a victor stronger than man's great enemy—DEATH. Therefore, it was a wonderful message of hope, that the Apostle communicated, when unto the race of man he lifted up his voice and proclaimed: "One human form has risen from the dead; one grave of earth is empty; the man Christ Jesus who was dead, is alive again". Today, bereaved hearts cling around this sweet message of HOPE —and in every grave on earth's green sward lies a tiny seed of the resurrection of LIFE promised, hence, a happy and a glorious Easter will this one be to all of us who can "catch the vision" of the risen Christ.

"Ring joyous bells of Easter,
Death hath not conquared Life;
Victorious is our risen Lord,
And finished all his strife.
From Calvary's Mount of Darkness,
Lo-starry lillies bloom;
For by the cross we conquer
And fearless face the tomb."

Despite clouds and rain on last Wednesday, the day grew brighter in this print shop when our good friend E. P. Niven, of Wilsonville, Alabama, walked in and renewed his valuable allegiance to this weekly newspaper. Just how welcome he was, will probably not be known 'cause we can't find an adjective to tell him—but it was the superlative degree of encouragement he left with us. Mr. Niven is a member of the Board of Registrars of Shelby County and one of the most influential Democrats in his section of the county. Why shouldn't we feel like a million dollars after this recognition?

Misses Alice Roberts, Ruth Luck, Jane Fowler, Margaret and Bertha Ellis and Charlie Verne Tinney, of Alabama College, returned to their studies on Monday, after spending the Spring Holiday season in Columbiana with their parents.

Dr. G. E. Brown, of Thorsby, optometrist, will be in Columbiana again on May 11—for the purpose of examining your eyes. His headquarters while in Columbiana, will be at Columbiana Drug Company. He is prepared to fit your glasses and carries a complete stock so that you may choose the type of glasses that best suit the contour of your face. See him when he again visits Columbiana on May 11th.

Clay Butler, of Pelham, genial and competent License Inspector was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana on Saturday. Mr. Butler thoughtfully came by and paid a personal visit to this emporium where we have our experience with the "cares of a work-a-day" world, and we enjoyed his visit. His pleasing personality should take him far toward any goal he might be seeking.

Tom Lee, rightfully dubbed the DUKE of Pelham, was seen in the lobby of the Courthouse on Saturday. An impressive figure, and a man who is always cordially received into political and friendly circles when in Columbiana.

Some say it with "music"—some with "poems", but there is no sweeter way of imparting an Easter message of happiness than to "say it with flowers"——See Noland Barnett's collection of choice Spring blossoms before going out of Columbiana for your Easter gift.

Of course you will want to look your best when you join the Easter parade—and you cannot do this unless you are well groomed. In order to enhance your feminine charms, get a new permanent wave. "Louise", has an attractive offer which it will pay you to investigate.

Why should the "minds of us linger" when the "hearts of us" long to go? Every little flowered bordered road in this County seems to be calling us today. Only by sheer force of mental concentration are we able to continue our verbal ramble. Never have the woods been so lovely. Never have roads been more alluring in their vari-colored offerings of Spring flowers. A tank full of gas and a winding road with one who could be "silently content" to travel along—well, what more could you want?—Let's go!

Now that the trip thru the Narrows on Double Oak Mountain has been traversed and the "wanderlust" satiated in a measure—we are "all set" to see what has been happening in and around Main Street since we left it. However, let me urge all of you to travel this Florida Short Route into Birmingham before the dogwood trees and the honeysuckle blooms are gone. The view of the Cahaba Valley will fully repay you—that it, if you are a lover of the beautiful!

Mildred Curlee, popular young matron of Columbiana, chalked up another little milestone on her calendar of days last Friday. Many were the good wishes showered on her during the day—and a "tea table set for two" completed the arrangements for "many happy returns".

Mayor Harry Gordon is whizzing around the curves in the prettiest automobile ever seen in this part of the country. A special order with special color combinations, for a special MAYOR-Boy! It is a peach —and does he look like Mussillini himself? Sure, only better! This popular Mayor will see one of his dreams come true in May when a fleet of airships will land at the Airport in Columbiana. No town or city in Alabama can boast of a more progressive Mayor, nor one more unselfish in his untiring efforts to obtain the "best" for the people whom he has represented for the past three terms. Like Mayor Gunter of Montgomery, Harry Gordon will be Mayor for life, it he wants it.

Miss Agnes Wingard is absent from her duties in the County Superintendent's office for a few days on account of a tonsil operation. Her many friends in educational circles will be delighted to know that she will be able to resume her secretarial position the latter part of the week.

A congenial motor party who enjoyed a trip to Memphis, Tennessee this week-end included, J. M. Lawson, Misses Louise Thompson, E. Bell, and Mary Wooley. Miss Wooley visited her sister, Ruth Wooley, who is in training for a nurse in Memphis. She is expected home Sunday to spend a vacation with her parents, the Rev. and Mrs. D. Z. Wooley.

You may now see the latest pictures at the Wadesonian Theatre in Calera for 10 and 15 cents. Shirley Temple in "Bright Eyes" and Will Rogers in "County Chairman" are the two outstanding productions offered patrons of this popular play house this week. Watch the Democrat each week for the entire program.

If there is anything prettier than red, red rosebuds, or anything which brightens a "blue Monday" any quicker than the thoughtfulness of the one who gave them to me—well, I haven'e seen them yet. Thanks "Lady Head".

One of the happiest things about the Magic City is running into old friends who haven't "forgotten to remember" former pilgrimages on the Highway of Melody. Last week, none other than Henry Vance, came by for an interesting chat about "this and that"—and we checked many changes since we were scheduled regularly over the same Station for three years—but life is funny that way. "Henry", same old brilliantly sparkling journalist, comedian, columnist, sportsman, promises a personal appearance in Columbiana real soon—and in no place will he be more cordially received. Citizens here listen nightly for his Sports Review over WBRC, and everybody loves to 'peek' into his Coal Bin. His account of his trip to the Rose Bowl is even more interesting than his write-ups of the adventure. Its a case of Personality Plus.

Davis Drug Company is featuring lovely Easter greeting cards, candy-novelties and the "BEST" egg dyes for the kiddies. Go by and select your Easter gift from his stock now on display.

The Yellow Front Store is replete with Easter bargains. This Easter sale of choice materials, ready-to-wear, and fancy and staple groceries is store wide. The sale closes on next Saturday night. It will pay you to visit this popular store where SERVICE seems to be a pleasure. From Manager Glass on thru the personnel of his excellent organization, you will find accomodating co-workers who are desirous of meeting your needs with the best merchandise available. Select your modish frock from the new shipment of dresses just received in time for the colorful Easter Parade.

Columbiana Drug Company is specializing on "Saying it with SWEETS"—and the Easter season finds an attractive array of Nunnally's Candies on sale. With an appropriate greeting card which Happy Whittaker will likely insist on choosing for you. Well, Personal Mention vouches for the reception such a gift would get—Should you desire a bottle of Coty's—in the fresh Spring fragrance which is so alluring—Cole's is prepared to furnish it. In other words, you will not lose any time in selecting an appropriate gift, if you

Adolph S. Ochs
Russia's New Plane
Superstition and Suicide
Cocktail Parties

The death of Adolph S. Ochs, editor and owner of the New York Times, is a great loss to American journalism and good citizenship. Mr. Ochs was a good American, whose life and work set an admirable example to his profession.

Arthur Brisbane

All his life a hard-worker, conscientious, indifferent to personal profit, Mr. Ochs often put to this writer and other friends the question, ever in his mind, "How can I make of the Times a permanent and useful institution?"

Russia, according to Lloyd George, is the world's real flying nation, possesses, probably, the world's greatest fighting air fleet. It is certainly the country that takes flying most seriously, with 8,000,000 Russians trained in aeronautics, young Russian girls learning to pilot planes and dirigibles and make 20,000-foot parachute jumps, as our young girls learn new dance steps.

This makes important Russia's announcement that she is manufacturing airplanes on a mass production basis, using for air power "an ordinary light automobile engine." The planes, very cheap, using ordinary gasoline, will be supplied to collective farms. Russia may be the first nation to do with flying machines what this country did with automobiles. American genius put this nation on wheels. If Russian engineering skill puts Russia on wings, it will make some other countries thoughtful.

A young man is found strangely murdered, or committing suicide in an unusual way, hanging from a low tree. His legs were fastened behind his back with chains, chains were around his hands and neck, and a medal that he had won in an athletic contest was fastened with a safety pin to one of his nostrils. The man, thirty-one, who had been employed in moving pictures as a substitute for actors under dangerous conditions, is believed by police to have killed himself in a strange way, through vanity, to attract attention, climbing to the limb of a tree, adjusting the chain, dropping and strangling.

Police quote a superstition of certain Malays who believe that evil spirits carry off their souls if they kill themselves. When they commit suicide they exhaust their ingenuity in efforts to die in such a fashion as to make suicide seem impossible, that the spirits after inspection may decide that the dead man was murdered and leave his soul in peace.

During prohibition, the habit of drunkenness was acquired by many, particularly young women. They yield more easily than men to the effects of alcohol and drugs, and once "caught" they are caught for life, usually.

American fathers and mothers that give cocktail parties for their sons and daughters, or permit them in their houses, should be told plainly that they are using their money to make drunkards of the daughters and sons, and are not fit to have, or bring up, children.

In addition to moving 60,000 more soldiers to the German lines, France is hurriedly connecting her steel and concrete line of fortresses, with barbed wire entanglements and trenches. Thirty thousand soldiers are digging in as you read.

The French apparently expect the same old thing over again, but they will not see it. Nations in the next war will not squat in trenches, but will fly against the enemy nation's chief cities and kill an impressive number of citizens with poison explosives and gas.

Nothing will be more lonesome than a front line trench in the next war.

Harlem, in upper New York city, with some 200,000 colored population, is stamping ground for many that preach ultra-radical doctrines, including the theory that whoever has money must have stolen it from those that have no money.

This added to race antagonism, and the influence of certain "exhorters," brings results reminding citizens of what may happen when dangerous doctrines are preached recklessly.

The latest news indicates that Chancellor Hitler is not as anxious for "war in a hurry" as was alleged.

Sir John Simon, for England, received from Hitler a written proposal:

First, a ten-year nonaggression treaty with Germany's neighbors, nobody to attack anybody else.

Second, a pledge to withhold economic and financial assistance from any nation starting a war.

Hitler wrote that, and, if he means it, Lloyd George is correct in his statement: "Not this time."

Lesson for April 21

THE FUTURE LIFE (EASTER LESSON)

LESSON TEXT—Luke 24:1-12; John 14:1-6.

GOLDEN TEXT—I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.—John 11:25.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Living Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Living Again.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Life Here and Hereafter.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Life in the Light of Eternity.

I. God, the God of the Living (Mark 12:26, 27).

"If a man die, shall he live again?" is an age-long question. It is affirmatively answered by both the universal human conviction and the holy Scriptures. Death does not end all. It is not a leap into the dark. It is rather the open door through which human personality enters into the light of glorious freedom. Life itself is but a training school, a preparation for the larger and higher life after death. Those who in their lifetime are in vital relation to Jesus Christ, the eternal Life, shall never die.

II. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ (Luke 24:1-12).

The supreme test of Christianity is the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. It matters little what Jesus said and did while alive, if his body remained in the grave. If he did not come forth in triumph from the tomb, then all his claims are false. On the other hand, if he did arise, all his claims are true.

1. The empty sepulchre (vv. 1-3).

a. The coming of the women (v.1). As an expression of affectionate regard for the Master, they came with spices for his body.

b. What they found (vv. 2, 3). When they came to the sepulchre they found the stone had been removed, but they found not the body of Jesus. For them to have found his body in the sepulchre would have been the world's greatest tragedy. The empty tomb spoke eloquently of the deity and power of the Son of God (Rom. 1:4).

2. The message of the men in shining garments (vv. 4-8).

a. "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" (v. 5). The angels' question has continued to reverberate through the centuries.

b. "He is not here, but is risen" (v. 6). Jesus, before he was crucified, had told them that the Lord must be betrayed and crucified and that on the third day he would rise.

3. The women witnessing to the eleven (vv. 9-11). Their thrilling testimony concerning the empty tomb and the words of the angels appeared to the apostles as idle tales.

4. Peter investigating (v. 12). While the testimony of the women seemed as idle tales, Peter was not of the temperament to lightly dismiss the matter. Therefore, he ran to the sepulchre. Upon close investigation he found the linen clothes lying in such a way as to prove the reality of the resurrection.

III. Jesus Preparing a Place in Heaven for His Own (John 14:1-3).

The hopes of the disciples were utterly shattered when Jesus told them about the cross. He consoled them by pointing to the reunion in the Father's house. This he did by

1. Asking them to trust in him even as God (v. 1). Faith in the God-man, Christ Jesus, will steady the heart no matter how intense the grief.

2. By informing them that he was going to the Father's house to prepare a home for them (v. 2). He declared that in that house there were many abiding places. Heaven is an eternal dwelling place for God's children.

3. By assuring them that he would come again and escort them to heaven (v. 3). He will come and call forth from the grave those who have died and transform living believers and take them all together to be with him forever in the heavenly home (I Thess. 4:16, 17).

IV. Jesus Christ Is the Way to the Heavenly Father (John 14:4-6).

In answer to Thomas' interposed doubt Jesus asserted:

1. That he is the way (v. 6). Jesus Christ is more than a mere guide to God or a teacher. He is the way itself, the very door of the sheepfold, the gateway to the tree of life.

2. The truth (v. 6). He is not merely the teacher, but the truth incarnate. In his incarnation the spiritual and material worlds were united. Therefore, every line of truth, whether spiritual or material, converges in him.

3. The life (v. 6). Christ is not merely the giver of life, but the very essence of life. Only those who receive Christ have life in the true sense.

You May Be Wrong

"My brethren," said Oliver Cromwell to some of his fanatical, positive followers, "in the name of Christ I beseech you to think it possible you may be mistaken." That is a good word to carry in our minds.

Hindering God

Not man's manifold labors but his manifold cares, hinder the presence of God. Whatsoever thou doest, hush thyself to thine own feverish vanities, and busy thoughts, and cares; in silence seek thy Father's face.

PATTERN 2174

A pleated sleeve and contra-posed pockets give the front of this frock a vital, new appearance—but presto, change! Look at the back! Back buttons are very smart, placed at the side. For indulging in, or watching, the game, or to "live in" at play places, this dress is admirable. The new creamy beige, a pastel, or a gaily checked or candy-striped material of the washable variety would make an excellent choice. And don't be afraid of outspoken fabric patterns this season!

Pattern 2174 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 3¼ yards 36-inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York City.

WRONG TITLE

A young man driving a sports car was forced to stop very suddenly in a suburb, with the result that the car got out of control for a moment and ended within an inch of a lamppost on the other side of the road.

A policeman strolled up.

"Well," he said to the driver, "you got a nice skid there, sir."

"Pardon me," said the young man, haughtily, "but this lady is my wife."

MANY USES FOR CROCHET SCARF

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

Here is a very practical scarf that is easy to make and costs so little. It's made with the large filet stitch, is very lacy and can be used as a decorative cover on many articles in the home. When using a number 5 steel crochet hook and number 15 cotton, the scarf will measure about 12 by 34 inches when finished. Buffet set and chair set to match this scarf were shown a few weeks ago.

This package, No. 707, contains sufficient cream color Mountain Craft crochet cotton to complete the scarf, also instructions, black and white diagram for easy counting of meshes, and a crochet hook. Write our crochet department inclosing 40 cents for the complete package, No. 707, or send 10 cents if you want the instruction sheet with diagram only.

Address Home Craft Co.—Dept. B —Nineteenth and St. Louis Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Cardui Built Up Her Strength

She had lost strength and fallen off in weight until her clothes would not fit, writes Mrs. A. S. Curtis, of Winston, Va. "I knew I must get something to build me up if I kept going," she says. "My aunt suggested that I try Cardui. I am glad that I did, for it built up my strength. I have taken it at intervals since then, whenever I felt the least run-down."

Cardui revives the appetite and improves nutrition in cases where such a medicine is needed. Thousands of women testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician.

WITH EASTER at hand all sorts of alluring gift suggestions burst forth in early springtime splendor. This is the season of the year for surprise presents chosen from the charming array of gift ideas the beauty field offers, says a fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune.

Perfume is always a delightfully appropriate present, particularly at this time of the year. Besides, the atmosphere of early spring spells enchantment—a certain new romance in living, especially identified with perfumes and spring fragrances.

Some alert perfumers, to meet the various holiday requirements, are presenting bright and decorative Easter eggs. Gayly colored papier mache "eggs" of red, green, blue, white and yellow contain one or more attractively decorated bottles.

Other firms whose perfumes suggest "Evening and Springtime in Paris" (certainly quite in keeping with this April season), also offer Easter egg packages. These French perfumes are presented in egg-shaped containers of metal with the familiar little sapphire blue and silver bottle resting snugly in one half of the "egg." Here you have a choice of blue, red, green, orchid, pink and pale blue. Certainly a variety of Easter colors!

Powder compacts make a welcome gift. One cosmetic house presents a particularly gay and springlike compact in chromium finish with a pearl gray enamel top, embellished with a basket of bright colored flowers. Just the right note for spring!

A certain New York shop offers a gala display of vanity cases, jeweled compacts and brilliantly decorative lipsticks to match new spring ensembles. The vanities come in black enamel for evening wear and silver for daytime and sport. They are filled with surprises! Powder, rouge, two lipsticks (in daytime and evening shades), a little comb. Quite a compact Easter package, to say the least.

But one novelty compact, popular in the beauty field, is one which is skillfully designed to hold a key. Here beauty combines with the practical, and eliminated are those moments of fumbling in one's pocketbook for the key. The compact will hold any cylinder key. You simply slide the little knob at the top of the case to push out the key. The compact comes in two styles, a double and single compast in assorted enameled colors. You are able to use your own favorite powder, for the cases are made for loose powder. Such a novel vanity would be a delightful gift.

THERE'S a lot more to Easter than displaying finery.

Take Scotland, for instance. Lads and lassies there cavort in an Easter spirit alleged to be typical of their country—at expense to none. They get hard-boiled, dyed eggs (once fresh, it is hoped) and playfully roll or throw them at each other. And when they are through with their rolling and throwing, they eat the by-that-time-battered remains.

But the old-timers in Lancashire, Cheshire, Staffordshire and Warwickshire were different. They played a lifting and heaving game. On Easter Monday the men lifted or heaved the women. How far or for what history fails to record. On Easter Tuesday the women, having the last word, lifted or heaved the men. And all this was a very serious matter.

To explain the lifting and heaving, the maneuver was performed by two lusty men or women joining their hands across each other's wrists. Then, making the person to be heaved sit down on their arms, they lifted or heaved him aloft two or three times and often carried him several yards in the street, the distance, of course, depending on the avoirdupois of the victim, London Tit-Bits records.

Even clergymen were unable to escape the heaving or lifting. It so happened a very austere minister was passing through a town in Lancashire on an Easter Tuesday. It was all he could do to uphold his professional dignity when three or four husky women ran into his room, exclaiming they had come "to lift him."

"To lift me," repeated the amazed divine. "What can you mean? Is there any such custom here?"

"To be sure," they chorused. "All us women was lifted yesterday and us lifts the men today in turn."

The reverend traveler, it is recorded, saved his position by bribing them with a half crown and scurrying off on his mission.

In Durham on Easter Monday history says the men claimed the privilege of taking off the women's shoes, and the next day the women came right back in a turn-about's-fair-play manner.

History again fails us, for it does not say what "kick" they got from taking off each other's shoes.

At Hungerford in Berkshire during Easter a young man is perfectly entitled to claim a kiss from every pretty girl he meets between noon and 6:00 p. m.

One of the curious customs of the day was that which centered in the distribution of what was known as the Pax or Peace cake. Until very recent times persons who had quarreled were invited to share such a cake, say "peace and good will" and "make up."

Priests in England a few generations ago used to make small crosses of palms which they gave to their congregations. At the shrine of Our Lady, Nantswell, Cornwall, the people developed a ceremony of dropping these symbols into the holy well to test their luck—if the crosses floated, good fortune might be expected; if they sank, death and disaster would be forthcoming.

British schoolboys, it is recorded, long made it a practice to carry blossoming willow branches through towns and villages on Palm Sunday, and even since the World war it has been a custom for London residents to visit the country and bring back flowering boughs on the day of palms.

World Population Put at Around 2,000,000,000

How many people inhabit the earth?

In our own country as well as the leading ones periodical censuses are taken which give the exact figures every so often and by comparing these with previous ones it is easy for the mathematical sharps to figure out really reliable estimates of the population in between times.

But among the uncivilized tribes in various parts of the world no count is possible, and for the black races of Africa and some of the yellow ones of China and Central Asia relatively little information is available. Nevertheless, after gathering together all information possible the statistical institute of the League of Nations in 1930 estimated the world population at approximately 2,000,000,000 human beings, and that is the generally accepted figure for the world at large.

It is recognized that the world population is steadily increasing but in the absence of actual figures few are brave enough to hazard a guess as to the rate. Prof. E. M. East of Harvard university, however, has ventured to estimate the annual increase at a little more than 18,000,000 or about 50,000 a day.

Concerning this subject Prof. A. N. Carr-Saunders of Liverpool university, England, a recognized world authority on the subject, issued an estimate last year for use by the Encyclopedia Britannica in which he declared the world now inhabited by more than 2,025,000,000 persons and furthermore, they are steadily increasing at the rate of 20,000,000 per year.

He credits Asia, the largest continent, with the greatest number of people — some 1,071,000,000 (not counting Russia)—or a little more than half the world population. Europe, which ranks fifth in the size of continents, is given second place as to population with a total of 382,000,000 (excluding Russia). Russia alone is granted about 164,000,000 while all of Africa, white and black, has but 143,000,000 and North America around 135,000,000, of which about 127,000,000 are United Statesians. He credits South America with 85,000,000; Central America 35,000,000 and Australia and Oceania with a combined 10,000,000 to make up his estimated total.

One finding is particularly surprising to most in view of the fact that Germany, Italy and a few other countries offer substantial endowments for newly married couples and a bonus for each child born. This is that the population in Russia seems to be increasing faster than anywhere else on earth—the increase being estimated at about 4,000,000 a year, or 2 per cent.

One per cent annual increase is considered the average, and even the Japs, regarded heretofore as the most rapidly increasing race, increase but little faster than the normal rate.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Future Airships

Airplanes of the future will resemble winged rockets, according to M. Louis Breguet, the French airplane constructor. The fast commercial planes, he says, will have a heavy wing, loading 20 to 30 pounds per square foot, means for increasing the lift considerably, air and ground brakes, and powerful and light engines moderately supercharged. There will be a frequent use of altitudes of flights not exceeding 13,000 feet. The machine also will have comfortable cabins heated, and when necessary, supplied with oxygen.

PERSONAL MENTION

visit Loyd Cole's popular meeting place.

Mr. "Max", connisseur of "what you want when you want it", is just back from Birmingham with a new shipment of hats, shoes, dresses and the latest novelties and accessories to make your costume complete for Easter. Go by the Columbiana Leader and look over their newly painted and remodeled store and thru the Men's, Boys and Women's departments you will find an unusually good selection.

Ask "ANN GOODWIN" to show you the ladies dresses with hats to match—Her excellent judgment will be valuable in aiding you to make your selection.

If you are going in for useful as well as ornamental gifts for Easter—why not consult John Curlee about his new General Electrics, Frigidaires and Electric Ice Boxes. A gift like this would be "for life"—and something worth "remembering". He is also prepared to "say it with music" and will be delighted to demonstrate the Fairbanks-Morse Radio for you in your home—FREE.

For HOSIERY—We personally recommend the STRUTWEAR, sold at T. R. Walton's store. A box of these lovely all silk hose would make any costume the richer. Mr. Walton tells us he is contemplating putting in the excellent line of all silk underwear which the Strutwear Company sponsors—and we are eagerly awaiting this addition to his stock of seasonable merchandise.

For GROCERIES—See CARL and MASON ERWARDS at the Cash Store! You cannot find better groceries nor better prices than these two excellent salesmen offer their many pleased patrons. They are two home boys who have made good in a big way—and Columbiana is distinctly proud of them. Their model store and constantly increasing trade, warrant continued patronage from Columbiana residents.

Milton Allen and E. E. Craig, of Montevallo, prominent merchants of Shelby County and Agents for T. V. A. products, visited the Democrat offices on Monday. They report business FINE—and such optimism is a pleasant note on which to begin a days grind.

On April 26th, a unique play will be presented in the Alabama College Auditorium, "The Devil's Host". We have heard many comments on this outstanding production and with "Uncle Charlie", Dr. C. T. Acker, in the title role, we are prepared to believe it will be a "knock out"—but we had never thought of him in this role. Rather has he been a "ministering angel" on many occasions. However, he is a drawing card no matter what role he plays, and a large audience will be present to greet the local players.

Judge Wales W. Wallace and Harold Harlin spent Monday in Ashland attending Chancery Court.

Grady's Five and Ten will be a mecca for the kiddies on Easter. You will find just the many little things their hearts desire in this store. Take them by and let them "spend their jitneys". It will be to your advantage and to their happiness.

Want some new flower pots for transferring your ferns? See the Columbiana Hardware Company.

Henry Baker, of Tuscaloosa, and nephew of Mrs. Dixie Shealy, was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana on Wednesday. He and Mrs. Baker are touring the South-eastern States, this being the territory which has been assigned Mr. Baker after he received the appointment from Washington as Investigator, working with the Textile Labor Relations Board. Mrs. Shealy joined them on Wednesday and left for a tour which will extend thru Alabama and Georgia.

Dr. H. T. Donovan, County Health Officer, is attending a medical meeting in Mobile this week.

Dr. and Mrs. Ralph S. Hunt, Jr., and Miss Marguerite Melton, of Tallassee, Alabama, are visitors of Mr. and Mrs. Mims Roberts this week.

I know of no happier note on which to close this ramble than to acknowledge gratefully a renewal of interest and continued allegiance to the cause we are now sponsoring known as the Shelby County Democrat by one of our most treasured friends, J. B. Turner. Another year it will give us pleasure to travel into his home each week and attempt to merit his valuable consideration. This Easter tide will be a happier occasion for us on account of many old friends who have this week dropped by and thoughtfully left words of encouragement——And if you think "words of encouragement" do not mean about everything in this business——I beg you to try editing a paper one week. The "weight of a word" cannot be measured—neither can Friendship.

VINCENT NEWS

Misses Leona Sanders and Katherine Florey, of Alabama College, spent the week-end at home.

Jimmie Sharbutt had as his week-end guests, Ewing Harbin and Pete Allen, of Howard College.

Mr. and Mrs. Loy Vaughan, of Dora, were visitors here Sunday.

Among those participating in play day at Montevallo College, were: Mary Lowe, Ada Sue Gorman and Mildred Clinkscales. They were accompanied by Miss Naomi Baker.

Misses Pauline Gibbons, Frances Merrill, and Geneva Brewer visited friends in Gadsden during the week-end.

Misses Billye Arthur, Alyce Harris, Martha Jean Minor and Katherine Upshaw visited in Birmingham during the week-end.

Miss Elizabeth Merrill, of Alabama College, visited her sister, Frances Merrill, last week.

After spending several months in Vincent, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson have returned to their home in Columbus, Georgia. Mr. Patterson was a superintendent on the Waterwork's project.

FARMERS ENDORSE COTTON PROGRAM

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Over 200 Alabama farmers met here last week and made an appeal to President Roosevelt and to Alabama senators and congressmen to continue the processing tax so that the Agricultural Adjustment program may be retained for the benefit of farmers.

The following letter was sent to President Roosevelt, state senators, and congressmen:

"More than 200 leading farmers, representing each of the 67 Alabama counties, assembled here today and enthusiastically and unanimously endorsed the great friend and leader of American agriculture, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States.

"They renewed their endorsement of the agricultural adjustment act in all its provisions but particularly emphasized their appeal to you for retention of the processing tax as their hope for effective provision of benefits to agriculture corresponding to tariff benefits to industry. They expressed emphatic realization of the automatic continuation of benefits from processing tax while direct payments from relief fund would completely dissipate the whole structure with the exhaustion of present appropriation.

GAY FILES 14 SUITS FOR $100,000 EACH FOR 'REP' DAMAGE

Fourteen suits for $100,000 each have been filed in Shelby County by E. P. Gay, former Judge of the 18th Judicial Circuit, against citizens of Clay County. These suits grew out of some purported statements and circulars which Judge Gay charges damaged his reputation.

The defendants include A. L. Crumpton and C. W. McKay, prominent attorneys of Ashland; H. L. Wynn, President of the First National Bank of Ashland; Allie P. Mann, of Ashland; Eric C. Allen, prominent business man of Ashland; John W. Stewart, former sheriff of Clay County; O. L. Cotney, F. S. Hood, Ferman Owens, Hilton Hooten, Rhett Owens and Ashland Chevrolet Company, all of Ashland.

It is reported that similar suits have been filed throughout the Circuit. W. A. Denson, of Birmingham, represents E. P. Gay.

WAYS SUGGESTED FOR KEEPING MILK PURE ON HOT DAYS

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama milk consumers can keep their milk supply "sweet and wholesome" during the spring and summer months by following a five-point program, says F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist, who advises:

1. Take milk into the house as soon as it is delivered and place it in the refrigerator at once. Bacteria increase rapidly in milk which stands in the sun or warms up, and such milk will sour quickly.

2. Keep milk in the original bottle in the refrigerator until the moment of serving. Milk which has been poured from the bottle should not be returned to the bottle.

3. Keep your refrigerators clean and swete because milk quickly absorbs unpleasant odors and becomes less palatable.

4. Wash milk bottles as soon as emptied by rinsing first with lukewarm water and then with hot water. Return these bottles promptly as they are the property of your milk dealer and represent cash.

5. Remember that clean milk, properly cared for, is one of the best foods obtainable. It is nourishing, digestible, economical, and healthful.

SHELBY HIGH WINS OVER SILURIA, 11-3

Shelby County High School turned in their second win of the year by defeating Siluria on their diamond. The battle was closely contested until the seventh ending when Shelby High got 9 of their 11 runs. D. Wallace was in very good form striking out 9 men. Q. Smith led the attack by getting a triple and two singies.

R. E. BOWDON WILL SUPERVISE SURVEY OF COUNTY LAND

The Legislative Committee on Ad Valorem Taxes and Homestead Exemption is making a survey of State lands, in cooperation with the State Tax Commission of Alabama. R. E. Bowdon, Sr., former competent License Inspector of Shelby County, has been appointed to supervise this work in the county.

The appointment of Mr. Bowdon to this responsible position is further acknowledgement of his ability, and his experience in land values and tax adjustments in his native county. His many friends throughout Shelby County are congratulating him upon receiving this recognition from the state department.

The information these workers will gather in their visits over the County will be turned over to the State Land Department who will follow this survey work up after the meeting of the next session of the Legislature. The county will derive much benefit from this work, as a large number of redemptions will likely result from the State's policy of levying rents on this property.

SHELBY COUNTY HI GETS GOOD RATING IN STATE REPORT

No failures were made by the Shelby County High School graduates who entered college this year, according to the report sent out from the State Department of Education recently.

Sixty-four county high schools in the state sent graduates to higher institutions last fall and from this group only six were given a higher rating than Shelby County High. These six received higher ratings because their perfect score was based on a larger number of pupils.

Of the three-hundred-four high schools in Alabama, of all classification, Shelby County High was placed among the first thirty. Only eight of the schools making perfect scores in the above group had more pupils to enter college: one hal eleven; two had nine; five had six; and Shelby County High had five to pass in all subjects.

Each year the freshmen in the higher institutions are given a standard English test and reports are mailed out to the high schools recommending the students. Only five county high schools made better scores than the pupils from Shelby County High. Students from the high school at Columbiana made an average score of 174.3. The average for all high schools in the state was 135.2, and the tentative National normal is 180.

The Seniors throughout the state, who will graduate this year were given a general ability test last fall to determine the superior group for recommendation to college. Eight of the Shelby County High Seniors were placed in this superior group. These eight represented 27 percent of the class while only 19 percent of all Seniors taking the test in the state were placed in this superior group.

J. M. Lawson, formerly of Athens, Alabama, is Principal, and his assistants are: Bob Peacock, Athletic Director; Miss Elizabeth Bell, Baxter Collins, Joe Stone, Mildred Meroney, Miss Nix and Miss Sanders.

HARRISON BONUS BILL WOULD MEAN $175 FOR AVERAGE

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Senate finance experts figure the Harrison compromise bonus bill would mean an immediate $175 in the pocket of the average veteran who holds a certificate which otherwise would mature in 1945 at $1,000.

The Harrison bill, administration experts say, would give that certificate a value today of $770, a boost of $270 over their present-law worth.

But they explain that 85 per cent of the veterans already have borrowed the full $500 and owe interest on the loan. This would mean the balance due under the Harrison bill would pay the veteran $175, of which $150 would be given him in negotiable 3 per cent bonds and the rest in cash.

A veteran who had not borrowed on his certificate could obtain the entire $770 immediately under the Harrison bill, or he could continue to hold it, with its insurance protection, and draw 4 per cent interest compounded annually. By about 1942 it would be worth the full $1,000 and by 1945, the maturity date under the present law, it would be worth $1,115.

KIDDIES' KOLUMN

Columbiana, Ala.,
April 18, 1935.

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

Tomorrow afternoon our school is going to have an Easter egg hunt. Every one will bring three or more pretty eggs. While the eggs are being hidden, one of the teachers will read us lovely Easter stories. Then we will find the eggs, put them all in a pile, march around them and pick up one egg each time.

I am a little "forget-me-not" in our Operetta which will be given on May 17th.

Your little friend,
Fay Pitts.

Columbiana, Ala.,
April 18, 1935.

Dear Mildred Wallace:-

I am a boy twelve years old. I am in the 4th grade. My best subject is history and spelling. My best playmates are Jack, A. D. and Frank. My teacher's name is Mrs. Taylor.

Much love, Edward Glass.

Columbiana, Ala.,
April 18, 1935.

Dear Mildred Wallace:-

I will be glad when Sunday comes, I like to hunt Easter eggs. Do you?

The Operetta will not be given at the end of school this year, but will be given on May 17th—Come.

Love, Warren.

Columbiana, Ala.,
April 18, 1935.

Dear Mildred White Wallace:-

We are going to have an Easter egg hunt on Friday. We are all so happy about it. The boys and girls are to bring three eggs each. Every one is going to be their.

Your friend,
Mildred Louise Glenn.

CORN-HOG PRODUCERS SIGN MORE CONTRACTS

AUBURN, Ala.—More Alabama farmers signed corn-hog contracts this year than last, reports F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist, who reports that 4,000 are cooperating this year compared with 2 833 last season.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Germany Enraged by Her Condemnation by League Council—Work Relief Program Going Forward—Compromise Bonus Measure.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

GERMANY was thoroughly enraged by the action of the League of Nations council in adopting the tri-power resolution condemning the reich for violating the treaty of Versailles by rearming, and it was expected Reichsfuerher Hitler would make a defiant retort. As a first step he sent from his Bavarian retreat instructions to Secretary of State Von Buelow to protest "England's defection at Stresa and Geneva." This Von Buelow did, delivering the message to Ambassador Sir Eric Phipps for transmission to London. The German press was loud in denunciation of the league action and Litvinov, the Soviet delegate, came in for most of the abuse because he delivered the chief speech in support of the resolution at the council session. Just recently Germany granted to Russia credits amounting to $80,000,000. Poland also was assailed for "abandoning" Germany, but in Warsaw it was said by officials that Poland was still the friend of the reich. One newspaper there said quite truly that the complaint against Germany was "a formal matter because the discussion could not result in any actual solution of the problem, but only bring something like emotional relief."

Adolf Hitler

Strange as it may seem, the Jews in Germany are warmly supporting Hitler in this controversy. The following message was sent to him:

"The League of National German Jews stands unshaken in its loyalty to the Fatherland, and hopes the government's defense policy will not be changed on account of the Geneva proceedings."

German resentment against Great Britain is especially warm because she feels she was deceived in the recent negotiations. Consequently she thinks Britain's prestige as a mediator in continental affairs is destroyed.

During the council's discussion Tewfik Arras, the Turkish member, arose and stated flatly that if any changes in the existing treaties were made or tolerated, his country would claim the right to fortify the Dardanelles in violation of the treaty of Lausanne. He even hinted that the Turks might follow Hitler's example and not wait for permission. Sir John Simon's immediate and sharp reply was:

"I feel sure my honorable colleague will not expect me to say any more at this stage than that I must naturally make all reservations regarding it."

Laval of France and Baron Aloisi of Italy supported Simon in his rebuke of the Turkish revisionism.

Laval carried back to Paris a draft of the mutual assistance pact with Russia for submission to the French cabinet. Litvinov was still insistent that the two countries should enter into a real military alliance, and it may be that he will carry his point. In the opinion of many observers such a treaty would be declared invalid by the League of Nations.

WHEN the administration's great work relief program gets under way one of the most important parts of it, the purchase of material supplies, will have to be started at once, and it is expected that this will absorb about $1,700,000,000 of the total sum. According to authoritative sources in Washington, this part of the program will be supervised by Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples, now procurement officer in the treasury. Peoples entered the navy supply corps in 1900 as assistant paymaster and later developed the navy's present purchasing system. When Franklin D. Roosevelt was assistant secretary of the navy he and Peoples became close friends.

Admiral Peoples

The admiral presumably will have full charge of drafting the regulations for material purchases but it is understood the actual buying of supplies for work relief projects will in most instances be handled by the states and other co-operating agencies. However, certain commodities, like cement, that will be needed in immense quantities, probably will be purchased centrally.

JUST as soon as the President says the word, the federal bureau of public roads and the various state highway departments are ready to jump into the work of grade crossing elimination, the building of arterial highways and similar projects. The work relief act earmarks $800,000,000 for such undertakings, and the sum may be increased by the President to a billion. The roads bureau already has $100,000,000 of grade crossing eliminations and other projects contracted for under authority granted by congress last year, officials revealed, and these contracts are to be met with work-relief money.

Arthur W. Brandt, president of the American Association of State Highway Officials, advised a congressional committee recently that states were prepared to wipe out 4,058 dangerous crossings if as much as $461,881,500 was made available.

SEVEN agencies of the government are organizing to combat the damage done by the constantly recurring dust storms. They are the AAA, farm credit administration, emergency relief administration, soil erosion service, bureau of plant industry and bureau of agricultural engineering.

The efforts, officials said, will include shipping feed, food and water into the stricken areas of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico, Kansas and Colorado, starting work relief projects on roads, private lands and the public domain, planting of fast-growing and hardy crops as ground cover in areas where moisture conditions permit, and "listing" operations. This latter work is an attempt to prevent soil blowing away, by making alternate ridges and furrows.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT called Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi to the White House for a conference concerning the veterans' bonus bill, which already has passed the house. Harrison is chairman of the senate finance committee and the administration looked to him to devise a way to spike the measure which is so objectionable to the President in its present "greenback" form. Other majority leaders in congress also were busy with the problem, and the result was the introduction in congress of a compromise bill which it was believed the President would accept if it were passed.

Pat Harrison

This measure would make bonus certificates mature in 1938, instead of 1945. They could be converted immediately into 3 per cent bonds. Veterans who wanted cash right away could sell the bonds, losing only the interest they otherwise could obtain until 1938. Harrison said this would cost $500,000,000 more than the present bonus law, but far less than the Patman bill, passed by the house, to pay the bonus with $2,500,000,000 in new money.

Milo Warner, vice commander of the American Legion, said this bill was "absolutely not acceptable" to that organization. Heads of veterans' organizations and various others were invited to testify at committee hearings on the bill.

SENATOR HUEY LONG called together his complaisant legislature in Baton Rouge and ordered it to pass some new laws that would give him complete control of city finances, elections and expenditures of federal relief funds. Secretary Ickes went right up in the air and announced that if the laws were enacted Louisiana would get none of the public works money; whereupon the Kingfish told him he could go to the nether regions, since the PWA money had already been deposited to the account of the New Orleans sewer and water board.

"The state court very properly recognizes our men as that board now, so how is Ickes going to get his money back?" Long asked. "When he starts that, we'll show him what a smart man he ain't. If Ickes and the balance of the brain trust cabinet hold their breaths until we send for them, there'll be several corpses and the country will be better off."

OVER in Turkey the women, until recently, were forced to lead lives of seclusion in the harem and to go veiled when in public. But all that is changed. The other day the twelfth congress of the International Alliance of Women for Suffrage and Equal Citizenship opened in Istanbul with about thirty nations represented and Mrs. Corbett Ashby of England in the chair, and the women of Turkey, unveiled and in modish European garb, were the proud hostesses of the hundreds of delegates. Among the questions discussed were: The situation and rights of women; the position of women in the liberal professions; the political and civil rights of women; the means women can use to prevent war.

Under Kemal's rule the women of the republic of Turkey have been granted parliamentary and city votes and have entered enthusiastically into all branches of life, civic, professional, industrial and sporting.

WITHOUT any effort to break speed records, Capt. Edward A. Musick and five companions landed the big Pan-American Airway clipper ship Pioneer in Hawaii 18 hours and 31 minutes after they took off from Alameda, Calif. This was the first exploratory flight for a service that will soon be extended clear across the Pacific to Canton, the proposed intermediate stops being Hawaii, Midway islands, Wake islands, Guam and the Philippines. The operating bases are now in process of construction.

KING BORIS of Bulgaria has foiled another attempt to force him from his precarious throne. Upon discovery of an alleged Fascist plot, he ordered that three prominent political leaders be arrested and held in jail. Their friends sought to free them by storming the jail but were repulsed. Those seized are Alexander Zanhoff, leader of the Democratic entente; Kozma Georgieff, head of the Macedonian party, and M. Natcheff, former police president of Sofia.

JOHN R. McCARL, the able, efficient and independent comptroller general of the United States, has annoyed the New Dealers on several occasions. Now he threatens to block the plans of the AAA for lifting the restrictions on spring wheat planting and at the same time continuing to pay the farmers for crop reductions that would not be called for. Declaring they wished to avoid shortages due to the dust storms, the officials of the AAA said the farmers would be paid for the abandoned reductions in acreage if they would promise to curtail their plantings next year. Mr. McCarl asked for further information on this matter and indicated he could not approve of the plan, though AAA men declared he had not ruled definitely against it. Chester C. Davis, AAA administrator, might not be content to abide by such a ruling if it were made, and the administration might refuse to accept it.

J. R. McCarl

Mr. McCarl, a Republican, holds his office under a law which specifies that the comptroller general shall be appointed to a 15-year term and can be removed only by death or impeachment. Nevertheless Attorney General Cummings, it is understood, gave it as his opinion that, like any other Presidential appointee, he could be removed at the pleasure of the President. He based this opinion on a ruling of the Supreme court in the case of a postmaster who was ousted by President Coolidge, the court holding that the President was within his rights under Article 2 of the Constitution. So it may be the New Dealers will seek to have Mr. McCarl ousted before his term expires in 1936.

It is interesting to read that the Nebraska Progressive league, made up of liberal Republicans, is planning the organization of "McCarl for President" clubs in that state and afterward in all others. George W. Kline, its chairman, says he was asked to support McCarl for President in 1936 by friends of Senator George W. Norris. The comptroller general is a graduate of the University of Nebraska law school and for years was Mr. Norris' secretary.

ALLEGED teaching of Communism in some of our universities and the adoption of that cult by a large number of half-baked young men and women in those institutions has long been debated and denounced by patriotic citizens. Student strikes and small riots have been frequent, and there have been many demands for the suppression of these reds and pinks. The latest big institution of learning to be brought into the limelight in this matter is the University of Chicago, whose faculty contains several decidedly radical instructors and its student body many youthful followers of Marx and Lenin. Because of charges made by a prominent drug store magnate the Illinois senate has just adopted a resolution calling for a "thorough and complete investigation" by a senatorial committee of five to determine whether any foundation exists for charges that "subversive Communistic teachings" are going on in "wholly or partly tax-exempt colleges and universities of this state."

SIR OSWALD MOSLEY, chief of the British Fascists, has committed his organization to a policy of anti-semitism fully as severe as that of the Hitler Nazis. At a riotous meeting of his Black Shirts in Leicester, Mosley said: "For the first time I openly and publicly challenge Jewish interests in this country. Commanding commerce, commanding the press, commanding the cinema, dominating the city of London, they are killing industry with their sweatshops. These great interests are not intimidating and will not intimidate the Fascist movement of the modern age."

Sir Oswald Mosley

Leaders of more than 200 of Chicago's 300 Jewish organizations assembled to indorse the campaign of the American Jewish congress for consolidation of all organized Jewish action. The chief speaker was the famous Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, national president and founder of the congress. In the course of his address he said:

"I want the day to come when no Jew shall live in Germany—not one. I want the day to come—although I shall not live to see it—when the Jew will be a regretted memory in Germany, just as their presence was a blessing and an ennoblement in every sense."

ROBERT GORDON SWITZ of New Jersey and his wife, who had been in jail in France for about 16 months on charges of espionage, were finally tried and found guilty, but were set free by the court because they had turned states evidence and helped in the apprehension of their accomplices. Twenty-two others were convicted and given prison terms of varying length.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—With nature moving in to help extinguish the cotton surplus, as she had already on hogs, cattle and to a lesser extent wheat, probabilities for trouble in the future for cotton growers in this country are not diminished, but increased.

The point is that the dust storms in the big cotton producing areas of Texas and Oklahoma—more than half of the cotton raised in the United States is grown west of the Mississippi despite the prevailing opinion to the contrary—have already boosted the price of cotton. Pressure on AAA is expected to continue loans at around 12 cents, despite the desire to drop them gradually. All of which means that the price of cotton will be maintained at this high level next year.

So far, so good, but unfortunately it is impossible for the United States to keep such a situation secret. If this country could only do what Russia did a few years back with wheat, it could make a killing on cotton—perhaps—next year.

The Russians, it may be recalled, circulated stories that their wheat crop had failed, back in the days of Secretary of Agriculture Hyde and the farm board. The farm board began buying wheat, and the Russians began selling. Hyde thought they were selling short, and actually denounced them in public speeches for such a nefarious practice. But the Russians delivered the wheat. Whereupon the price collapsed, the Russians having been the only wheat farmers to get a real price for their product, and the money for that coming out of the United States treasury.

But the whole world knows about crops in the United States. Down in Brazil they know about the dust storms that are wrecking cotton crop prospects west of the Mississippi. They know about the agitation to continue the 12-cent loans—which means an artificially maintained 12-cent price next year. And they know that in Brazil they can produce cotton at a profit at 6 cents a pound!

Big Brazilian Crop

So naturally Brazil will increase her cotton acreage next season by every square yard possible. This "possible" amount is far from trivial. Tremendous overnight expansion is impossible, of course, but Brazil's agricultural experts figure that only about one-tenth of the land capable of producing cotton—always with the 6 cents, including profit, in mind—is now under cultivation. So that the real problem is labor. But there is enough labor for much more expansion. So it can safely be assumed that there will be a big increase in the next Brazilian crop.

Over in England the cotton spinning people know about these dust storms, and about the prospect of the United States maintaining the 12-cent price. Some of their big mills have made the change in their looms so as to spin the Brazilian cotton. More of them are now expected to do so. They will naturally figure they can buy Brazilian cotton cheaper than United States cotton.

Over in the Japanese puppet state there are now 30,000,000 acres in cotton. Very small so far as world figures go, but there also the facts about the situation in the United States are known, and may be expected to have results. Similarly in Egypt and India.

All of which point unerringly to the probability that throughout the world there will be a mad rush to take advantage of the situation. This promises eventually to leave the United States treasury holding the bag, owning millions of bales of cotton for which it paid 12 cents a pound, when the world market will be around 7 or 8 cents at the most, and 6 cents in all probability.

But this is only part of the trouble. Johnson and Johnson have already announced their plans for setting up cotton mills in Brazil, the idea being not only to get cheaper cotton, but to get away from the processing tax. Products of this mill would be used in place of goods formerly exported from the American mills of this big firm.

Army Is Stirred

Army and navy officers are terribly concerned over the bill just passed by the house, and soon to be considered in the senate, for taking the profit out of war. They assure everyone who will listen to them, in private, that it will also take national defense out of war, which might be very serious indeed to the nation in the event of a conflict.

The pacifists hail the bill as:

"A bill to keep the United States out of war by providing in advance that there will be (1) profits for none, and (2) confiscatory taxes for all, so that it will be to every American's interest to keep the United States at peace."

Army and navy experts say that it should be called:

"A bill (1) to transfer the war munitions industry now in the United States, and which might be started here, to foreign soil, (2) to provide for murderous delay in preparation in case a war is forced on this country, (3) to conscript soldiers and employers but not workmen, and (4) to repeal the oldest law of military strategy: that the best offense is a vigorous offensive."

Goaded by a $2,000,000 bonus to Eugene G. Grace, by screams of the pacifists, by complaints of soldier bonus lobbyists that "these boys fought and risked their lives while profiteers were making millions," the house voted down every qualifying amendment, passed the bill, and privately hopes the senate will write some sense into it.

Tax on Profits

More serious, from a preparedness standpoint, is the tax provision on profits. Half of all profits up to 6 per cent and then 100 per cent is the house provision. Suppose, say army and navy officers, the du Ponts had been faced with such a situation at the entry of the United States into the World war. Would they have dared expand their plants? Suppose, instead of a preliminary period of nearly three years during which the allies were buying all the munitions they could get, and which naturally caused tremendous expansion of the du Pont, Bethlehem and other munition plants, the United States had been involved from the first, with such restrictions on earnings as are now proposed.

The point made by the army and navy men is primarily that no manfacturer would dare expand his plant to take care of a war need. He would not be able to make enough to scrap the plant after the war, and he would have to take his chances with government auditors on depreciation charges. Altogether he would be much safer if his plant were located on foreign soil, where it would be welcomed as an element of military strength.

So that the natural development would be for foreign countries to benefit—even in time of peace—by the training of their workmen in the making of munitions, and in time of war by the possibility of big profits, which these foreign governments could tax to their heart's content and still leave something for the manufacturers.

Nearly everyone agrees that the proposed law would be repealed as the first act of congress after the next declaration of war. Critics are not much worried about that. What really worries them is the prospect of American business enterprise moving abroad wholesale to escape such conditions, thus not only depriving the United States of this element of strength, but actually providing it for potential enemies.

The bill would have no chance of enactment if the votes were by secret ballot. But it is far simpler politically to vote for such a measure than to vote against it, and then try to explain why to one's constituents. Groups lobbying for the measure are militant. And, almost to the last man and woman, they would remember at the polls!

See Long Session

Congress is not going to be rushed to an early adjournment. It will be with us for a long time yet. Almost surely until August. Probably until September. Possibly longer than that.

This is true despite all the flat predictions by leaders that the "must" items will be rushed through, and everything else will be abandoned. Many things may be "abandoned." But they will not be abandoned because of the time element. They will be abandoned, if at all, because actually they are not wanted. Careful examination of the leftovers at the time of adjournment will reveal the truth of this statement.

Utility heads got all pepped up a few days ago at this list of "must" measures. It did not include the public utility holding company bill. Now, despite all the statements, the probability of the moment is that a holding company bill affecting the utilities will be passed. It will not be passed in the form desired by President Roosevelt. It will be much more moderate. It will actually be what some of the utility chiefs favored as much as ten years ago.

But its omission from the "must" list given out by house leaders is very amusing. It was a bit of intra-party strategy. The house leaders in particular are getting very tired of the President's treating them the way he goes. Hence their public statement of a "program" which would be put through and then followed by speedy adjournment. The legislative veterans were laughing in their sleeves at the time, but their statements made good newspaper copy. What they want is for the President to take them more into his confidence, and stop treating the house of representatives like a stepchild.

Soldier Bonus

Naturally, the soldier bonus was not on the "must" list. The President does not want that. But if anyone thinks that it is not going to take a lot of the senate's time, he just does not know very much about the senate. Especially, as the best predictions now are that the bonus legislation, after passing both houses, and being vetoed, will be passed over the veto by the house and then fail of passage in the senate.

This unofficial program calls for two separate considerations of the measure by the senate!

That is not all. Very few administration leaders are optimistic enough to believe this congress will adjourn without giving the soldiers something. Which means that time must intervene—after a sufficient demonstration of strength to frighten the White House, and after a sufficient demonstration of weakness to frighten the American Legion—for a compromise to be worked out.

The President has let it be known to a few friends on Capitol Hill that he is willing to go to a compromise of about $1,200,000,000. The bonus leaders know that, and will move heaven and earth to obtain it if they find that they are going to lose out on the main fight.

Incidentally, there is nothing on the "must" program about the AAA amendments, nor about the growing movement to rescind the cotton processing tax. Nor the corn and hog processing tax. Flat prediction is hereby made that there will be a lot of oratory in the senate on both before the final gavel taps.

BURLESQUE BEAUTY TO BECOME A BRIDE OF WEALTHY BARON

A $3-a-Day Performer Dances Into Heart of Europe's Richest Playboy.

New York.—A year ago Roselle Rolland earned $3 a day as a performer in a Fourteenth street, New York, burlesque show. Today she is preparing to wed Baron Jean Empain, one of Europe's wealthiest men and chief owner of the Paris subway system.

Roselle is seventeen years old. Her rise from the sordid burlesque stage to the affianced of Europe's most glittering millionaire reads like a page out of the Arabian Nights, writes Lee Mortimer in the Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Until last year Roselle never had made more than $20 a week, although she had been on the stage since she was four. Five times a day and six times on Saturday and Sunday the slender young girl took off her clothes and put on a coat of golden paint and appeared as the "Golden Girl" for the edification of a smoke-filled theater crowded with enthusiastically disrespectful men.

Broadway Debut.

Then, in the Irving Place Burlesque theater last winter, Nils T. Granlund of radio, stage and night clubs saw the girl. He knew immediately that she was wasting her talents and offered her a $60 a week contract. This sum seemed like a fortune to her and she immediately signed a long-term contract.

Under Granlund's auspices Roselle made her Broadway debut in the Paradise cabaret, performing a supposedly Indian ceremonial dance accompanied by a full chorus as lightly clad as herself. So successful was her routine that she established a Broadway cabaret long-run record that caused her to be chosen, two months ago, to go to London to appear in Clifford Whitley's swank Dorchester hotel floor show. The girl's almost nude dance created so much attention in staid London that her reputation spread to the continent. Thrill seekers came from Paris, Berlin and even as far away as Rome to see her perform. One of the visitors was the Baron Jean Empain.

Love at First Sight.

It was a case of love at first sight. Empain asked Whitley to introduce him to the girl. It is not the custom at the Dorchester house to introduce entertainers to guests, but because of the baron's position an exception was made.

Empain, who is reputed to have a yearly income of $10,000,000, is a director of 80 companies and chairman of 30. He is known throughout Europe as a playboy, spendthrift and "man of the world." Some years ago, during an Egyptian visit, he became dissatisfied with the hotel service, and ordered a model hotel built in a model city. Hotel and city are now deserted.

The nuptials are set for late spring, according to Roselle's mother, Mrs. Alvah B. Rolland. Roselle phoned from Europe for permission to wed, which quickly was granted. She also called Granlund, asking him to release her from her contract. Although the contract contained a cash penalty clause Granlund waived it, and gave his managerial blessing.

In the meantime, while awaiting the marriage, Roselle has quit the stage and no longer does her golden dance.

Aged Hero Dog Plods Back to Lost Master

Cleveland.—Mickey, a fifteen-year-old Airedale who has won a stack of prizes and who saved a five-year-old Detroit girl from Put-in-Bay water in 1926, is back home with his master, J. Kirby Keefe, after a long and weary search for home.

Keefe, visiting in Youngstown, let Mickey out for a run. Mickey ran too far. Keefe finally came home here, worried. But Mickey, just as worried, began to use his instinct, and wander. Slowly, he came in the general direction of Cleveland.

It took him eight days to trudge the seven miles to Girard, Ohio. There he was befriended by a realtor, who read Keefe's appeal in a Youngstown newspaper and sent Mickey home.

Cat, Lost More Than Two Years, Finds Way Home

Memphis, Mo.—W. Mason Montgomery moved here from Tulsa, Okla., over two years ago. En route, Smokey, the family cat, ran away. Later, former Memphis neighbors reported he had returned there, but he disappeared again before Montgomery could come for him.

Recently, a bedraggled feline appeared at the Memphis home. Unwilling at first to believe it was their long lost pet, the Montgomerys were convinced when the cat performed the "piano test," banging his paws on the keyboard when Alwilda, Montgomery's fourteen-year-old daughter, played.

Negro Sings While Being Rescued From Landslide

Colmar, Md.—Strains of the old negro spiritual, "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," came from the ground near here and led rescuers to T. Nestfield, thirty-eight-year-old negro laborer, who was buried alive under an avalanche of dirt while working in a ditch.

Nestfield's head was forced to an open pipe by the cave-in. He pressed his mouth to the end and began singing. Workers dug rapidly toward the voice and soon uncovered him. He was rushed to the hospital in critical condition.

"You are so kind, Doctor Burt," she said.

He resumed his passive stroking of her forehead and cheeks; in a low, monotonous tone he commanded her to answer all his questions. Then suddenly:

"Have you thought of your daughter, Penelope, of late?"

Grimace of distress flitted across the beautiful face. "No distress or bad luck will attend the thinking while you are with me, understand? I command you to think about her—to remember her and to answer truthfully all my questions regarding her."

"Yes, Doctor."

"Why did you and Mr. Gatlin adopt her?"

"He wanted a baby and I couldn't give him one."

"Could you, if you had cared to?"

"Yes, Doctor." Her tone was very peevish.

"How old was she when you adopted her?"

"About a month."

"Where did you find her?"

"In the Infants' Shelter in San Francisco."

"Did you know who her parents were before you had decided to adopt her?"

"Yes, Doctor. A Captain and Mrs. Robert E. Elliott."

"Why did the Elliots abandon their baby?"

"The captain was killed by the Moros and his wife died in this city in childbirth."

"Do you remember what branch of the service the captain was in?"

"He was a captain of cavalry."

"When you and Mr. Gatlin adopted Penelope, did you have any written record of her parentage?"

"We had a letter from the matron at the Infants' Shelter. And we had a letter from the doctor who attended Mrs. Elliot at St. Dunstan's hospital, and some letters from old neighbors of the Elliots."

"Why did you get the letters from the old neighbors?"

"Theodore was concerned about the baby's ancestry."

"And was it the best?"

"I do not know. It satisfied Mr. Gatlin."

"What has become of all the records pertaining to Penelope?"

"I burned them."

"Why?"

"To keep Penelope from getting them."

"Then she wanted them, did she not?"

"Yes, Doctor. She demanded them."

"When was this?"

"On her eighteenth birthday."

"How did it happen that she waited until her eighteenth birthday before demanding them?"

"Up until then she thought she was our own flesh and blood."

"Ah! Why did you burn these records rather than give them to Penelope?"

"I hate her."

"When you refused to give them to her, what happened?"

"She cried and laughed and screamed and attacked me. She said she hated me. Finally she fainted, and I had the maid put her to bed and lock her in her room."

"Did you give Penelope any information at all, at any time, regarding her parentage?"

There was a slight hesitation. "I lied to her. I wanted to hurt her because she wouldn't recognize my moral right to half of Theodore's estate. So I told her she had negro blood in her veins."

"What made you invent such a horrible tale?"

"Penelope is a decided brunette. I thought even if she did not believe me, my statement would create in her mind a doubt and a fear that would drive her crazy."

"What happened after that, Mrs. Merton?"

"In the morning she was gone."

"How did she go?"

"She made a rope of sheets and blankets."

"Have you seen her since?"

"No."

"Is she dead?"

"I do not know. I hope so."

Stephen turned to Dan. "Any questions?"

McNamara shook his head owlishly. "I can revive most of the record—perhaps all of it. The captain's record is in the army files; when he married, a notice of it appeared in the Army and Navy Journal; with that and what I can get out of the officers who soldiered with the captain, I'll get a pretty complete picture."

Stephen resumed his cross examination.

"Did you ever beat Penelope? Did you ever pinch her and slap her and lock her up?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"Wake the fiend up and send her home," McNamara roared.

"I will—as soon as I look up her memory of Penelope," Stephen replied. He impressed upon her the fact that she was not ill at all. He commanded her very earnestly to forget that she had ever heard of him.

Then he awakened her, as McNamara departed, gave her a long look, felt her pulse, told her she was much improved and handed her some sodamint tablets. She departed in a somewhat happier mood.

"Well," McNamara demanded, when he and Stephen found themselves alone again, "what do you think of that one for a hell-cat?"

"I do not think, Dan. We merely accept such people as we accept sunlight and rainfall."

"Do you think you'll see any more of this woman, Stephen?"

"I hope not. I hope the hypnotic suggestion I gave her is strong enough to overcome her acquired instinct for illness."

"Were the things she told you illuminating?"

"Very. I suspected most of them and she confirmed my suspicion. We know now that Penelope is of sound ancestry. Her father was not a neurotic. If he hadn't been a normal, gallant fellow and physically fit he would never have become a captain of cavalry. He was killed in action. But we have arrived at a starting point, Dan—the reason for the mental shock that gave Penelope a dissociated personality."

"I didn't get that—at least not quite, Stephen."

"For some reason best known to themselves, the Gatlins kept from Penelope the fact that she was not their own flesh and blood. However, while we have definitely established the date of the mental shock and the character of the shock, we have also established the causative factors leading up to the shock. Penelope had a most unhappy childhood. From earliest childhood she was the victim of bitter, rebellious thoughts. Then that baseball wrecked her nose. This was a mental and physical shock. The separation and divorce of the Gatlins was another terrible shock, because she lost Gatlin and there was nobody to protect her. And Gatlin's death was a severe shock. Then, as she emerged from childhood into maidenhood, the knowledge that her nose made her hideous naturally became an obsession with her.

"Now, Dan, by this time there was no further necessity for concealing the facts of the child's birth. Gatlin, dead, had left his entire estate in trust to Penelope, and on her eighteenth birthday she was free to do as she pleased. She could leave her hell-cat of an adopted mother now. She carried her own check book. The knowledge that she was not flesh and blood of the beloved Gatlin came as a terrible shock and with it, of course, came other terrifying speculations."

"More piling on of the inferiority complex," McNamara interrupted. "And she cracked under it. Then she made up her mind to forget Mrs. Gatlin—and she did."

"A clear case of auto-hypnosis Dan. Now you've got to run down the record of our Penelope and that of her parents. She must have it and it must be proof of the most convincing character, because such proof is necessary if we are to restore to her her mental tranquility."

"Well" said Dan, "I'll be back presently with the girl's record, and then—"

"Out of the darkness into the sunlight, Mac."

"Well, the next one I find in the darkness will stay there," the chief growled.

The absence of the capable Lanny was a constant reminder to Dr. Stephen Burt of his sole experiment to date in a case of dual personality. He yearned with an alert scientific yearning to get to work on Penelope Gatlin, and when Dan McNamara appeared at the office one day he saw by the satisfied smirk on the McNamara countenance that all had gone well.

"Let me see the documents," Stephen demanded.

McNamara handed over the pile of papers.

"Well, you've done your full duty and have kept the police of various cities busy for a few days," said Stephen. "What do you hear from Lanny?"

"She'll be home next week. The skin graft on the girl's nose was a complete success."

"And how does the girl feel about the situation now?"

"She's crazy about her new nose and spends hours examining it in a hand mirror."

Stephen smiled. "Naturally, she would."

"Lanny says the girl's been her real self more than half the time since that first look."

"She would be. And now I'm going to add to her happiness by sending her this record, which I shall supplement with a report of my own on her case. She'll study it, and in this convincing proof that she is not what Mrs. Merton told her she was, she'll probably get well. These cases are simple, Dan. All you have to do is to discover the cause and remove it. Nature does the rest. She will have no more rebellious thoughts, because the despot can do her no further harm. Her black moods of depression will not come again; she is organically and mentally sound, the product of a sound ancestry on both sides of her family."

"But she knows she was an inmate of San Quentin. She'll remember she was a thief."

"She will, of course, feel great shame when fully restored to her normal personality. In her other personality, with her acquired instincts of morality and convention smothered in her subconscious mind, she had, of course, no sense of remorse or shame. I think that when I have explained this to her she will understand just what her mental condition was. And her fear that the world will discover her sorry record will, I feel certain, be alleviated by her knowledge that it would be impossible for anybody who knew her as saddle-nosed Nance Belden to recognize her as good-looking Penelope Gatlin."

"All I've got to say, young fella m'lad," the admiring McNamara declared, "is that you're one h—l of a smart man!"

Some two weeks later, Lanny walked in on Stephen. "Well," he declared acidly, "you've certainly taken your time about geting back on the job. You're looking mighty particular, Lanny. Happy?"

"Stevie, dear, I never knew there was such complete happiness in the world."

"Where's Penelope?"

"She's gone back to Paris—on a new passport."

"Well, well, well," Stephen chided her, "tell me things."

"Stevie, she's as lovely as a May morning."

"And the operation?"

"A phenomenal success. Of course," Lanny added, "she could never stand a sock on the nose."

"Just what is she going to do in Paris?"

"Close out her apartment and dismiss her servants."

"And coming back to San Francisco?"

Lanny nodded. "How do you stand Miss Ordway as your office nurse, Stephen?"

"Rather well, I'm sorry to say. She's very competent and much more tactful than you."

"And do you want me back, darling?" she queried.

"There you go, fishing for a compliment. Of course I do, but—it isn't necessary. You could come in once a week—"

"Not for a great many weeks, Stevie."

He glanced up at her sharply. "How come, Lanny?"

Lanny's face was the color of an old rose. "I'm going to have a baby," she whispered.

And then Stephen Burt stood up and took dear old Lanny in his strong young arms and hugged her. At last she was going to have her little slice of life!

"Of course," Lanny said presently, "you'll be the baby's god-father?"

He nodded. "Of course."

Three months passed—to Stephen Burt remarkable by reason of the fact that Mrs. Rudolph Merton did not call upon him. At last, to satisfy his curiosity, he telephoned Rudolph Merton to ask him how his wife was.

"I don't know," Merton replied complacently. "She's gone."

"Dead?"

"No such luck. She's gone to Southern California to join a new religious sect. A colony on the fringe of the San Bernardino desert with a prophet in command."

"And what are you doing about it, Mr. Merton?" Stephen asked.

"I'm subsidizing the prophet so he'll stay in business ten months longer. Mrs. Merton has deserted me, thank

"Spends Hours Examining It in a Hand Mirror."

God, but she has to be away a year before I can secure a divorce on the grounds of desertion. The prophet comes high, but I can afford to pay for my fancies."

"I gather from your manner that you're not broken hearted."

"Such sorrow as I feel now would be delirious delight compared with what I'd feel if she decided to come back to me."

"I congratulate you, Mr. Merton. Good-by and good luck to you. You deserve it."

John Bunyan's Flute

While John Bunyan, who wrote Pilgrims Progress, was in prison his jailers heard music coming from his cell. They decided to take away his instrument, but the music ceased as they drew near the cell, and they could find nothing to show how the music was made. From time to time the music sounded, but only Bunyan and his book were found. What had happened was that Bunyan had made a flute from a loose rail of his stool, and on hearing the goaler's step he would slip it back into its place and pore over his book.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

GEORGE WASHINGTON, ASSASSIN

"GEORGE WASHINGTON, an assassin . . . impossible!" you exclaim. But it's true, if we can believe a document that Washington himself signed.

On May 28, 1754, his Virginia militia made a surprise attack on a party of Frenchmen at Great Meadows in western Pennsylvania. They killed ten, including the leader, Coulon de Jumonville, and took twenty-one prisoners who claimed that Jumonville was an envoy sent to warn the English off the French lands. Since England and France were not at war, they said the attack was a violation of international law. Papers found at the time proved that they were also scouts for a French force sent to drive the English out of that country.

Five weeks later, that force, commanded by Jumonville's brother, Coulon de Villiers, besieged Washington's little army at Fort Necessity. Rejecting two demands for a surrender, Washington held out until they put into writing the articles of capitulation.

It was a soggy, rainy day and the French note was "written in a bad hand on wet and blotted paper." In it Villiers twice stated that the French were not attacking the English, with whom they were at peace, but were only punishing "L'assassinat du Sieur de Jumonville." This was read to Washington by the light of a candle, which was blown out again and again by the rainy gale. The man who read it was Jacob Van Braam, a Dutchman, whose knowledge of French was meager. The word "l'assassinat" he translated simply as "death or loss." So Washington signed the articles, not realizing that he was thus confessing to an "assassination."

It was a trifling error of interpretation but the French, who welcomed an excuse for war with "perfidious Albion," seized upon the young colonial officer's "confession." It played no small part in bringing on the conflict which raged in both Europe and America for seven years and resulted in France's losing all of her territory in North America to England.

POLKA DOT

DO YOU like to wear polka dot dresses, or, if you're a man, is a polka dot scarf your favorite necktie? If so, you can thank two men. One of them was a Hungarian dancing master and the other was the first "dark horse" in American political history.

In 1830 that dancing master—history has not preserved his name—was on a walking tour in Poland. In a small village he saw a peasant girl doing a folk dance which pleased him. He brought the new steps back to Prague, where it immediately won great popularity, and gave it the name "Polka" for the land of its origin.

Fourteen years later over in America, the Democratic party was trying to nominate a candidate for President at Baltimore. There was a deadlock.

Suddenly 44 votes were announced for James Knox Polk of Tennessee, who had served as speaker of the house of representatives but otherwise had a colorless political career.

This started a stampede which resulted in the first selection of a "dark horse" in convention history. When the news of his nomination was flashed from Baltimore to Washington over that new-fangled instrument, the telegraph, amazed citizens in the Capital exclaimed, "Who is Polk?"

As it turned out, he was the next President. For he defeated Henry Clay, the Whig nominee. During the campaign, the Hungarian dancing master's new dance came into this country. Because of the similarity of its name to that of the Democratic nominee, it became the official campaign amusement. Articles of various kinds were named for it and for him . . . and that's why we wear polka dot designs today.

A CIGARETTE

LOOK over a cigarette the next time you smoke one. It's not so very long, nor very thick. Probably the fraction of a cent that it costs you will never be missed. But such a trifle as a smouldering cigarette costs the United States three billion dollars in fire losses every year! Experts estimate that the average smoker throws away at least a third of the cigarette, and if the little trifle is not put out . . . !

In 1629 the Puritans tried to pass a law against the planting of tobacco. This decree was the forerunner of the whole code of prohibitive laws. It was a losing fight, however. So Massachusetts set a tax on its use.

"Any persons or person who shall be found smoking tobacco on the Lord's day, going to or coming from the meetings, or within two miles of the meeting house, shall pay 12 pence for every such default." As almost the whole community lived within the two miles limit, this caught them all.

Even today there are still some states in the Union that forbid the sale of tobacco on Sunday. Well, it all depends on what you like. And if you like to smoke, remember the three billion dollars and put out your stubs.

"DUST STORMS" NO NEW THING

Records of Depopulation of Whole Regions.

No one who has not been in one of the dust storms which have swept the western plains for more than a year can appreciate their devastation and the apprehensions of the people in the region extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Slave lake.

Science knows full well the potentialities of this terrible phenomenon. It has innumerable records of other soil transformations brought about by the wind. Much of the richer soil over vast areas in the United States was carried there by dust storms. An analysis of dust falling in Missouri a year ago revealed the characteristics of soil in the Dakotas. All soils are easily identified by their mineral content. The Dakotas had been exposed to drouth for a number of years. The soil was deprived of its protective vegetation. Thus, when the wind blew, the soil was carried away to be deposited in other states.

To most of us who live where moisture is sufficient for human needs, it is difficult to realize that the dust storms have been raging al winter. Neither snow nor rain has been sufficient to keep the dust down even in mountainous states like Colorado. Heavy rains have flooded the lower Mississippi valley, but the shortage of moisture has gone right on in the plains. Whether in Texas or Saskatchewan, the wind has only to rise and the dust is blown. If anything, the dust storms have been worse than ever in the last two months. They have actually buried fences, piled dust high around houses and barns, covered up crops. They are destructive alike to man and beast. No form of life can withstand them day after day very long.

Needless to say, the dust phenomenon has greatly altered the food situation in the United States. It affects meats and grains. It is in part responsible for the increased cost of living. The AAA plan to limit the production of spring wheat has been abandoned. How can there be too much wheat when the wheat states are the chief victims of the dust? The drouth reduced corn last year to a minimum. If it persists this year, there will be no reserves of corn left. From surplus induced by excess production in our own and other countries, we are in danger of passing to scarcity due to drouth and dust.

Records of drouth are readily traced in the rings of trees. There are records of other drouths in the plains as bad as or worse than the present drouth. This is not, however, an assurance to science that we may now be witnessing the beginnings of one of those deserts in which nature delights. It was when the Southwest became a desert that the Indians moved into Mexico. Life follows the moisture-bearing air currents. When they passed from the region south of the Mediterranean to the region north of the Mediterranean, life followed them. The Asiatics have long been accustomed to packing up and following the moisture-bearing winds.

Science would not care to assert its entire apprehensions of the dust storms in the western plains. They may be the consequences of just another drouth. Or they may be the beginning of the end for all that region where the buffalo grazed. Science knows what has happened. What is to happen is on the knees of the gods.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Wind Velocity Retards Central Asian Progress

A recent typhoon that killed 1,500 people and ravaged 400 miles of country near Tokyo was one of only 120 m. p. h., yet it was sufficient to blow down all but concrete structures like packs of cards. Recent experiments in measuring wind force have proved that the greatest recorded velocity was at Mount Washington, in Vermont. Here the wind blew at 231 m. p. h. It was so cold that the measuring instrument which recorded the speed had to be electrically heated to prevent it freezing solid.

Nevertheless, scientists believe that winds of a greater force blow across the wastes of central Asia. Rocks in this region are worn away in a few centuries, and in the past vast towns have been buried deep in sand within a few hours. The wind, in fact, is so devastating that, although the country has been populated on and off for thousands of years, little or no progress has been made.

Regular Elimination

The proper use of Thedford's Black-Draught, (for constipation) tends to leave the bowels acting regularly. It is a fine, reliable long-established family laxative.

"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught fully thirty years," writes Mrs. J. E. McDuff, of Elgin, Texas. "I had trouble from constipation is why I first began the use of it, and as it gave perfect satisfaction I do not see any reason to change."

Another good thing about Black-Draught that helps to make it so popular—it is NOT expensive.

Living Costs Rise, Electricity Drops

Demopolis Resident Pleased with Rate Reductions

Mrs. A. G. Westbrook, prominent in the social life of Demopolis, Ala., is one of many Alabama homemakers who foresee the wider use of electric appliances because of low electric rates. Recently Mrs. Westbrook wrote Alabama Power Company:

"I have just learned that a further reduction in your residential rate for electricity is now in effect, and, naturally, I am very much pleased, especially since the prices of all other commodities which go into the usual household budget have been steadily rising during the past year or so. It is a remarkable thing to me, that in the face of rising costs, your Company has steadily reduced the cost of its service, whenever possible.

"I have been one of your customers for sometime, and thoroughly appreciate the reliable, economical service you are rendering. With this new low rate it should be possible for most every housewife to avail herself of still wider use of this untiring servant which is doing so much to promote comfort, convenience and economy in the modern home."—Adv. MONTEVALLO

There was an Easter Egg hunt given at the home of Pauline Evans, on Easter Sunday afternoon, at two o'clock. Due to the bad weather there were only six boys and six girls there. Everyone brought some eggs. Mrs. Evans hid the eggs, while the crowd enjoyed some good music played by Alfred Allen and Claud Houston. After the eggs were found, there were two prizes given away. Jessie Allen won first prize by finding the smallest egg and Pauline Evans won second prize by finding the largest egg. After finding the eggs, we all enjoyed eating them, and a very good time was had by all.

LORDS BEAUTY SALON

Located at f909 3rd Avenue North, in Birmingham. Phone 7-6541.

Marcelling, manicuring, facial massages, hair dressing and permanent waves are some of the specialties at this shop, and to the woman who wishes the advanced methods of beauty culture, her desire can be attained at this establishment. Here the style of coiffure is considered too important a part of your appearance to be governed by some whim of the moment, and because of this the individual type is considered and their work emphasizes youth in the younger woman and dignity and good grooming in the mature. Healthy hair is a necessary quality for a well-appearing coiffure, and at this shop unhealthy hair is treated after the quaint but successful methods of long ago, the whole system being based on the correct use of tonics that stimulate and heal.

The treatment chosen by this shop is the one which is best suited for each case.

W. L. SMITH PRODUCE COMPANY

Located at 2523 2nd Avenue North, in Birmingham. They have successfully served the people for 15 years.

This is one of the institutions that has materially aided in the development of this section of the state and has especially been instrumental in aiding the progress of diversified farming in this community. They furnish farmers with a most advantageous market for poultry and eggs and therefore operate an institution of great economical value to the public. The prices are far more favorable than would be secured by the people if they had to ship elsewhere for it is a well known fact that this popular establishment pays the top of the market at all times.

One of the recognized principles of farming along scientific lines to-day is the raising of poultry.

It is because of the excellent service and the desirable market afforded by this well known company that this feature is receiving more attention from the farmers today and progress along this line is particularly noticeable in this community where the producer knows that he will receive the highest prices for his poultry and eggs.

Among the progressive real estate agencies of this part of the country we are glad to make prominent mention of this agency. The activities of this agency are conducive to the progress of this section in no small degree inasmuch as his dealings in city and farm property attract new people to the community.

There are many dealers in real estate but the successful operators must be well-versed in values and locations. They must also have a complete knowledge of the history of the country and of what value a particular property is to the intending purchaser.

The real citizen is the home owner. To him comes the thrill of owning a home whether it be large or small.

Every true citizen has in his own mind a picture of the home he at sometimes intends to own. Perhaps it is a small bungalow with a few rooms, surrounded by flowers. Perchance a small garden where he may spend his leisure time. Then too, the owner of rural property desires the comfort of a city dwelling. In any respect, regardless of the wants of the intending purchaser or renter, this agency can take care of their needs as they have listed on their books a number of properties that are sure to please.

PERSONAL MENTION

APRIL

"I'll take my fill of April
While Spring comes up the year
And watch her young leaves tremble
In air that's April clear.

I'll go afar for wind-flowers
That climb a rocky steep—
For bloodroot and hepatics
And violets in a heap.

I'll watch the buds of judas-trees
Lie like a wounded thing
In bleeding purple ecstasies
Across the heart of Spring."

EASTER ECHOES.

The Easter Cantata, Life Eternal, rendered by the Methodist Choir under the excellent directorship of Mrs. J. L. Davis, will long linger in the memory of all those who heard this beautiful message in song presented at the Methodist Church on last Sunday night.

The Church was artistically decorated with Easter Lillies and Southern smilax, by Mrs. D. S. Lightcap. The lighted white Cross formed an impressive center in the semi-circle around which the vested choir took their places.

The preludes played by Mesdames Lokey and Taylor, violinists, and the Marimba solos, by Mrs. Purnie Hendricks, accompanied by Mrs. Esther Christian, pianist, were beautifully interpreted. The entire ensemble of voices formed a well balanced organization and each number was sympathetically rendered.

Outstanding solo voices were A. C. Carter, bass; Virginia Nichols, soprano; Mrs. T. K. Roberts, contralto; and Dr. James Crawford, tenor.

Much credit should be given the entire personnel of this choir, for one of the most creditable musical productions ever heard in Columbiana, was enjoyed on this Easter-tide occasion. The writer, believing Music to be the best medium of expression, personally extends thanks to the Director, and to each member of the choir for this excellent presentation.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats presented an excellent program of dance music on last Saturday night when the Pre-Easter dance was staged at the Airport. Visitors from Montevallo, included Dr. H. W. James and E. S. Lyman, Jr., Messrs Mahaffey and other members of the popular 'Bama Skippers. From Vincent were noted, Misses Pauline Gibbons, Phillips, and Messrs Morrell, Brown and Sharbutt; A. L. Crumpton and Miss Lois Bonner, of Ashland, were the guests of Judge and Mrs. W. W. Wallace.

The next dance will be given in this popular community recreational center on Saturday night, May 4, 1935.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul O. Luck and Miss Ruth Luck spent Saturday in Birmingham. Miss Luck will be among the Alabama Collegiates who will attend the University dances on April 26th.

Mrs. Henry Nichols was hostess Thursday afternoon at one of the most delightful entertainments of the spring. She included the members of the Culture Club and a few additional friends among the music lovers of Columbiana as guests at a musicale to introduce Mr. Nichol's brother, Glenn Nichols, Jr., of Birmingham. Mr. Nichols is remembered by many friends of his boyhood here as a gifted pianist. He has become even more than this, a distinguished musician and member of the faculty of the Birmingham Conservatory of Music.

An interesting and enjoyable feature of the program arranged by Mr. Nichols was the informal lecture presented preceeding each of the two groups of selections. These brief analyses afforded a background of appreciation and understanding which his audience found most engaging and helpful. The graceful and unaffected personality of the young artist added charm to a program which was tasteful and appropriate. Chopin's tender and dreamy compositions, the exquisite melodies of de Bussy, Schubert, Liszt and Grieg seemed to blend perfectly with the spirit of spring.

His selections were: Fantasie Impromptu, Chopin; Prelude in B minor, Chopin; Prelude in B-flat major, Chopin; Ballade in F major, Chopin; Arabesque, DeBussy; Clair De Lune, DeBussy; Soisee le Vienne, Schubert-Liszt. For an encore the soloist played a colorful Grieg nocturne.

A tea table, adorned with spring flowers and placed in a corner of the suite which had been transformed temporarily into a small concert room, made a cheerful gathering place for the assemblage to chat at the close of the afternoon with the guest of honor. The gracious young hostess was assisted in serving a fruit punch and an array of dainty sandwiches and sweets by Mrs. Joe Stone and Mrs. Robert Peacock.

Among those present were: Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, Mrs. S. M. Lokey, Mrs. Charles E. Niven, Miss Gertrude Bishop, Miss Irene Bishop, Mrs. S. G. Chandler, Mrs. Homer Walton, Mrs. W. F. Davis, Mrs. James H. Crawford, Mrs. Steadman Wood, Mrs. L. D. Cole, Mrs. Howard Whitaker, Mrs. Earl Wood, Mrs. Levert Christian, Mrs. W. L. Christian, Mrs. Joe Stone, Mrs. J. L. Hendrick, Mrs. Tom Roberts, and others.

Harold Harlin, who has been visiting in Athens, Alabama, for the past week, has returned to Columbiana.

Judge Lamar Fields will hold the May term of the Shelby County Circuit Court and Judge W. W. Wallace has been ordered to Talladega for the term of the Circuit Court schedulel at this place in May. Both judges are disqualified in their immediate districts on account of former interests in legal cases to be tried.

The Rev. H. M. Hurst, after a successful meeting held in Florence, Alabama, for the past two weeks, has returned to Columbiana. He was accompanied by Mrs. Hurst and Mary Moore Hurst, who have been the guests of Mrs. Bill Crutcher in Athens, Alabama.

It is Peony Week at Noland Barnett's Flower Farm. Go by today and buy some of these gorgeous specimens. They will cost you $1.50 per dozen.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton McGhee are receiving congratulations from their many friends upon the arrival of little John Charles McGhee in their home on April 19, 1935.

Miss Hazel Morrow, of Decatur, is the charming house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer McGiboney.

Mrs. A. N. Bird entertained the Culture Club on Tuesday afternoon. The living room was beautifully decorated with spring flowers. After a short business session, the Parliamentarian gave a short talk, after which the program was turned over to Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, who presented in her usual charming manner, "The Significance of Easter". Mrs. L. D. Cole had planned an Egg hunt for the club members and their guests which afforded much merriment. Mrs. Howard Whittaker won the prize for finding more eggs than her competitors.

A new novel, "Marie Antoinette", was presented the Club Library.

Visitors included: Mrs. John Curlee, Mrs. Earl Wood, and Mrs. A. Lawley, of Jasper.

It is with a great deal of pleasure that we have the happy privilege of welcoming to business and social circles in Columbiana, Miss Delilah Curry, formerly of Montevallo, who is now connected with the Louise Thompson Beauty Salon. Miss Curry, for a number of years was associated with the Mahan Beauty Shoppe in Montevallo, and is an efficient and capable operator in all phases of the Beautician's art. Miss Thompson's reputation as the successful Manager of this Shoppe is well known to patrons in Shelby County, and we personally advise that you go by today and talk over your beauty problems with those two charming and competent little operators. They are fully equipped to keep you looking your best, be it a facial, manicure, or a permanent wave—and after all, it is up to you to "look your best"—that is, if you care to present a well groomed appearance. Their prices are reasonable and their work is guaranteed to give satisfaction.

The F. F. A. Boys held their annual banquet in the Shelby County High School on Tuesday night. A delicious menu and an excellent program interspersed the program in a most entertaining manner. Watch this group of boys as they climb to the top in their profession. No organization deserves more whole heartedly your full cooperation. Joe Stone, popular vocational teacher is largely responsible for the success with which each undertaking has been met. He is an untiring worker and his personal interest in each of the boys furnishes a worthy inspiration for the progress they have made in their work.

Ike Natthews, of Montevallo, and Joe Sachs, of Birmingham, were visitors to Columbiana on Monday.

MODERN BEAUTY SALON

Located at Five Points, 2004 13th Avenue South, in Birmingham. Phone 3-2508.

Here will be found a most distinctive beauty shop which has gained a well merited patronage from among the most discriminating matrons and misses not only of the city but from the smaller towns and surrounding country as well. Study and experience on the part of the operators here places this beauty shop in the rank of professionals in their line and thoroughly competent to advise patrons as to the treatment which will best respond to your own particular case.

They are especially skilled and equipped for the modern care of the hair, such as cutting, trimming, marcelling and permanent waving, as well as the highest grade facial treatments known to the cosmetician's art.

Hair after the permanent wave process, is nearly restored to its natural condition and responds thereafter to the natural heat of the body and natural moisture of the atmosphere. On an extremely dry day a damp brush will increase the curl instead of taking it out. These things will go to prove nature will assist the permanent wave.

It is openly admitted by skin specialists that activity of the body lends brightness to the face and makes one appear young, still there are signs of age that appear even with a healthy, active body, and at this shop the give-away lines and flabby muscles are remedied. The treatment chosen by this shop is the one which is the best suited for each case.

Remember the old conundrum—when is a door not a door? The answer used to be: "When it's ajar." Now there's a new one. A door has been recently perfected which isn't a door at all but a curtain of air that serves the same purpose. On one of the new streamlined trains which runs between Chicago and St. Paul, a sheet of air occupies the opening between kitchen and eating space in the dining car. This sheet of air is forced thru a small slit in both sides of the door frame. Overhead is an exhaust ventilator. Kitchen fumes, heat and odors are thus completely shut out, without blocking the passage. Maybe you can't have this kind of an "air door" between your kitchen and dining room but you don't need it if you cook with an electric range, because your kitchen is as comfortable as the rest of the house.

Sinus sufferers please note: A business man, in San Francisco, whose wife had sinus trouble because of the humidity, reproduced in his own apartment the warm dry climate of the Ojai Valley. This feat was accomplished with air conditioning. Instead of seeking a cooler climate for your summer vacation, why not make your cooler climate in your own home? Air conditioning is just the thing for hay-fever sufferers too. The Alabama Power Company will soon be handling air conditioning equipment.

Even to this day in India ice is made by filling shallow porous trays with water, placing them on beds of straw and leaving them exposed to the night winds. By morning a thin crust forms. How much easier it is to simply fill the tray with water in your electric refrigerator and have all the ice you need in a few hours. Which reminds us to tell you—our Spring refrigerator sale is still in progress.

NEW LIGHT ON BETTER SIGHT

Here are four interesting little booklets—prepared by the Better Vision Institute, which is promoting the nationwide campaign for better sight. They're designed to help you find out for yourself if you are getting all . . . or merely a fraction—of the life that should be open to you thru your eyes. You may obtain the complete set by writing Dept. 319, Alabama Power Company, Birmingham.

$60,000 SALES IN ONE WEEK

Folks in Alabama are bidding good-bye to hard times and welcome to the many good buys now available in electric merchandise. One week recently sales of refrigerators, ranges, water heaters and small appliances passed $60,000—a new all time record! And there's a reason—several of them—cheap Alabama electricity, improved appliances, attractive prices, easy terms—plus the growing knowledge that full use of electric service is the greatest boon of this modern age to both homemakers and husbands.

Finds Ever Ready Electricity A Blessing

The editor of the Pell City News quoted recently this appreciated comment of Mr. Cecil Allen of Pell City on the value of "ever-ready" electricity: "Mr. Allen expresses the appreciation of many of his neighbors who find ever-ready electricity a blessing in their homes."

Protection Impossible
The Railroad Crossings
Things Are Better
When Russia Is Rich

Europe seeks some network of "treaties" to prevent a war, or bind armies and air fleets of each of those signing such treaties to protect the others in case of attack.

Arthur Brisbane

Unfortunately, in the new war of the air, as in secret gangster war, no protection is possible.

Where one criminal has an "automatic" or "submachine gun," agreements among law-abiding citizens cannot protect them. And while one nation can secretly build and suddenly launch airships with poison gas and explosive bombs, no city can consider itself safe.

France and England, after elaborate experiments, announce that there is no possible way of protecting a modern city against air attacks, even though the city knew in advance when to expect them.

The only safeguard is fear of retaliation.

Deeply grieved by the killing of many school children at a public crossing, the President plans extensive elimination of railroad grade crossings. Complete elimination of such crossings would involve spending hundreds of millions or billions. The work would be undertaken with careful concentration on the fact that railroading itself is bound to change or disappear so far as transportation of passengers is concerned.

Railroads in the future must carry passengers more than one hundred miles an hour, on light railroad equipment, able to climb steep grades as easily as automobiles do now. Elimination of grade crossings will take that into consideration and include elimination of existing sharp curves at crossings, that the work may not be done twice.

Dun & Bradstreet, well informed usually, say that a big business rise is coming. Their weekly survey informs you that before the end of this quarter business progress will have developed to a degree beyond the most sanguine estimates offered at the beginning of the year.

How rich will the Russians become, with their energetic development of national resources, all over Russia and far into Arctic regions?

And what will be the effect on Communism, bolshevism and the proletariat when Russia becomes, as she may do, the richest nation on earth, and those that rule her become the world's richest men, perhaps the first multiple billionaires in history?

Expeditions sent into the Arctic have discovered coal, nickel, zinc, tin, copper, gold and oil, all inside the Arctic circle.

A regular line of freight ships has been established through the northwest passage, gigantic icebreakers going ahead of the freighters. Already Russia produces three times as much gold as the United States. What will be the psychological effect on Communism when Russia produces more gold than any other nation on earth?

Gambling in silver, made inevitable by this country pushing up the price, goes on all over the world; poor old China is buying back at double prices silver sold too cheap, and Britain must wish she had been in less of a hurry to unload below 30 cents an ounce the hundreds of millions of ounces taken from India, when India, in a foolish moment, was put on the gold basis, only to fall off again.

An old true saying tells you: "There is some good in all evil," and this applies even to the deadly venom of the cobra, or "hooded snake of India."

A full discharge of the cobra's poison into the human body means death, while the scientific use of that poison supplies a superior substitute for morphine in diminishing pain.

If you love your British cousins, rejoice. Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, says British income taxes will be cut because British finances show a substantial surplus. That surplus appears in spite of the fact that Britain is adding more than $52,000,000 to the cost of armaments.

Your satisfaction in this good news may be increased by your knowledge that the United States had the pleasure of financing the surplus and the additional armaments to the tune of $5,000,000,000 in war debts not paid.

Senator Wheeler of Montana has introduced a bill ordering the national government to take over, own and operate the railroads of the nation beginning January 1, 1936. There is no doubt that railroad stock and bond holders would say, "Amen," if they could be sure of getting a fair price for their property. Railroad management, naturally, would grieve. To give up power is always unpleasant.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

The Alabama Court of Appeals at Montgomery upheld the right of a utility to discontinue service to a customer who attempts to obtain service without paying for it. In so ruling, the court reversed a $3,000 judgment granted Mrs. Sam Sanders against the Birmingham Gas Co. in Jefferson Circuit Court.

The proposal to call a referendum later in the year on legalization of beer and wine only struck a new snag. A group of legislators revealed they had caucused and agreed to vigorously oppose re-submission of the wet-dry question unless hard liquor was included.

More than 20,000 illiterate persons in Alabama have had a chance, this year, to spell their first words, in print and with their own pencils, through the adult education classes, financed by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration.

Maurice Weatherly, 22-year-old Florence resident, was found guilty of criminally assaulting Miss Vivian Voss, of Florence, also 22, at a special term of Lauderdale County Circuit Court. He was sentenced to 35 years in the penitentiary.

Steeped in the tradition of 119 years existence, the Valley Creek Presbyterian Church near Selma was the scene of the one hundredth annual session of the Tuscaloosa Presbytery—the second centennial celebration to be held on the site.

Bank clearings in Birmingham this year are showing considerable increase over the corresponding period last year. Bank clearings during the first three months this year totaled $198,014,993.69, compared with $167,951,806.38 in 1934.

Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer, said he had requested $2,000,000 in work-relief funds for construction of eight new tuberculosis sanatoriums, enlargement of six similar institutions, and erection of several community general hospitals.

Spring examinations for applicants seeking to become registered nurses will be held in Birmingham, Mobile and Montgomery simultaneously on May 21 and 22 by the State Board of Examiners. Credentials must be sent by May 6.

The Madison County Board of Commissioners appropriated half of the funds necessary to purchase 2,000 acres for a state park on Monte Sano conditioned on the remainder being raised by public subscription.

Gov. Bibb Graves has given a six-month test parole to Mrs. Edna Naro, of Birmingham, who has served almost 10 years of her 20-year sentence in connection with the slaying of Ralph Roberts, of Birmingham.

A vast rural electrification program for Alabama, embracing 181 projects and calling for an outlay of approximately $1,400,000 is under consideration by the State Rural Electrification Authority.

The City of Sheffield has received the completed loan contract with the Public Works Administration and is ready to advertise for bids in the construction of a power distribution system.

Miss Helen Osband, who has been on the faculty of Alabama College, Montevallo, for the past seven years, will become instructor in speech at the University of Alabama next September.

May Day celebrations at Judson College have been announced for May 3 and 4, with the observances culminating in the crowning of Miss Sallie Dean, of Alexander City, as May Queen.

A determined fight for retention of the processing tax on cotton and other farm commodities has been launched by the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and will extend into all 67 counties.

Between 400 and 500 men employed by the R. H. Carr Lumber Company and 25 subsidiary plants, who have been on strike since April 3, have returned to work under an agreement.

More than 100 Alabama milk producers unanimously voted to call on the Legislature for the enactment of a state milk control board act to regulate price and production of milk.

The Muscle Shoals to Mobile Short Route Association was organized and officers elected at a meeting of approximately 100 delegates from six West Alabama counties at York.

T. A. Sims, state 4-H Club director, announced that 18,000 Alabama farm boys were enrolled on the 1935 membership rolls of 4-H Clubs to show a gain of 5,000 over last year.

Dallas County is to have five new canning centers at Tilden, Warr's Store at Pleasant Hill, Crumptonia, Summerfield and Marion Junction.

The fiscal institution excise tax to April 10 showed $45,428 collected for the 1935 fiscal year as compared with total collections of $16,296 for 1934.

Alabama farmers have received $19,826,202.33 in rental and benefit payments from the Federal Government on cotton, corn, hogs and tobacco during the past two years.

Gov. Bibb Graves has authorized a reward of $50 for the arrest and conviction of Sam Fulford, Negro, under indictment in Sumter County on a charge of robbery.

Gordon Persons, chairman, announced that the Rural Electrification Authority had established offices at the First National Bank Building in Montgomery.

PATTERN 9963

There will be a notable representation of straight, loose jackets, according to latest fashion reports. Here's one added to a short sleeved frock of the type you can enjoy all summer, thus creating an ensemble of comfort for all degrees of temperature and all occasions, from street to afternoon. In the detail sketch you will note the draped front girdle which slenderizes and flatters, as do the flared revers. The jacket may be made bolero length if you prefer. A triple sheer material or a heavy rough crepe, the bodice and revers in contrasting color, would be attractive.

Pattern 9963 may be ordered only in sizes 10, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 4 yards 39 inch fabric and 1 yard contrasting.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

Knitted Apparel Goes Ultra Chic

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IF YOU would keep in the very forerank of fashion you simply must wear something knitted this spring. Not only is the smart set taking to knitting with more enthusiasm than ever, but knitted things sold in the shops were never more fascinating. So whether you knit your own or buy, you are certain to be smartly clad if your suit, frock, coat, blouse likewise hat, gloves, belt and scarf, one or all are knitted.

Astonishing things are being done in knitted realms nowadays. Every fad, foible and intriguing move of fashion finds interpretation via knitted art on the new style program. Which accounts for the increasing enthusiasm expressed for knitted modes this season.

The stunning three-quarter coat to the right in the picture is one unmistakable "reason why" women are continuing so whole-heartedly knitted-minded this spring. It can be knitted rapidly because it is of heavy white cotton and made on large needles. Wide-at-the-wrist sleeves, a flattering collar and pouch-shaped patch pockets lend a casual air to this youthful model. The beauty of this coat is that it can be tubbed so easily. If you prefer, make it of the new linen yarn or string. In either event, cotton or linen, this coat is a swank fashion and its "endearing charms" will give you joy the entire spring and summer through.

In looking at the cunning jacket-suit to the left one can almost fancy the knitting needles clicking a ditty, to wit: "If fashion sends diagonals then diagonals' my choice." Which is exactly what we have been trying to say in regard to knitting as now is, it is as facile and amenable as any woven-on-loom fabric and what's more, knitted fashions are not missing a "trick" when it comes to styling with fetching details, silhouettes and accessory notes.

Note, for instance, the shapeliness of the jacket to this suit. The skirt is straight and narrow and may be knitted with or without the new slit hemline. ('Twould be ever so smart with a slit hem to left front in the skirt.) The original of the model pictured is done in old ivory of a delustered crepe floss, knitted in a tweedy diagonal effect. The dainty blouse of drop stitch pattern is cream color. Brown grosgrain ribbon trims the jacket and the crochet hat.

Speaking of the crochet hat reminds us to say to those who would rather crochet than knit that fashion is willing. Members of the smart set are having any amount of fun crocheting the new cape suits (cape and skirt) out of either mercerized cotton or the very popular carpet-warp string. The whole thing can be done in an open lacy stitch or the skirt may be in plain with lacy for the cape. The crochet or knit sweater looks best in contrasting color.

For your spring suit we suggest the accessory ensemble of hat, purse and belt shown below. Crochet it of mercerized crochet cotton. The hat has the new off-the-face movement which is an accepted vogue in the advance showings. The "set" would be pretty in different color combinations. The one pictured is a rich brown with orange touches.

SPRING BRINGS NEW SHADES IN MAKE-UP

New spring shades are going to mean some new spring make-up for the woman of discernment.

Yellow, one of the favored spring colors, and beige, are calling for a coral tint in rouge and lipstick. Navy, however, requires a deeper tint, bordering on the red, rather than on the orange shades. With white or black, orange or the more brilliant shades of red will be advisable.

Local department stores have charts showing the shades of rouge and lipstick which should correspond to the shades of your clothes.

No longer is it adequate to have one shade of rouge and one shade of lipstick, the authorities divulge.

As for eye-shadow: blue goes with blue eyes, green with green, or brown eyes, and for evening, a new shadow with silver dust in it, that is dramatically effective.

Flapper Mode Revival Is Suggested by Short Skirt

The introduction of the short, full skirt in some Paris collections has set the fashion world to wondering whether the flapper is returning. Several designers showed daytime skirts that were an inch or two shorter than those of the previous season and most of them endorsed skirt fullness. Pleats and gathers shared attention.

Fluctuating skirt lengths also were a sensation of the evening medes. Ankles appeared again and again. The skirt which was sufficiently short to show footwear at the front frequently was lengthened to touch the floor at the back and sometimes to form a train.

Peasant Influence

The peasant influence has come to town, accenting slimness with its full lines. Fullness is used effectively, below shoulder yokes, back and front with a suggestion of gathered flounce at the back of the skirt above the knee-line. Waist and hips and shoulders look twice as slim by comparison.

WEAR FLOWERS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

'Tis said that fashions will be gay with flowers this season. The news of first importance in the realm of stylish flowers is the carnation. The favorite boutonniere of the moment is a big fluffy many-petalled carnation, white, pink, red or even navy blue. Garlands of flowers will be worn like a necklace. Add a flower bracelet if you will. A wreath in the hair, too, if it is evening. There is rumor in the air that hats will be trimmed in natural flowers—a special little contrivance to hold them and to permit removing to change for fresh flowers. The flower ensemble in the picture is interesting and very lovely. The turban and the cuffs of the gloves are made of shaded purple violets. The bows are of satin ribbon in a deeper shade.

Hats Go Bi-Colored

Here's something new in spring hats. Suzy makes a straw sailor whose right side is yellow and whose left side is black. It is finished with a simple black ribbon trim.

Lesson for April 28

THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

LESSON TEXT—II Timothy 3:14-17; Psalm 19:7-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—O how love I thy law! It is my meditation all the day.—Psalm 119:97.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Book God Gave Us.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Book God Gave Us.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Use the Bible.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Inspiration and Authority of the Bible.

I. The Origin or Source (II Tim. 3:16).

They are inspired of God, which literally means "God-breathed." Peter says "Holy men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Ghost" (II Pet. 1:21). When Paul declares the Scriptures to be God-breathed, he means that the utterances resulted from God's breath in men's mouths. Because they are God-breathed they are the veritable words of God. The holy Scriptures not only contain the word of God, but they are in verity the message of God to men.

II. The Value of the Scriptures (II Tim. 3:14-17).

1. Able to make wise unto salvation (v. 15). Salvation is alone in Christ. It is obtained through faith in his finished work on the cross.

2. Disciplines the life (vv. 16, 17). It is profitable for doctrine, which is the divine standard of conduct. In the Holy Bible alone is to be found this standard of life. Not only is it the standard of life, but of all thought. Then, too, it reproves, that is, confutes error. The way to deal with error is not denunciation, but the positive presentation of the revealed truth. It also corrects, that is, sets straight many of the dislocations of personal and social conduct. The Word of God is the standard of measurement which sets straight the lives of moral beings. Further, it instructs in righteousness and thoroughly equips the minister for Christian service. The mastery of God's holy Word is the indispensable equipment for Christian service. One who lacks this knowledge of the holy Scriptures is utterly unfit for the Christian ministry, no matter how well trained he may be in other things.

III. The Nature and Effect of God's Law (Ps. 19:7-11).

1. It is perfect. It is without a flaw. It converts and restores the soul: it turns man back to God himself to lead a life of holiness. It not only converts sinners, but restores the saints to divine fellowship.

2. It is sure. It is absolutely dependable. Man's reasonings change, but God's Word endures forever. God cannot lie. It makes wise the simple. Common men and women as to natural gifts become wise even in the rightful things of the world, because of their mastery of the Word of God.

3. It is right. The precepts and judgments of the Lord are expressions of absolute righteousness because they proceed from the righteous God and are, therefore, inherently right.

4. It is pure. There is no admixture of error. There is no compromise with that which is untrue. Because of this, it enlightens the eyes. All that mars the spiritual vision is taken away. Conduct for the Christian is clearly defined.

5. It is clean. This is seen in the effects of the Word of God upon the life. The individual who is sanctified by it is clean within and without.

6. It is true and righteous. The decisions of God's Word are true without exception. The judgments of God's Word are unimpeachable. Because of these qualities, God's Word is more to be desired than the choicest of gold. Obedience thereto brings great reward.

IV. The Prayer of the Believer (Ps. 19:12-14).

The life brought face to face with God's Word is seen as sinful. The soul cries out for

1. Cleansing (v. 12). The perfect law reveals the imperfections of the life. The Word of God reveals sins of which the individual may be ignorant.

2. To be kept from presumptuous sins. Presumptuous sins are peculiarly dangerous. In the Mosaic economy no sacrifice was provided for such sins.

3. Freedom from the dominion of such sins (v. 13). How awful is the slavery of those who are in bondage to presumptuous sins.

4. That the words of the mouth and the meditations of the heart be kept in line with God's Word (v. 14). From many dangers the believer would be saved if the words and meditations of his heart were kept in line with the Scriptures!

MEDITATIONS

Does it strike you that the mischief of our life is really our constant fretfulness?

Christ would not be diverted from the main issues of life and destiny. He observed a strict economy in his resources.

• • •

That silence is one of the great arts of conversation is allowed by Cicero, who says, there is not only an art, but even an eloquence in it.—Hannah More.

POULTRY

INCUBATION PERIOD UP TO AGE OF EGGS

High-Hatching Stock Should Be Obtained.

By E. W. Henderson, Poultry Husbandry Expert, Iowa State College. WNU Service.

Eggs laid in the afternoon may hatch better than those laid in the morning. This was one of the phenomena revealed in various agricultural experiment station tests to discover factors causing poor chick hatches.

Another unusual fact observed was that the time required for incubation is directly related to the age of the egg set. Those from 14 to 21 days old required 14 to 18 hours longer for incubation than did those held less than eight days.

Chicks slow in hatching were low in vitality, it was revealed. Only 8.7 per cent of the first 90 per cent to hatch died in the first eight weeks. On the other hand, 24 per cent of the last 10 per cent to hatch died during the same length of time.

High summer temperatures decreased the hatch materially. Sudden and sharp drops in temperature caused poor hatches four and five weeks following. Eggs laid during the week of "cold waves" were not affected.

Because the expense of getting information to determine the cause of a poor hatch is usually too great, it is advisable for incubator operators to obtain stock from high-hatching families and follow good feeding and management practices.

Hatching eggs should be stored where the temperature is below 68 degrees and above freezing. For best results they should not be kept more than eight days.

Other experimental findings revealed that high egg production during the winter and spring months did not harm hatchability. Eggs from high-producing hens hatched better than those from low producers.

Cross breeding improved hatchability. Turning eggs held from one to seven days before setting did not significantly influence hatching results.

One station found that pullet eggs hatched better than hen eggs.

Give Greens to Poults, Advise Turkey Experts

An experiment conducted by the College of Agriculture in California has developed the fact that turkeys need about twice as much vitamin A as do Leghorn chicks. This vitamin is the one which influences growth and is most abundant in green feed, and in the alfalfa meal commonly used in chick mashes. In addition to the turkey mash, plenty of greens should be fed to poults in order to keep them growing properly. The greens will, in addition to supplying vitamin A, tend to keep the bowels in order and supply the greater bulk that turkeys require in their feed as compared with chickens. When poults are confined to wire floors and sun porches, however, it is necessary to cut the greens very fine, especially when the poults are small, so as to keep them from swallowing big pieces of greens, such as stems, and choking. After the poults are a month old or more they can be trusted with larger clippings of greens.

A Wet Mash Pays

It will pay well to feed the layers a wet mash. It will increase consumption of feed which promotes heavy egg production. If a small amount of milk is available, notes the Missouri Farmer, it will pay to mix this with the mash, otherwise plain water is beneficial. If the mash can be mixed with warm water or milk it will be relished by the birds. They should be fed all of the mixture they can clean up in about 20 minutes. A new theory among investigators as to why a wet mash causes heavier production is that a wet mash stimulates the reproductive organs of the layers rather than increasing the consumption of feed. Suffice it to say, however, that the effects are very beneficial and the extra work is a good investment.

Poultry Matters

Pullets hatched from large eggs will probably lay large eggs.

Students of egg quality and marketing claim that one state loses from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 annually because of eggs being dirty.

New blood should be introduced into small turkey flocks occasionally according to recent results obtained at an experiment station.

Roup is contagious, and if an outbreak occurs those affected should be isolated at once and measures taken to rectify the cause.

The first requisite of an egg is superior interior quality. Size and appearance count for much in getting premium prices.

Absolute cleanliness of drinking utensils at all times will do far more in the prevention of disease than the addition of potassium permanganate to the drinking water.

HISTORIANS IN ODD SQUABBLE

Controversy Over "Prayer" by Washington.

A final paragraph in George Washington's letter on disbanding the Continental army has been the center of a controversy over the general's religious life that swept from New York to embroil historians in the Capital and nearby Virginia.

The battle began when the Freethinkers of America, Inc., filed suit in New York against Trinity church, charging "fraud" in the sale of cards carrying what was represented to be "Washington's prayer for his country."

The Freethinkers charged the church with paraphrasing the final paragraph of a circular letter Washington sent the 13 governors in June, 1783, making a reference to the Deity sound like a prayer. They said Washington, as far as anyone knows, never prayer and that the story of the general praying for the country at Valley Forge and the painting based on it are particularly without basis in fact.

And Washington and Virginia historians, for the most part, backed up the Freethinkers.

Dr. J. C. Fitzpatrick, former Washington authority of the Library of Congress, said that Washington "was not a praying man, but a reverential man." He called the paragraph in controversy a "religious aspiration, not a prayer."

"The passage has to be taken with the rest of the letter to be understood," he said. "Take it away and you destroy the thought behind it."

Digging through musty documents from which he has constructed many an intimate detail on the life of the first President, Charles Callahan of Alexandria entered the fray by agreeing with the Freethinkers that there is no historical basis for the painting of Washington praying at Valley Forge.

Washington served as a vestryman of Truro parish in Virginia for 11 years, Callahan said, adding that to do so "a man had to subscribe to the regulations of the church and take an oath."

"There is substantial evidence that Washington was not only a church worker and a church-going man, but that he was consistent in his affiliation. He was a man of liberal ideas, willing to attend any church, but he conformed entirely to the ritual of the Episcopal church. This was probably because the Episcopal church was the established church.

"The story of Washington praying at Valley Forge was told by Izaak Potts who owned the house which was Gen. Washington's headquarters there. Potts told of coming upon Washington praying in the snow. But we later found that Potts was not at Valley Forge when Washington was there, and that he did not even own the house at that time."

The letter from which the "prayer" was taken, according to Doctor Fitzpatrick, is considered by historians of importance equal to that of his farewell address. In it he gives the governors suggestions on how to handle demobilization and expresses the desire for a federal union.

The original draft is in the manuscript section of the Library of Congress and begins:

"I now make it my earnest prayer . . ."—Washington Post.

Help for the Blind

For an invention that enables a blind person to read any book or paper, the John Price Wetherill medal will be awarded on May 15 to Robert E. Naumburg, of New York, by the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia. Mr. Naumburg's invention, known as the Visagraph, "reads" printed words for the blind with the aid of a photo-electric cell, and embosses each letter, several times enlarged, upon a strip of paper which passes under the finger-tips of the operator. The machine first was tried at Perkins Institution for the Blind, Watertown, Mass., and is regularly used there. Its advantage is that any printed material may be read, and the reader need not know Braille, or any other system for the blind. The characters reproduced by the machine simply are magnified reproductions of the printed letters.—Literary Digest.

In an operation to restore sight by transplanting a healthy cornea to a sightless eye, a Russian surgeon has tried applying vitamin A to prevent the cornea from becoming turbid after a time.

THOUGHT FOR TODAY

It is usually the forward girl who is rather fond of looking back.

"No more tired, let-down feeling for me"

"I reasoned that my red blood corpuscle strength was low and I simply took a course of S.S.S. Tonic and built it back."

IT is all so simple and reasonable. If your physical let-down is caused by lowered red blood corpuscles—which is all too frequent—then S.S.S. Tonic is waiting to help you . . . and will, unless you have a serious organic trouble that demands a physician or surgeon.

Remember, S.S.S. is not just a so-called "tonic." It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying red corpuscles in the blood.

This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved . . . food is better utilized . . . and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should naturally.

You may have the will-power to be "up and doing" but unless your blood is in top notch form you are not fully yourself and you may remark, "I wonder why I tire so easily."

Let S.S.S. help build back your blood tone . . . if your case is not exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food . . . sound sleep . . . steady nerves . . . a good complexion . . . and renewed strength.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today.

WATCH YOUR KIDNEYS!

Be Sure They Properly Cleanse the Blood

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering impurities from the blood stream. But kidneys get functionally disturbed—lag in their work—fail to remove the poisonous body wastes.

Then you may suffer nagging backache, attacks of dizziness, burning, scanty or too frequent urination, getting up at night, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains; feel "all worn out."

Don't delay! For the quicker you get rid of these poisons, the better your chances of good health.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They tend to promote normal functioning of the kidneys; should help them pass off the irritating poisons. Doan's are recommended by users the country over. Get them from any druggist.

MASON CITY CEMETERY COMPANY

Located in Birmingham on 15th Street.

This is a most beautiful spot close to the city where nature lends a pleasant touch to sad occasions, when man in the transition goes to the great beyond. An institution that is well conducted and kept in the very best of condition.

With the age of auto funerals and rapid transit the large and well cared for cemetery has taken its place in our civilization.

During the past decade the private burying ground and small unkept cemetery have fallen into desuetude and are gradually passing away. This cemetery has become a center for the families all over this part of the state.

This well known place is of good proportion and the founders have provided for the coming generations so that families could secure ample accommodations for many years to come. It is located in a beautiful spot of picturesque country where nature has been extremely kind in her lavish distribution of natural beauty. Aside from this the management has the grounds perfectly landscape-gardened and every accommodation for perpetual care is offered to the people.

CALERA STUDENTS CAPITAL VISITORS

CALERA, Ala.—The Junior III Class, of Calera, under the direction of Miss Mamie Bishop, sponsored a trip to the State Capital last Friday. About thirty-five students took the trip. The points of interest that were visited included: the first white house of the Confederacy, the capital building, the art museum, kilby prison, and Maxwell field. The entire day consisted of intense study by all the pupils making the trip.

These trips are a yearly feature of the Calera Junior III Class activity program.

This Class is one of the most active to ever graduate from Calera. Through their efforts the stage has been provided with a complete set of new furniture. They plan to present their graduation play, "Crashing Society", within a few weeks.

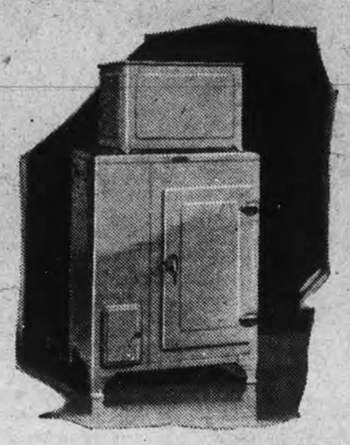
DR. E. M. KLIEN, Optician

Located in Birmingham at Pizitz Department Store.



Dr. Klien is a very well known optometrist, whose efficient service has brought a large clientele from the city and surrounding territory. Now is the proper time for having this important examination made.

How many people are today wishing they had been fitted with glasses when they were younger? How many more who are now experiencing eye trouble, wish they had consulted an optometrist?

Your eyes are two of the most delicate organs and when irritated require the attention of a scientific expert.

They have attained a very well merited reputation in the correction of troubles which affect children's eyes and the success in this important work deserves the highest commendation. Many very grateful mothers have found that after consultation with them their children improve quickly in their studies and their grades become higher just as soon as the trouble is removed.

Dr. E. M. Klien has made a special study of the eye and is thoroughly competent to fit you with glasses. He is well known throughout this section and his practice as an optometrist is not confined to his home city as many persons from the surrounding territory consult him weekly and the progress he has made in the profession is proof of his ability.

DEPOSIT INSURANCE

An Extra Measure of Protection

The management of this Bank always has taken every possible precaution to safeguard the funds of its depositors. In keeping with this traditionally conservative policy, deposits made here are now insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The insurance thus provided applies to all deposits, including personal and corporate deposits, deposits of public funds, and trust funds awaiting investment.

At the present time, the maximum amount insured for each depositor is $5,000. This does not mean that a depositor with an account of, say $500, is guaranteed $5,000, but it does mean that his $500 is fully insured. Deposit insurance is for your protection. It is a permanent part of the Nation's law.

NEW INVENTION ELIMINATES RADIO STATIC & FADING

NEW YORK, N. Y.—A new system of radio transmission and reception which, it is asserted, will wipe out the effects of static, fading and tube noises has been invented by Maj. Edwin H. Armstrong, professor of electrical engineering at Columbia University, it was announced April 26th.

The new technique will make ultra-short wave broadcasting practical, solve problems of chain television and make possible the transmission of musical sounds far exceeding, in quality, any possible at present, Major Armstrong predicted.

Major Armstrong holds the medal of the Institute of Radio Engineers for his invention of radio regenerative radio circuits.

With the announcement was revealed the nature of secret experiments that have been going on for a year in the tower of the Empire State Building. Major Armstrong told of his work high above New York in which he and a group of close-mouthed friends carried on experimental transmission with the new system.

The fundamental point about the new system, he explained, is the introduction, into the transmission wave, of a characteristic which does not exist in the radio waves produced by nature in causing static. The receiving set is so arranged that it will pick up only radio waves having the characteristic properties, and discard those from natural sources.

FARM EDITORS ENDORSE LAND-PURCHASE BILL

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Farm journal editors of the United States have endorsed the Bankhead bill proposing to finance tenants and share croppers in becoming landowners. The bill also has the endorsement of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace as "One of the most fundamental bills before Congress."

Tenants, landowners, share croppers, and others interested in seeing the bill enacted into law are writing their senators and representatives in Washington, states Senator Bankhead, who expresses the belief that Congress will pass the bill if those interested want it passed and act accordingly.

The bill proposes to set up an organization similar to the Home Owners Loan Corporation with power to issue up to $1,000,000,000 in bonds to finance tenants and share croppers who desire to purchase land and farm it in their own right.

"I want the rentals now being paid by tenants and share croppers to finance the purchase of a farm," said Senator Bankhead. The bill would not put into cultivation additional land but would enable tenants to purchase land already in cultivation from present landowners.

State Economizes In Sale Of Bonds

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The Alabama Bond Refunding Board last Tuesday sold $16,920,000 worth of state refunding bonds to a syndicate of Alabama and Eastern banks at 3.8 per cent interest, 1.2 per cent less than the interest paid when the bonds were voted nearly two years ago.

The lower interest rate will save the state $200,000 annually, according to Gov. Bibb Graves, who personally represented the state in the transaction.

Firms represented in the purchasing syndicate are the Chase National Bank of New York; the First National Banks of Birmingham, Mobile and Montgomery; the First of Boston Corp.; Halsey; Stuart & Co.; Lehman Brothers and Ward-Sterne & Co., of Birmingham, Alabama.

FARMERS ADVISED TO SIDE - DRESS COTTON

AUBURN, Ala.—Side application of either nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime should be made to cotton at first cultivation after chopping for best results, reports J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist, who advises that "it is not advisable to apply side-dressing later than this date."

Cotton following winter legumes should not receive side-dressing.

ALABAMA HENS NEED MORE YELLOW CORN

AUBURN, Ala.—By properly caring for the hens which supply the egg and chicken meat needs of the state, Alabama farmers can create a market for 4,000,000 bushels of yellow corn each year.

"Roughly speaking," says John E. Ivey, newly appointed extension poultry specialist, "it will require one bushel of corn for each hen per year."

WORK FUND IS 68 PER CENT OF '34 U. S. FARM PRODUCTS

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The National Industrial Conference Board in a summary issued last Sunday said the $4,880,000,000 works-relief fund amounts to 17 per cent of all wages and salaries earned in the United States in 1933.

The board, which is a research organization supported by large corporations, further found the fund is about 68 per cent of the value of all the products of American farms in 1934, more than twice the total of dividends paid in 1933, and about 94 per cent of all interest paid in 1933.

"It would take the whole working population of the United States 37 days to produce this $4,880,000,000 work-relief figure," it was stated by the board.

JACK WEST CALLED BY DEATH, WED., APRIL 24, IN TEXAS

Friends throughout Shelby County were shocked to hear of the tragic death of Jack West which occurred in Fort Worth, Texas, on Wednesday, April 24th. Mr. West was a popular graduate of Shelby County High School, and had made good in his professional work in Texas where he had been for the past four years. While in a cafe in Fort Worth, he became involved indirectly in an argument with a man whom he had known only a day or two, who picked up a gun in the cafe and shot him.

Mr. West was a popular boy and made a notable record on the athletic field while in Columbiana. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank West.

Funeral services were conducted from Bethel Church on Saturday morning, with interment in Fourmile Cemetery, Walton in charge.

Surviving Mr. West are his parents; three brothers: Gip, Norman, and Pearson West; and one sister, Mrs. Joe Stone, all of Columbiana.

The Democrat joins a host of friends in extending sympathy to the bereaved family.

Shelby County High To Meet Montevallo

After the Free program presented to citizens of Shelby County, on May 3rd, by the Columbiana Hardware Company, when Captain Hicks will demonstrate his crack shooting ability using Peter's Cartridges, the ball park will be opened for a game between Shelby County High School Baseball team and Montevallo High School.

A small admission fee will be charged by the School for all those desiring to remain for the game.

FARMERS BUYING MORE FARM LAND

Farmers are manifesting a greater desire to own farms, says W. I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration, who reports that during the six-month period ending February 28, 1935, the twelve Federal land banks disposed of 3,664 farms compared to 1,968 farms during a similar period a year earlier.

SIX FUNDAMENTALS IN RELIEF PROGRAM MAPPED BY F. D. R.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—President Roosevelt last Sunday night listed these six "fundamental principles" for allocating the $4,880,000,000 work-relief fund:

"The projects should be useful.

"Projects shall be of a nature that a considerable proportion of the money spent will go into wages for labor.

"Projects which promise ultimate return to the federal treasury of a considerable proportion of the costs, will be sought.

"Funds allotted for each project should be actually and promptly spent and not held over until later years.

"In all cases projects must be of a character to give employment to those on the relief rolls.

"Projects will be allocated to localities or relief areas in relation to the number of workers on relief rolls in those areas."

FARMERS' WEEK TO BE HELD JULY 30 TO AUGUST 2, 1935

AUBURN, Ala.—Farmers' Week, the annual gathering of Alabama men and women, will be held at the Alabama Polytechnic Institute here July 30 through August 2, reports Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of the Institute and director of the State Extension Service.

"It will be a great meeting for both farm men and women of the State," he said. In addition to being Farmers' Week, it will be the annual meeting of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and of the Alabama Council of Home Demonstration Clubs. Every county in the state will be represented by a large delegation, he said.

Arrangements are being made for state and nationally known speakers to appear. Other high-lights of the gathering will be leadership recognition of farm men and women, also tours of the Experiment Station.

ALABAMA FARMERS GET U. S. PAYMENTS

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama cotton, corn-hog, and tobacco farmers have received $19,826,202.33 in rental and benefit payments, reports Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service. Cotton farmers have been paid $19,508,817.13 for plowing up and reducing their cotton acreage; corn-hog farmers $314,332 for reducing their production, and tobacco farmers $3,053 for joining in the reduction program.

In an effort to increase the farmer's income the AAA has paid farmers of the country $630,606,962 in rental and benefit payments for participating in adjustment programs and has spent $214,651,202 in connection with removal, utilization and conservation of surplus agricultural commodities.

Practically all of this has been paid from the processing tax.

In emphasizing what the program has meant to farmers, agricultural leaders point to the fact that the gross farm income from crops and livestock increased from $5,331,000,000 in 1932, the year before the adjustment program started, to $7,200,000,000 in 1934, an increase of $1,869,000,000.

They also state that the price of cotton has increased from less than 6 cents to 12 cents per pound; wheat from 35 cents to 85 cents per bushel; corn from 20 cents to 82 cents per bushel; cottonseed from $9.00 per ton to $40; hogs from 3 cents to 8 cents per pound; beef-cattle from 4 cents to over 6 cents per pound; and equal advances in the prices of other farm commodities.

FERTILIZER TAG SALES HIGHER THAN YEAR AGO

Fertilizer sales are 10.9 per cent higher in Alabama this year than last, according to a comparative statement of fertilizer tag sales released by the Department of Agriculture and Industries.

R. J. Goode, commissioner, reports that to April 19 this year fertilizer tags had been sold for 384,100 tons compared with 346,250 tons to the same date last year and 215,200 tons to the same time in 1933.

CORN NEEDS SIDE-DRESS 40 DAYS AFTER PLANTING

AUBURN, Ala.—If corn cannot follow winter legumes, side-dress 40 days after planting with 100 pounds per acre of either nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime, advises J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist. "In a large number of experiments and demonstrations conducted at various points in the State 100 pounds of nitrate gave an increase of about 7 bushels.

4-H CLUB GIRLS TO MEET IN AUBURN, MAY 28 TO JUNE 1

AUBURN, Ala.—Plans have been completed for some 300 4-H club girls from every section of the state to attend the annual 4-H Girls Short Course to be held here, May 28 to June 1st.

Miss Elizabeth DeLony, newly-appointed state girls' 4-H club agent, has arranged an elaborate program consisting of instruction and demonstrations in many important phases of club work. Also judging contests will be held in clothing, foods, food preservation, and home improvement.

Among the practical demonstrations and lectures for the girls will be those in landscaping, poultry, applied entomology, and the writing of 4-H club news.

PRICES OF GOODS AFFECTED LITTLE BY PROCESSING TAX

The cotton processing tax amounts to only 3 cents on a work shirt and 8 cents on a pair of overalls, says Cully A. Cobb, director, division of cotton, Agricultural Adjustment Administration, in pointing out that "there is nothing to indicate that the processing tax, within itself, has served to restrict the consumption of cotton."

"On the cotton used in manufacturing a yard of calico the processing tax adds only 1 cent; on the cotton used in the manufacture of a yard of muslin it amounts to 1.3 cents; on a work shirt it amounts to approximately 3 cents; and on a pair of overalls it amounts to about 8 cents," he reports.

The cotton processing tax amounts to 4.2 cents per pound net weight or 4 cents per pound gross weight. So far the cotton processing tax has amounted to approximately $115,000,000 per year, or around 90 cents per capita annually.

4-H Club Enrollment Shows Big Increase

AUBURN, Ala.—Eighteen thousand Alabama farm boys are enrolled in 4-H club work, announces T. A. Sims, state 4-H club director. This is an increase of about 5,000 over last year.

The boys are engaged in cotton, corn, pig, peanut, poultry, and other projects with the work under the supervision of the extension service of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. 4-H club enrollment with 1,250 members, followed by Butler with 800, and Etowah County leads the state in Monroe with 750.

VINCENT OPERETTA SET FOR MAY 3RD

VINCENT, Ala.—The Elementary School of Vincent, Alabama, will present an operetta on Friday night, May 3rd, with a cast of 65 children. "Down Among The Fairies" is the attractive title of this artistic program. The leading characters are Evelyn Davis, Josephine Black, "Maidie" Gloria Elliott, who takes the lovely part of the Queen of the Fairies, and Lucile Lowe, who represents "Moonbeam". "Puck" is played by Ferrell McCranie.

The play will will start promptly at 8 o'clock and the admission is only 10 cents.

The Operetta is directed by Beth Wallace and Hattie Wallace Bullard. The public is cordially invited to attend.

STATE AUTO TAG PRICE CUT 20 PER CENT; 40 IN 1936

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Alabama automobile owners will receive a reduction of only 20 per cent in the price of their license tags this year, but a 40 per cent slash will become effective in 1936.

This was the program agreed on April 26 by Governor Graves and a group of legislative recess committeemen at a conference in the executive office.

It was decided that a reduction of more than 20 per cent this year is impossible due to the fact that Alabama must put up $2,600,000 to match Federal highway funds.

The administration measure to be introduced in the legislature next week will make the 20 per cent reduction effective October 1, 1935, and order the 40 per cent slash effective one year later.

Cut Revenue $400,000

Legislators attending the conference included Sen. W. O. Walton of Chambers, and Representatives John C. Coleman of Marshall and J. R. Wallace of Clarke.

The 20 per cent reduction will decrease revenues of the Highway Department approximately $400,000 a year.

State Peanut Farmers Sign 10,389 Contracts

AUBURN, Ala.—Exactly 10,389 Alabama farmers this year signed peanut reduction contracts, reports Dr. R. S. Sugg, extension livestock specialist, who announces that the AAA will pay these farmers benefit payments of $8 per ton based on their 1934 production of $2 per acre on their 1933 allotted acres, whichever is the greatest. The payments will be made after the crop is harvested next fall.

Strawberries Are Rich In Vitamin C

Strawberries, which are being harvested by the carloads in Alabama at present, are rich in Vitamin C and rank as an "excellent source of this vitamin which is almost always the most expensive vitamin on the budget but one that no good consumer dares omit from the diet," says the Consumer's Guide published by the United States Department of Agriculture.

"A serving of strawberries weighing four ounces give only a little less than a half cup of orange juice and easily takes care of your vitamin C requirement for the day," advises the department.

President Reveals Plans for Work Relief Program—Frank Walker His Chief Aid—Auto Workers Strike in Toledo.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

PLANS for spending the $4,880,000,000 work relief fund are being made rapidly, parts of the general scheme being revealed to the public almost every day. The President will be the final arbiter but practically all the federal agencies will participate and three new ones have been announced by Mr. Roosevelt. These will handle rural rehabilitation, rural electrification and grade crossing elimination.

Frank Walker

Standing at the President's right hand is Frank C. Walker, former treasurer of the Democratic party. He has replaced Donald Richberg as chairman of the National Emergency council and is the head of a new division in that body known as the division of application and information. Under his direction all proposals will be sorted out and data on them from various government units will be co-ordinated. Then they will be handed on, with Mr. Walker's recommendations, to a new works allotment board which is headed by Secretary Harold Ickes. These two additions to the alphabet groups in Washington are known as DAI and WAB.

In a press conference the President named these eight types of work which will be undertaken, with the amount of money to be spent on each:

1. Highways, roads, streets, grade crossing elimination, and express highways, $800,000,000.

2. Rural rehabilitation, relief in stricken agricultural areas, water conservation, water diversion, irrigation, reclamation, rural industrial communities, and subsistence homesteads, $500,000,000.

3. Rural electrification, $100,000,000.

4. Housing, low cost housing in rural and urban areas, reconditioning, and remodeling, $450,000,000.

5. Assistance for educational, professional, and clerical persons and other "white collar" unemployed, $300,000,000.

6. Citizen Conservation corps, $600,000,000.

7. Sanitation, soil erosion, stream pollution, reforestation, flood control, rivers and harbors, $350,000,000.

8. Loans, grants, or both, to cities, counties, states, and other political subdivisions for public works, $900,000,000.

The rural rehabilitation work will be directed by Rexford G. Tugwell, under-secretary of agriculture, and he will not be responsible to Secretary Wallace but will have a free hand to carry out his schemes for moving families from marginal lands, shifting stranded industrial workers to new, planned rural communities and building cities outside of large urban centers to relieve slum congestion.

Asked as to how much was ready to be spent the President recalled that $600,000,000 already had been put forward for the CCC and that Public Works Administrator Harold L. Ickes had applications totaling more than $1,000,000,000.

In conclusion, the Chief Executive said that there was a tendency to make loans instead of grants wherever possible, the loans to be long-term ones at low interest rates.

Appointment of Mr. Walker leaves Mr. Richberg free, as the President said, to devote his time to the NRA during the period of pending legislation in congress and litigation in the Supreme court.

ORGANIZED labor opened its attempt to obtain recognition in the automobile industry with a strike of workers in the Toledo plant of the Chevrolet Motor company. The factory was closed down immediately, though only a part of the force joined in the strike. Union pickets were placed about it, but city police and deputy sheriffs were on hand to see that there was no disorder.

President Sloan of General Motors corporation issued this statement in New York.

"The vital question involved is whether General Motors corporation is willing to sign an agreement for a closed shop recognizing the local union as the exclusive representative of all the employees of the Toledo plant. This General Motors will not do."

The union, in a lengthy statement, said its committee "has done everything in its power to meet with the management and to secure an amicable and fair adjustment of the matter of wages, hours and union recognition and various other grievances.

"The management refused to sign a contract of any kind and flatly refused every section of the proposed contract with the exception of two minor points."

The company offered to make wage readjustments and give a 5 per cent general wage increase, show no discrimination against union men, and agreed to respect seniority rights as provided by the automobile labor board.

Secretary Perkins sent Thomas J. Williams, Labor department conciliator, to Toledo to see what might be done. President Green of the A. F. of L. said there was grave danger that the Toledo strike might spread to other automotive plants.

Leo C. Wollman, chairman of the National Automobile Labor board, reported that that body had completed a canvass of 163,150 workers in American automobile plants and found that 68.6 per cent of them showed no affiliation with any labor organization. The various employees' associations grouped together ranked second with 21,774 members, equal to 13.3 per cent of the total. The American Federation of Labor was third with 14,057, or 8.6 per cent, while the Associated Automobile Workers of America were fourth with 6,083, or 3.7 per cent. The remainder of the vote was split between the Mechanics Educational society and ten other unions.

WITHOUT benefit of gag rule but with perfect party discipline, the administration's social security bill was jammed through the house substantially as President Roosevelt wants it. The final vote was 372 to 33. It may be some weeks before it is passed by the senate, for the senate finance committee, to which it was referred, is busy just now with NRA extension and veterans' bonus payment.

Speaker Byrns

Leading features of the measure as passed by the house are:

Grants to states for old age assistance (pensions) on a 50-50 basis, but for no individual will the federal government's share exceed $15 per month.

Compulsory old age benefits for persons over sixty-five on basis of salary earned during working lifetime, payments ranging from $15 to $85 a month. Income tax on pay rolls of employees starting with 1 per cent in 1937 and graduated upward to 3 per cent in 1949; excise tax on employers in same amounts. This will mean a total pay roll tax of 6 per cent by 1949.

Unemployment insurance. Tax on employer of 1 per cent on pay rolls in 1936, 2 per cent for 1937, and 3 per cent thereafter.

Social security board as new bureau of government in the executive branch with three members appointed by the President.

Federal grants to states for maternal and child health service, an appropriation of $3,800,000.

Federal grants to states for public health service, an appropriation of $8,000,000.

Speaker Byrns and other majority leaders were elated by the immense majority by which the bill carried because, as they asserted, it was put through without any pressure from the White House. Mr. Byrns said: "We got no orders from the President, so help me Almighty God."

GEN. W. W. ATTERBURY, veteran official of the Pennsylvania railroad, has retired as president of the company eight months before that would have been necessary under its regulations, because of ill health. The directors unanimously elected Martin W. Clement to succeed him. The new president of the great system was born 53 years ago in Sunbury, Pa., and entered the service of the road in 1901 as a rodman. His promotion was steady and nine years ago he became the vice president.

M. W. Clement

General Atterbury had this to say of his successor:

"Since he became vice president, Clement has been intimately associated with me in conducting the company's affairs and in our relations with the other railroads and with the government.

"The remarkable results achieved by the company last year, one of the most difficult periods the railroad has ever experienced, were largely due to Clement's leadership. His manifest capabilities have commended him not only to his associate directors and officers, but also to the executives of other railroads with whom he has been working in recent years in the interest of the railroad industry as a whole.

"Moreover, he enjoys the confidence, respect and co-operation of the entire Pennsylvania railroad organization."

MORE than three thousand persons lost their lives in a series of earthquake shocks that occurred in the most thickly populated section of Formosa, the island off the Chinese coast which Japan acquired in 1895. It was the worst disaster of the kind in the Orient since the Tokyo-Yokohama quake of 1923. The number of injured was estimated at fully 12,000, and a quarter of a million were rendered homeless. Property damage was placed at $28,000,000. Half a dozen sizable towns and many villages were completely destroyed, and fires and heavy rain added to the dangers and distress of the afflicted people.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—Grade crossing elimination is one phase of work relief that can be started 15 days after the President says "Go!" despite Mr. Roosevelt's own recent warning that this was one type of project that would be the slowest in getting under way. The only reason for the 15-day delay is that this length of time is required for advertisement for bids.

Despite the President's expressed concern about delay on grade crossings incidental to the acquiring of the land, approval of the projects, and selection of only important highways crossing mainline railroads, the fact is that all difficulties have been solved by the public roads bureau of the Department of Agriculture. Slightly more than one thousand projects are ready for bids, 756 more will be ready inside a year, and 2,302 additional will be ready within two years.

So officials of the bureau are champing at the bit, and wondering why the President takes such a pessimistic attitude.

The President's point about acquiring the land is not involved, for in the first thousand projects, now ready, options on the land needed have been acquired by the states in which the projects are located, and the states understand thoroughly that the state treasuries must pay for the land, with the federal government paying for the work, materials and overhead.

The total number of projects for the first year is 1,756, for over a thousand of which the land options are in hand. The total cost would be $184,314,000. The total number of additional projects to be ready within a year is 2,302, at a total cost of $277,567,500. So that within a year work could be started on a total of 4,058 projects, at a total estimated cost of $461,881,500.

In addition there is much other projected work which is ready to go just waiting for White House approval now that the work relief bill is a law.

The bureau of roads is also ready to start at the flash from the White House on road contracts. These are parceled out on the time-honored formula laid down by law, as between the states, so the figures are not so interesting.

Takes to Mining

The government is about to engage in the mining business! It will certainly go in for some other minerals. Outside the precious metals, the government proposes to mine only metals which would not complicate the existing mining situation, or compete with products already in the surplus class. For example, there would be no mining of copper, lead or zinc.

Most important of the metals under consideration, besides gold and silver, are tin, quicksilver, chromium, nickel, tungsten, antimony, and manganese. Incidentally, there is plenty of political dynamite in the last, perhaps enough to eliminate it. Not directly but indirectly. The idea is, if manganese mining were developed on a big scale in this country, there might be a move later on to put a sharp tariff on it, whereupon the steel companies would have to pay higher prices than at present, which in turn would make their competition with Belgian steel—its cost lowered in the United States by the recently approved reciprocal trade treaty—more difficult.

In addition to these metals, two other minerals are under consideration. These are special grades of mica and graphite.

There is a bill pending in the senate, introduced by Senator James P. Pope of Idaho, which would allocate a hundred million dollars from the work relief fund for mining. This bill is not expected to pass. But while this is down the same street, the bill is not necessary if the administration wants to act. It has plenty of authority under existing law. The projects could be gotten under way as pure work relief on force account, as operations not arranged by contracts are called.

Experts Approve

The gold and silver mining, decision to enter which has practically been made, are almost ideal from the government standpoint. The experts advising President Roosevelt insist there is no doubt whatever that mines could be worked by the government—for gold and silver—which would produce enough not only to pay the wages of the men employed, and the total cost of operation, but actually to yield a small profit besides. And the beauty of the plan, they point out, is that there would be no element whatever of competition with private business. The government would just take the gold and silver and put it in the treasury. If there were no profit at all, no harm would be done. If there were a profit it would be turned back to the work relief fund for employment in other directions.

Some of the other metals mentioned, especially tin and nickel, are regarded as vital from a national defense standpoint. This country is deficient in them. Mining experts are most anxious to undertake development in this direction.

The main problem of course is that there is a very large stranded mining population, located for the most part near at hand to the points proposed for these government operations. The men are skilled miners, so that no training would be necessary. They would be far happier, carrying on their accustomed work, it is argued, than in working on grade crossings or on public roads, for example. Anyway, there is not a lack, but a surplus, of men needing jobs who could be put to work on grade crossings and roads.

So far the mine experts insist projects are in as good shape as any for putting men to work immediately. All that would be needed would be the Presidential O. K. And they expect that very shortly.

Cotton a Problem

With the AAA under fire from so many quarters, King Cotton remains one of the most important world problems, threatening to save or wreck the administration's plans to lift the farmer up to that "parity" of purchasing power which President Roosevelt is so fond of discussing.

Most southern statesmen wave aside so-called threats to American supremacy in cotton. They contend that nowhere else in the world can cotton be produced successfully to compete with the United States. Either the cost is too high per pound, or the quality is too low, they insist.

The threat involved in Brazilian expansion in cotton growing has been discussed at length in these dispatches, including the confidential view of the present Brazilian administration which is that the United States efforts to hold the price of cotton up will crash, as did their own with respect to coffee, and therefore they are not too optimistic. But they hasten on to add that they can produce good cotton at a profit at 6 cents a pound.

This season the United States exported to Great Britain 563,000 bales, as against 1,036,000 last season, and 1,045,000 the season before.

This is partly explained by two things. Japan has finally passed Great Britain as a producer of cotton textiles, and so has become the chief consumer of the raw staple.

But the disturbing fact about the two previous paragraphs is that the United States exported to the entire Orient this season 1,348,000 bales, as against 1,689,000 last season and 1,598,000 the season before.

In fact, the total exports of cotton this season from the United States were 3,565,000 bales, as against 6,033,000 bales last season, and 6,046,000 bales the previous season.

Not an encouraging picture!

Disturbing Facts

Two seasons ago the United States produced 12,961,000 bales of cotton. Last season 12,712,000 bales. This season 9,619,000 bales. AAA restrictions.

What happened meanwhile in the rest of the world? India's record for the last three seasons was 4,100,000, 4,500,000 and 3,800,000 bales. China produced 2,200,000 this season, 2,000,000 last, and 1,871,000 two years ago.

Russia, in fourth place, is crawling up. The increase there is from 1,778,000 to 1,889,000 to 1,937,000 this season. Egypt increased more than half a million bales over two years ago.

Then comes Brazil, generally regarded as the real menace. Two years ago she produced only 373,000 bales. Last year 807,000 bales. This year 1,250,000 bales. Next season?

Peru increased in the three crops from 265,000 bales to 325,000 bales; Argentina from 150,000 to 225,000; Mexico from 95,000 to 200,000; The Sudan from 121,000 to 170,000; Korea from 135,000 to 150,000; Manchuria from 56,000 to 100,000; Belgian Congo from 38,000 to 90,000; Turkey from 60,000 to 90,000, and Greece from 22,000 to 50,000.

The really disturbing fact comes in adding these and other foreign increases in cotton production together. America has decreased her production 3,000,000 bales in the three seasons. The rest of the world this season produced 12,489,000 bales, as against 10,946,000 two years ago.

Defenders of the AAA program insist that the world this year has used up a large quantity of surplus cotton, and that prospects for next year are therefore bright despite this increasing foreign production. Meanwhile the dust storms in Texas and Oklahoma, the two biggest cotton producing states, seem to promise further curtailment this year even than had been planned, and correspondingly increased incentive to foreign cotton producers to expand, the short American crop promising a continued high price, even if there were no AAA.

Planning New Taxes

A one per cent tax on all life insurance premiums and a tax on all movie admissions above 10 cents—instead of the present limit of 40 cents—are among the levies that the treasury will recommend to congress some time before this session adjourns. Some of the treasury experts, who were ordered to the job of figuring out the new taxes, liked the idea of the sales tax. But President Roosevelt was consulted about this, and at once turned thumbs down.

One thing the treasury experts do not know—the motives for their being ordered to get up this list of taxes. They are not sure whether this is a bona fide list, which the administration will push through if possible anyhow, or whether this is a "bluff" list, intended by the President to be used as a club in his expected veto message on the soldier bonus.

The reason for their doubt is the suggestions they have received, including the two named above. Because their own thought seems to be that the taxes the administration seems to favor are calculated to stir up more resentment than would be justified by the amount of money they would raise. Especially the movie tax.

This line of reasoning drives the experts to figure that the President is merely getting up a highly objectionable line of taxes so as to get the country excited against the soldier bonus.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A SHOT SPOILS A PLOT

IT WAS only a little "four-pounder" and the small cannon balls which it fired at the British sloop, "Vulture," as she lay at anchor below West Point couldn't possibly have injured her even if they had hit her. But those same cannon balls were destined to expose the treason plot of Benedict Arnold, to send Maj. John Andre to his death and to save the United States the three years' work and the three million dollars it had spent on the fortress at West Point, not to mention their saving the Patriots' cause from coming to a sudden and untimely end.

The "Vulture" had come up the Hudson, bringing Major Andre, adjutant-general of the British army, to establish contact with Arnold, and to perfect the plans for his handing over West Point to the enemy. Andre was put ashore to meet Arnold at the home ture" dropped anchor to await his return.

A certain Colonel Livingston regarded the presence of the enemy ship as something of an insult. He asked Col. John Lamb to lend him a gun and some powder. Lamb wrote to him "Firing at a ship with a four pounder is in my opinion, a waste of powder; as the damage she will sustain, is not equal to the expense."

But Livingston persisted until he got the gun. Then he opened fire on the "Vulture" and his bombardment was so annoying that the "Vulture" shifted her moorings and dropped farther down the river.

When Andre was ready to return, the oarsmen hired to row him out to the British ship were too lazy to go the extra distance. So the only thing to do was to send him south by land. Smith provided plain clothes and a horse, guided him for a short distance, then sent him on his way. But Andre got lost, blundered into the hands of three American militiamen who turned him over to a Continental officer. The result is history—the betrayal of Arnold's treason plot and the saving of West Point.

FACE ON THE COIN

KING LOUIS XVI of France lost his head twice. The first time was over a very trifling annoyance but it led to the second time when he lost it over the block of the guillotine. And that was permanent!

When it became certain that nothing could stop the French Revolution the king decided to escape from the Tuileries with his family. On the night of June 21, 1791, a big coach trundled away from the palace with the members of the royal family inside.

At the little town of Ste. Menehould, it was necessary to change the horses. Beyond Menehould was a regiment of royal troops ready to escort the king across the frontier. The journey was almost over.

But the grooms at the post-house were slow and the king, tired from the strain of the long ride, was irritable. For just the moment his majesty raised the curtain of the coach window. He wanted to see how much longer the clumsy grooms would delay his departure.

Among the bystanders idly watching the torchlit scene was Drouet, the village postmaster. He saw the face in the window. But no! It was impossible. It could not be the king of France. Drouet reached into his pocket and took out a coin that had just been minted. The face on the coin was the face he had seen in the coach.

As the equipage turned off the main road and lumbered north through the Argonne forest Drouet pursued it. Reaching Varennes, he roused the agent of the Commune. The arrest of the royal fugitives followed an hour later. Soon the king was on his way back to Paris with his queen, Marie Antoinette, for a tragic interview with Monsieur Guillotine.

A CHANCE REMARK

ISAAC MERRIT SINGER was the son of a millwright and he wanted to be a machinist. So he became one, also a successful inventor. Soon he was interested in the possibilities of the sewing machine which was then being talked about. He borrowed $40 from a friend and worked for eleven days, eating only one meal and sleeping very little. He got a machine assembled, but it would not work.

Singer toiled late into the night, and, then, lost in discouragement, started to go home. The friend who had lent him the money was with him. The two men walked through the streets of Boston silently. The final trouble with the machine had been too much. It would not make right stitches.

Worn out with the long strain, Singer stopped to rest on a pile of boards outside a deserted building. Suddenly the friend said "It strikes me peculiar! All the loose loops of thread were on the upper side of the cloth!"

In a flash the inventor saw the way out of the trouble. They turned at once back to the shop and Singer fumbled with the tension screw . . . it worked! His machine sewed perfect stitches.

As Stephen hung up the telephone receiver, chuckling, Miss Ordway brought in his mail. In it he found a registered parcel that had been through the custom house, with duty prepaid on it. It contained the finest and most expensive combination stop-watch and timepiece he had ever seen, and a note that read:

"Dear Doctor Burt:

"I know it would not be au fait for me to ask you for a bill for professional services, for I realize that what you did for me was done as one human being to another and quite without thought of financial remuneration. Moreover, I prefer to remain forever your debtor. You will never know what you have done for me. Christ, restoring life to the dead son of the widow of Nain, performed no greater miracle than did you in restoring life and happiness to my dead soul. I would try to thank you if words were not so pitifully inadequate to express the profundity of my gratitude. Will you not please accept the enclosed trifle as a token of that gratitude, and add one more debt to those already owed you by me?

"It is not easy to learn to live with my secret, now that I have found it out. I am trying to regard the past as one harks back in memory to a very serious illness. Some days, when I have achieved sufficient courage I am curious about my other self, evolved from darkness. There are blanks in my life. Perhaps you can fill them in. Perhaps you will not care to, knowing that they are better left blank. I do not think, however, that I was ever terribly wicked. If so, I have no recollection of it.

"Your grateful
"Penelope."

"Old Mother Nature is speaking to Penelope," he soliloquized, and replaced his father's old watch with the one Penelope had sent him. "Give Nature a chance—give her an even break—and she'll prove herself the greatest physician of all."

After some consideration he wrote the following to Penelope:

"Come home and let me iron out the few remaining wrinkles so your life will be as smooth as you could wish. The watch is wonderful. Thanks and I think you are very wonderful, too. Love as usual.

"Stephen."

It occurred to him to tuck that last phrase in for good measure. Love—not merely the love of a man for a woman but the love that is a fine friendship—was, he knew, very necessary to Penelope. She must, he knew, be assured that in all the world somebody really cared. Nobody knew better than he the wreckage that kindness and love denied can make of human lives; never a day passed without leaving him evidence of this.

He was not getting quite his little slice of life. Money, success, the joy of accomplishment, professional standing, the respect of his colleagues, he had, plus some good friends and true. But he was lonely.

He decided not to dine alone. It would be far better to drop in unannounced on Lanny and Dan, take pot luck for dinner.

CHAPTER XII

It was late fall. Stephen had just returned from his vacation; it was his first day back at the office and he was a bit rebellious at the flood of patients that awaited him. He finally got rid of the last one at five-thirty, and following his custom, settled back for a pipeful of tobacco, when Miss Ordway entered.

"There's a young lady calling," she announced. "She says she is Miss Elliott."

"I don't know her, Miss Ordway. A prospective patient?"

"I imagine she is. I didn't ask."

"Tell her it's beyond office hours and suggest that the call during office hours tomorrow."

Miss Ordway departed to deliver the message, but returned presently to say that the young lady begged to be permitted to see him. "Very well, show her in," he acquiesced irritably, "but remember Professor Finnegan if she stays too long."

Miss Elliott entered. Stephen rose and waved her to a chair. Then: "Well, Miss Elliot, what seems to be the trouble?"

"Does my general appearance indicate to you, even remotely, that I am one who requires the services of a neurologist and psychiatrist?" she asked him.

Stephen smiled. "Scarcely. What is it, then? You want a subscription to something?"

"How astute you are, Doctor. I am soliciting subscriptions to a fund designed to furnish expert medical attention to a very deserving public servant. I refer to Detective Sergeant Patrick Joseph Flynn."

"I know him, Miss Elliott. What's wrong with Flynn?"

"His blood pressure seems to be very high—"

"Nothing doing, Miss Elliott," Stephen interrupted. "I admit I sold this terrible Flynn the notion that he had high blood pressure, but I did that for a reason I do not care to explain. The man has the arteries of a boy. What's Flynn to you? And just who might you be?"

"You have my name. What I want to know is this: Are you ashamed to take me out to dinner?"

"No, of course not." Stephen blinked. "I appear eminently respectable?"

"Quite. In fact, a most presentable lady."

"Not so homely, eh?"

"On the contrary. But I shall not go to dinner with you."

"Why?"

"Well, while the experience might be delightful, I think you're too pert."

The lovely face drooped sorrowfully. "Oh, Stephen, would you be that mean to poor little Penelope?"

"Good god of love!" Stephen almost yelled. "Are you my little Penelope?"

"Of course I am. Oh, Stephen, you great booby, not to recognize me!"

He came from behind his desk, took her fiercely by the shoulders and gazed down at her, too amazed to speak. "That's a pretty good second-hand nose, isn't it?" Penelope queried, with just the suspicion of a quaver in her tone. "Don't tell me you disapprove. I adore it myself."

Very soberly he quoted:

"And you, my sweet Penelope, out there somewhere you wait for me,
With buds of roses in your hair, and kisses on your mouth."

"Oh, Stevie!" she whispered. "Take one."

He took three, and Penelope rested contentedly in his arms.

He hugged her fraternally. "My dear, dear girl," he declared, "if I were a praying man I'd get right down on my knees and send up a prayer of gratitude to Omnipotence. You're well?"

"Oh, yes, indeed I am," the girl cried with a catch in her voice, "I'm happy—not perfectly happy but—hug me! Oh, Stephen, Stephen, it was so hard not to come back when I received your cablegram. But I had to fight things out and I didn't want to come home until I could meet you bravely. Stephen, are you truly glad to see me again?"

"I am," he answered, and marveled that he should be so glad as he was.

"With Buds of Roses in Your Hair, and Kisses on Your Mouth."

His heart, for some mad reason, was singing within him.

"Sit down," he commanded, and went back to his own chair. "I'm going to talk to you for five minutes, and then the subject will be taboo for ever. Imagine a long hill with a deep pond at the foot of it—a pond all scummy green and slimy—a miasmatic pond. Imagine that you started running down that hill in the dark, that you stubbed your toe and rolled the remainder of the way—into that pond. Well, that's exactly what happened to you. You were running in the dark and you stubbed your toe and landed in a social stratum equivalent to that scummy pond. Do you remember your foster-mother?"

"Faintly—as one remembers faces and events of one's childhood."

"Well, don't bother to remember her. Her cruelty almost ruined your life, but she is out of your life now, never to return. There are four human beings living who know that Penelope Gatlin and Nance Belden were one and the same. I wrote you a meticulous account of your illness, so you understand all about that, but what I want you to know now is that no power on earth can ever discover you for the purpose of making you pay the penalty for the misdeeds of Nance Belden. By the way, where did you get that name?"

"I had forgotten who I was and I had to have a name. So I picked that one out of a book."

"The new nose has helped wonderfully, hasn't it?"

She nodded. "I do not want to hide from people now, Stephen."

"You must not. That would be depriving the people of the sight of something very sweet and wonderful."

The eager wistfulness in her fine eyes thrilled him. "Do you think I'm sweet and wonderful, Stephen? I want you to, most of all."

"My dear, come here," he commanded, "and sit on my knees just as you used to do when you were Nance Belden and a simple child of impulse—when you hadn't the least compunction about making love to me."

Penelope flushed, but nevertheless obeyed. Stephen drew her cheek down to his. "I want to tell you something," he murmured. "The first night I saw you, my heart went out to you. And when Dan told me how it all happened, I had a tremendous admiration for your courage and wit. I love brainy people, Penelope, and you have brains. I knew what was wrong with you and I felt so sorry for you, my poor dear; I wanted to help you more than I ever wanted to help any human being. I understood all about you; you were just a little lost atom crying so pitifully to be saved, to know love and protection and happiness, that you developed into a game, and Lanny and Dan and I just had to play it to the finish."

"Have you thought of me sometimes?"

"Oftener than I cared to admit to myself. Penelope, I know all about you. In this box on my desk are all the records. Look at them, Penelope dear."

"Then you bothered to find out everything—you cared for me just a little bit?"

"A considerable bit—just how much I didn't realize until now. I want you for my patient always, or as long as we both live."

"What do you mean, Stephen?"

"I'm clumsy, I dare say, but I have more than a suspicion that I've been in love with you—and now that I have you back I'm quite certain I love you enough to want you to marry me. I think my love for you will grow with the years that we are going to spend together."

"And you'll never think back—never be ashamed of me—never regret your course? And are you sure this isn't just pity?"

"Pity is akin to love. It started in pity, sweetheart—and it's growing every minute. Fast work, my Penelope, but I'm not afraid to trust my instinct. You're my woman. You love me a little, do you not?"

"Why," said Penelope soberly, "I've loved you from the day Dan brought me to this office. You were kind to me, and you didn't seem to see my nose. I was so grateful—and ever since I've been waiting out there, somewhere." She hugged him fiercely. "Oh, Stevie, darling, all the rest of my life I shall devote to you. I'll not be oppressive with my love and I'll not be possessive, but I do want the task of adding to your happiness. I know what happiness is. I can appreciate even a little bit—and I'll never forget to cherish what you gave me and give back all I can."

"That way happiness lies. You seem to have the formula," he replied gravely.

The door from Miss Ordway's office opened and the nurse looked in.

"I'm sorry, Doctor Burt, but Professor Finnegan has just telephoned that you are fifteen minutes late to your engagement to meet the great German savant, Herr Doktor Uffitz."

"But I didn't press the button, Miss Ordway."

"I know you didn't, Stevie, dear," Penelope spoke up, "but I did—accidentally."

Miss Ordway blushingly withdrew.

"Who is Professor Finnegan, darling?" Penelope wanted to know.

"Just a fictitious person Lanny and I invented to help rid me of nuts that stay too long, sweetheart. You don't have to consider him at all."

"I wouldn't, of course," said Penelope. "I'm queen here, am I not?"

[THE END.]

Noah Webster's "Best Seller"

In 1783, Noah Webster published "A Grammatical Institute of the English Language." It was written in three parts: A spelling book, a grammar and a reader, observes a writer in Cosmopolitan Magazine. Webster's royalty, though less than one cent a volume, still must have been pretty handsome, for the book was the first of the American best sellers. Before the beginning of the Civil war it was selling at the rate of more than a million copies a year. Webster began work on his famous dictionary in 1807; it was published in 1828, and contained 12,000 words, and about 30,000 definitions that had not appeared in any other dictionary.

Snake Spits Poison

The snake which spits poison is the Egyptian spitting cobra. The mechanism of this spitting appears to be that by compression of the poison glands the venom is forced out through the fangs, and at the same time a blast of air is exhaled. This carries the liquid forward as a spray for a considerable distance, and if it strikes a person in the eyes, intense irritation is set up which results in temporary and sometimes permanent blindness.

Plan Pharos of Columbus

Move to Create Monument to Great Sailor in World He Discovered; Island of Hayti Selected as the Most Appropriate Site.

Some brief descriptions have come down to us about one of the Seven Wonders of the ancient world, the Lighthouse of Alexandria.

It was built on the island of Pharos in the harbor and was connected with the city by the Seven Furlong bridge. Accounts placing the height of its tower at 600 feet are believed to be overdrawn and 400 feet is regarded as more probable. Built by Sostratus of Cnidus, it was begun under Ptolemy I of Egypt and was finished under Ptolemy II, its cost being placed at 800 talents, which by some valuations might be the equivalent of as much as $1,600,000.

From the Pharos of Alexandria is traced an addition to languages and an influence on lighthouse and also on other architecture. The word Pharos came to be applied to lighthouses generally and with some change in spelling is of common usage in certain modern tongues, while pharology became a technical term for lighthouse building. The first of the lighthouses in western Europe, built by the Romans, was called the Pharos of Dover, while the minarets of Mohammedan mosques symbolize lighthouses and in the earlier ones we possibly may see what their model, the original Alexandria structure, looked like. Some influence on the steeples of Christian churches is discerned by writers.

An example of special dignity and worthiness is accordingly followed in elaborate plans for creating, in the western hemisphere, a like wonder of the modern world in a monument to Christopher Columbus. Its site will not be at any modern Alexandria—at any of the great ports of the New world he discovered, but on the island of Hayti, on which he landed during his very first voyage, where he established the first American colony and where his remains were buried in 1536, 30 years after his death. During the partial occupany of that island by Americans of late the project has been advanced to a stage where success seems certain.

If the plan is carried out as contemplated, no other undertaking will be representative of the New world in as complete a sense, for it is proposed that every western national government, large or small, shall contribute to its $2,000,000 cost. A design for a noble structure has already been made, embodying special precautions against a Caribbean peril, the original Pharos having been destroyed by an earthquake in the Thirteenth century.

To some it will seem important to know whether the remains of Columbus still rest in the ancient cathedral of Santo Domingo, in the island's second republic, and some recent works of reference print as authoritative the version of the Spanish government as to their removal years ago. The bare statement that the wrong tomb was opened and the bones of one of Columbus' sons taken away, and not those of Columbus himself, does not seem very convincing, but if the data preserved by those called in as observers during an examination at the cathedral som years ago are accurate, a mistake was made by the Spanish. Insignia, lettering, other small evidences indicated that the tomb which had been opened was undoubtedly that of the son and that another tomb now holds the few fragments of Columbus' bones and the observers were men of intelligence, including high ecclesiastics, officials and others.

But whether or not their opinion was correct, this is an appropriate site for many other reasons, and what could be a more appropriate form for a monument to the greatest navigator of all than a splendid pinnacle carrying a perpetual light for the guidance of his successors on the seas? This will be more than a flame seen afar for directing those who ply the ocean. It is also designed for those plying the upper air. Aviation is now farther advanced than was the lore of the sea in Columbus' time. Probably air routes along the short parallels of latitude in the inclement North will always be followed, but distance is much less important than safety to aviation, making miles by the hundreds in an hour.

May we not believe that the favorite routes of the future will be along the warmer, milder, safer parallels to our southern ports; that the skies to be "whitened" by flying craft will be skies to the south and that the Pharos of Columbus, looked for by many an eye on dark nights and stormy nights, will be a wonder and preserver vouchsafing in the Caribbean blessings to the imperiled greater even than those of its predecessor of the Mediterranean.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Rubber Turf for Racers

Tested at a stadium near London, rubber turf is being used to surface the track on which greyhounds race. It is claimed that the material gives better footing after a rain than grass. The rubber turf also will be tested on football fields.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Russian Auto-Sleigh

A worker in the Molotow automobile factory of Russia has invented an auto-sleigh that runs on spokes or feet instead of wheels, and instead of wheels at the back there are two pairs of skiis that move along special grooves in the chassis and then press at the snow and shove the car along.

HIGHER SHOULDERS—WIDER, DEEPER NON-SKID TREAD—MORE RUBBER ON THE ROAD . . . .

These Truck Tires Will Cut Operating Costs for You

FIRESTONE has constantly been the pioneer and leader in the development of balloon tires for trucks, and in the New Firestone Truck Tire for 1935 we have incorporated improvements that enable you to maintain uninterrupted schedules at higher speeds—at lowest cost per mile.

A new tread compound has been developed, which is tougher and longer wearing. The tread has been specially designed with higher, more rugged shoulders and wider, deeper non-skid, with more rubber on the road. It is possible to hold this thicker tread to the Gum-Dipped cord body because of the patented Firestone construction of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread. These improvements give you greatest blowout protection and non-skid safety for the higher hauling speeds of today.

FRANK HEAD ..... Editor and Publisher
MILDRED WHITE WALLACE ..... Associate Editor

EDITOR'S NOTE—The following Editorial, by Bernarr MacFadden in the Liberty Magazine, verbally expresses what we believe is universal sentiment toward Franklin D. Roosevelt and his administration.

YES, We Are For President Roosevelt.

Our President came into office in an extraordinary period. There is no historical record of conditions exactly similar to those which existed at that time. We have had depressions—many of them. But never has a nation come through the prolonged shocks that we had to endure following the World War.

We supported the President because we knew he would not be afraid to experiment. We knew he was facing conditions that would doubtless require revolutionary methods. He was not a standpatter in any sense. We knew, furthermore, that in trying new methods he would make many mistakes. He acknowledged in the beginning they were to be expected. We had confidence in his ability as a leader. We believed that in the end, after totaling the results of the administration's plan, his judgment would be sound. We have not been disappointed up to date.

To be sure, we have freely criticized many activities of the administration. We expect to raise our voice whenever we believe we can constructively criticize governmental activities. The President himself has maintained that he welcomes such criticism. When his assistants make mistakes there is no better way of calling them to his attention than by free public criticism.

When the President went into office he was radically opposed to Washington bureaucracy. One of the promises in his platform was to greatly curtail or entirely eliminate these paternalistic governmental activities. But the conditions that he had to face were such that he could not carry out this plan. It was necessary, because of the revolutionary situation, to continue and even add to the many bureaus already operating in Washington.

The capital city is infested with lobbyists. Powerful organizations throughout the country are represented there by trained men who understand how to influence legislation. They "know the ropes." They have been educated in the procedure necessary to guide legislation. And, although the Chief Executive may be opposed to the influence exerted by lobbying, it would be impossible for him to do otherwise than accept it as a part of the educational procedue that is necessary in intelligent lawmaking.

Business men of all kinds came to Washington seeking assistance financially and otherwise. They wanted to know the government's attitude in connection with matters that would affect their business. They did not go away satisfied in every case, but they usually learned that the President was trying to serve everybody and that in catering to the majority the minority in some cases had to suffer, but that "a fair field and no favors" must be maintained.

There are many problems facing the present administration that are still unsolved. There are opposing forces, each trying to get the better of the other.

The President, who has to be referee in these sometimes bitter contests, is not in an enviable position. He has to make decisions which are bound to create enemies. You cannot favor both sides in a controversy.

But we supported President Roosevelt even before he was nominated. We did everything we possibly could to help bring about his election.

We were among the first in maintaining that he should have dictatorial powers in the serious emergencies he faced. We fought for him in the beginning and we can still be numbered among his admiring adherents.

However, all of us should keep ourselves keenly alive to our inalienable rights as loyal citizens of this free country. We should hold on to our rights as free men. We should be ready to fight for them if necessary.

But the President is only one man. He has to render decisions on many important and intricate problems and he should not be held personally responsible for the mistakes of the officials in his administration. If we as citizens are watchful and jealous of our personal rights and will freely criticize faults and mistakes that we find in government, we are not only protecting that which is our own, but we are rendering assistance to the Chief Executive which he is certain to appreciate.

SILVER AND GOLD

"Rain is silver coin, the sunlight—gold,
And leaves on plant and vine are currency,
So every little wind turns miserly,
Bestirring them until their sun is told.
There is the rare perfume that jasmines hold,
And all the wealth of my magnolia tree
Where ivory blossoms hang exotically—
Aladdin treasures that each day unfold.

I plant a rose and it bears dividends,
While violets I gather, multiply; I pay my tithe to Heaven and make amends
As best I may in words, with which I try
To share my riches. This I know—who tends
A garden garners wealth 'till memories die."

What would we do in this world of ours were it not for the land of "Let's Pretend"—"Make Believe"—or plain old DREAMLAND? A restful retreat it is and far removed from the prosaic old routine of a work-a-day-world! Some people call it a "hobby"—some an "outside interest"—but always people who have "Whatever-it-is", are far happier for the possession!

A friend of mine writes she has found happiness in her Flower Garden. Surely no more worth while project could be undertaken, in giving happiness to others, than sharing flowers grown in one's own garden. How many of you who have been the recipients of beautiful blossoms, have not loved the spell of their beauty and fragrance! How often have they come to brighten an otherwise dull day! There is a new book just published which they tell me is "extraordinary". It is called "But For My Garden". One commentator states: "The author tells of how life would have got her had it not been for the nerves and disappointments, worry and trouble, she tucked away under the soil with her little ten cent trowel". Another writer says: "I dig many a trouble into the soil—and many a joy grows out of it". The sanest bit of advice I have recently heard runs like this—"Do not pack up your troubles in an old kit bag and cart them around on your shoulder, but plant them in the dear old back yard, a twisty little root, and reap a "golden glow"; a peppery little seed and reap a plume of lark spur; an ugly brown bulb and reap a jonquil. Let your troubles twine around the trellis in the form of a blue morning glory, or climb the stalk of a pink hollyhock or scatter fragrance in the summer moonlight from the night blooming jasmine, and they will roll away like dew before the rising sun".

If the GARDEN idea does not appeal to you, try making a Scrap Book. Many a little rain drop will be chased away on a gloomy day if you have a SCRAP BOOK filled with "Memories". You have truly missed something if you have failed to keep a SCRAP BOOK, a veritable reservoir of thoughts that have been expressed just "for you" by someone else. You will probably, on many occasions, wonder WHY you did not say it first—so applicable is it to the way you have always thought—So get out your scissors and begin one of these little "nuggets of gold gleaned from the Land of Literature"—you will love exploring and re-exploring this fascinating "world all your own".

Now, there is a certain little "pal of mine" in the Magic City, who almost lost his belief in FAIRIES a week or two ago, because he lost a tooth—and the Fairy failed to place a "dime" under his pillow. Listen, little one, that same little Fairy came by this office and told me about it—and he was just as sorry as you were that he did not get to your house that night—but so many little boys and girls lost their teeth that week, that he failed to get there before dawn broke, and he had to get home. He told me however, that if you only BELIEVED in him, something Really Good was coming your way this summer—but you have to BELIEVE or it won't happen. And let me tell you something, Do Not Ever Lose Your Faith In Fairies and Santa Claus or fail to make a wish to a Red Bird—or the New Moon. You won't ever be truly Happy if you do—and you won't ever be entirely Unhappy if you keep your Belief in the things I have mentioned.

And now, if LIFE has proven dull and uninteresting to any of you, try the few things I have mentioned and see if things do not "pep up a bit". Keep on BELIEVING! Find your HOBBY — Plant your Garden of Flowers! Sing you Songs! Paint your pictures! Start your Scrap Book! Do not let Disillusionment in people and things make you cynical! Sure, I believe in the Good Fairy—he helps me over many a "bump"! And DREAMS? — Who could go through life without them? Make a DREAM BOAT and when things do not go to suit you, hop in and sail any where you want to go away from those who do not please you—but NEVER let any one take away your BELIEF in people or your DREAMS, LIFE is much sweeter while they linger!

When ever an old friend leaves town and is thoughtful enough to send a card of greeting across the miles with the request that the DEMOCRAT be mailed to him while he is away—well, I call it LOYALTY—and no greater tribute can be paid to a fellow than to say he is LOYAL. So do we happily follow J. B. Turner to Hot Springs, Ark., where he and Mrs. Turner are spending a few weeks. They were accompanied on this trip by Miss Odell Turner and "Slim" Sparks.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Longshore and Tommy Longshore spent Monday in Columbiana. Mr. Longshore attending to legal business while in town.

Do not miss the Baseball game to be staged on the athletic grounds of Shelby County High School on Thursday afternoon, May 3, at 3 p. m., between the WBRC Baseball players and the Town of Columbiana team. See your favorite radio stars, Manager Bill Young, and one of the owners, J. C. Bell, as they chase around the diamond and swing the willow bat in an attempt to beat the Home town boys. Admission only 10 and 20 cents. Sponsored by the Exchange Club.

Buddy Holcombe, son of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Holcombe, celebrated his fifth birthday on April 26th. He is one of the most popular "kiddies" in Columbiana, and his account of this celebration was refreshing. At the time he related to me his version of passing this fifth mile-post, he was worried to death about one "stumped" toe and not having an "ice cream cone"—However, the toe will heal—and "Aunt Louise" was on her way to get the ice cream cone. "Childish troubles will soon pass by—There little Man don't cry"—and I hope your life will be filled with all thats gloriously bright and happy with only enough clouds to make the sun shine brighter—along your pathway.

C. T. Hughes, prominent farmer of Wilsonville, came by the Democrat office on Saturday and renewed his subscription to the ever growing weekly known as the Shelby County Democrat.

Jim Harkins, of Wilsonville, paid a personal visit to the Democrat offices on Saturday and stated his continued interest in the Democrat. In his own words, he said: "I take the Democrat and consider it the best weekly in Alabama. It keeps us informed of all County, State and National happenings. This is an advantage to us in our community, for we do not take a daily paper". We want to thank Mr. Harkins for this encouraging expression from him. Such references to our efforts in the journalistic realm are most welcomed.

Ed Jordan and Leon Archer, prominent Insurance dealers of Sylacauga, were cordially received in our offices last week. Both these gentlemen are friends of long standing, and we shall be happily connected with this enterprising firm, in an advertising way, in the near future. Watch the Democrat for a statement of their attractive policy offers.

Mrs. Dixie B. Shealy and Mrs. Henry Baker have returned from an extended motor trip through Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

Citizens of Columbiana are busily engaged in welcoming to social and business circles, Carl E. Grouby, of Abbeville, Alabama, who is now connected with the Columbiana Hardware Company. Mr. and Mrs. Grouby have moved to Columbiana and are occupying the house recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Gray Goodwin. The Democrat takes this opportunity to extend a cordial welcome to this charming couple. We are delighted to have them make their future home with us.

Friends of Charlie Johnson are delighted to learn that he is recuperating satisfactorily after an emergency operation for appendicitis on Monday morning.

Do not forget the operetta to be given in Vincent High School on next Friday night. 65 children will present "Down Among The Fairies". We are informed that an unusually fine program will be presented at this time.

Why not make your arrangements to dine at Curlee's through the summer months. See them today for monthly or weekly rates. You will find it far more convenient—and the menu is changed daily. Try one of their Fried Chicken dinners—or a Steak (Western to order) suppers.

Do not miss the WBRC baseball game this afternoon at the High School. Sponsored by the Columbiana Exchange Club. Admission 10 and 20 cents.

If you really want to spend a delightful evening and enjoy the music of the Rhythm 'Ristocrats, meet your friends at the Airport on next Saturday night at 9:00 o'clock. There will be dancing until 12 o'clock. Cold drinks will be sold during the evening.

Friends of LeRoy Mooney, popular Director of the Rhythm 'Ristocrats and Chorus Director of Shelby County High School, are delighted to know that he is able to be out again after an attack of appendicitis.

Siluria offers a baseball game for those who enjoy this sport on Sunday afternoon between the Buck Creek Cotton Mills and the Gadsden Goodyear Rubber Company team. This bids fair to be one of the best games of the current season.

Better Housing projects in Columbiana have gone forward with renewed interest since Mrs. Lida Wood was appointed City Worker. Mrs. Wood reports additional requests for information regarding remodeling and repainting and it is to be hoped that this important part of the Reconstruction program will be continued in Shelby County. Watch this paper for an important announcement next week.

Miss Agnes Ray, of Tupelo, Miss., is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer McGiboney in Columbiana.

MONTEVALLO

The Bell Amusement Company, of Memphis, Tenn., made its headquarters in Montevallo last week. There was a Chair Plane, Ferris Wheel, and Merry Go Round in the show. A large crowd attended every afternoon and night, especially Saturday night. People all over the county were seen. The show is now in Sylacauga.

A most entertaining and instructive Memorial Day program was given last Friday by the General Josiah Gorgas chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy. After a procession, invocation, and a song, "Dixie"; Miss Mary Alice Boyd awarded some prizes. They were awarded to Edith Carpenter and Lawrence Carlton for writing the best essays on Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, out of the fifth and sixth grades. Next Miss Marguerite King sang a song. After this, Mrs. J. Alex Moore gave a very interesting talk about the south right after the war. Then, after a few other ceremonies the program was completed.

John Orr went to Montgomery, Tuesday, to carry on his duties as a page in the Alabama Legislature. Unless another recess is called he will stay there all summer. However, he can of course, come home on week-ends.

A quite unusual and entertaining play was given last Friday night. The name was "The Devils Host" and no one could ever think of a better one. A number of well known Montevallo business men took parts and two college girls also were in it. Mr. W. J. Kennerly as the "Devil", was splendid. All others turned in fine performances. Dr. Trumbaur directed.

Watch Your Eye-Lens
Frightened to Death
All Possess Language
Eating Bark and Earth

Important news for life insurance companies. A tendency to old age or early death is inherited, according to Dr. Felix Bernstein of Columbia university, who talked to the National Academy of Science in Chicago. A scientist can tell how old you are, physically, by examining the lens of your eye. It always shows signs of hardening before fifty; the extent of the hardening decides how old you really are.

Arthur Brisbane

The rest of your body—brain, heart and all the rest—grows old about as rapidly as the eye-lens does.

Leaving out accidents and attacks by disease germs, there is a sort of "pre-destination" in the length of life.

Two brothers, fifteen and ten years of age, with a young friend, were going to an entertainment last Christmas night. George Bond and Carl McMurty of Poplar Bluff, Mo., thought it would be amusing to frighten the children by running after them, telling them, "You will never live to get there."

The two older boys "got there." The little ten-year-old boy, James Ainley, dropped dead of fright as the men pursued him. A sensible jury decides that the two men shall spend six months in jail and pay $100 fine for their "joke." The jury might well have made it ten years, for it was stupid manslaughter. There is nothing more brutal, cruel or more completely worthy of a genuine "yahoo" than frightening children.

Secretary of Interior Ickes, who also possesses the gift of forcible speech, calls Senator Long "a ranting demagogue," describes, more gently, one other well known broadcaster, and rebukes, without mentioning his name, Doctor Townsend, whom he accuses of arousing false hopes in the "underprivileged."

Senator Huey Long, his language never failing him, able to speak his mind freely in the senate, addressing that august body, describes the secretary of interior as "Lord High Chamberlain Ickes, the chinch-bug of Chicago."

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace he called the "Lord Destroyer, the ignoramus of Iowa."

We complain of our depression with good cause. We might find queer consolation in reading about miserable inhabitants of Formosa, property of Japan, inhabited chiefly by Chinese, who made up 80 per cent of the sufferers and victims in the recent earthquake.

In Formosa, men, women and children have been stripping the bark from elm trees and eating it and they may be seen on barren fields, pulling up wild grass by the roots, washing and eating the roots, as well as the grass itself. Many have died from eating bran mixed with earth and water, the earth causing death by intestinal stoppage.

Those poor creatures have a real depression, with no rich government to pour out billions for jobs, relief, dole, etc.

The American Philosophical society, gathered in Philadelphia, learns from Doctor Slipher, director of the Lowell observatory at Flagstaff, Ariz., that to people on the planet Mars, if any are there, our earth is a blue planet.

If those Martians will continue watching us, until some European or Asiatic country sends a few thousand planes in our direction, they will see this corner of the earth a deeper and darker blue than ever. What a lesson we shall learn some day if we continue with our eyes shut!

Newspaper editors, that ought to know something about prosperity, gathered in New York from all over the country, tell you they see a "business pickup," better times are coming. That is a cheerful prediction.

Some boys in high schools, and bigger boys in colleges, recently organized a "strike" to express their horror of war.

War is horrible; it should be, and eventually will be, unnecessary. But there is some good in all evil, and young students and others should reflect on past wars and what modern civilization owes to them.

Germany wants colonies, and is embarrassed by the fact that this would mean taking in a great many black ladies and gentlemen that by no stretch of the imagination could be called "Aryans." The German government announces that, while it could not admit negroes to German citizenship, as Britain does in her colonies, black colonial negroes would be "Schutzbefohlene," with every right except the right to adopt Aryan strut.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

First car-load shipments of Cullman County's 1935 strawberry crop began moving to market with prospects for a large volume of sales during the next few weeks. Truck shipments, which began several days ago, have been bringing the growers an average of $2.75 a crate.

Only eight of Alabama's 41 circuit judges have answered Governor Graves' letter requesting that the names of Negroes be placed in all jury boxes "to comply with the supreme law of the land," examination of the chief executive's "Scottsboro" file revealed.

A. W. Ray has been elected superintendent of the Attalla city school system. Mr. Ray will succeed R. L. Clements, who resigned because of ill health. The new superintendent has been principal of the Etowah County High School in Attalla for some time.

Intensifying its drive against violators of motor transportation laws, the Alabama Public Service Commission has cited 69 truck operators to appear at a hearing in Birmingham May 28 to show cause why licenses to operate should not be revoked.

Sylacauga Chapter of Future Farmers of America, farm boys' organization, will conduct a corn fertilizer demonstration this year on the farm of E. J. Morris, near Sylacauga, R. N. Holt, agriculture teacher at Sylacauga High School, announced.

T. Jervis Jones, manager of the Decatur Ice & Coal Co. plant, died from injuries caused by a boiler explosion. Clarence Kleopfer, engineer, was seriously burned. The two men were testing the boiler when the explosion occurred.

A bill sponsored by the American Legion to have Alabama school teachers take an oath of allegiance to the United States Constitution drew fire from J. A. Keller and Frank Grove, two of the state's educational leaders.

Mayor J. K. Barnes took steps to restore Gordo's water supply "by nightfall" as residents surveyed wreckage of a new 68,000-gallon water tank which toppled from its 100-foot tower while undergoing its final test.

Rev. William S. Thorington, pastor of the Woodlawn Presbyterian Church, was elected moderator of the Birmingham Presbytery at its semi-annual meeting in Birmingham. He will serve for six months.

Luther Hollums, chief of the Birmingham Police Department, was elected president of the Alabama Peace Officers' Assn., at the closing session of the annual convention in Huntsville.

Dr. George H. Denny, president of the University of Alabama, has won his fight to prevent a reduction of the university's state appropriation by the recess finance and taxation committee.

The state refinanced the 1933 debt funding bond issue of $16,920,000 at an average rate of 3.80 per cent interest to set a new low mark for interest rates on Alabama state bonds.

Bids on construction of a new filteration plant for Cullman's municipal waterworks system were opened May 2. The project, including a new main to Wolf Creek, will cost about $43,000.

Approximately $200,000 worth of automobiles and $35,000 worth of Frigidaires were sold by Birmingham dealers during the General Motors Automobile Show in Birmingham recently.

Mrs. J. J. Mayfield, of Tuscaloosa, has announced the discovery of an oil portrait of Edgar Allan Poe in his early twenties among the rubbish in the attic of a Tuscaloosa home.

Dr. Edwin Mims, head of the Department of English at Vanderbilt University, will make the annual Phi Beta Kappa address at the University of Alabama on May 27.

Glenn B. Roloson, a federal engineer, arrived from Washington recently to begin a survey of projects included in Alabama's tentative $25,000,000 rural electrification program.

Traffic between Phenix City and the Girard section has been resumed after almost a year with completion of approaches to the new Moses Bridge over Holland Creek.

Alabama membership in the Future Farmers of America, national farm boys' organization, has more than doubled since its inception in this state in 1929.

The Federal Housing Administration in Alabama will conduct an active campaign in Talladega during the next few weeks, it has been announced.

Dr. Charles Allen Cary, 74, dean of the school of veterinary medicine of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute and state veterinarian, died suddenly following a heart attack.

Current expenses for Alabama elementary and high schools during the school year, 1934-35, was $15,178,217.

Harry Newell, Mobile barber, claimed more than 5,000 persons have signed petitions inviting Sen. Huey P. Long to speak in Mobile as soon as possible.

Miss Willie M. Allen, widely-known educator and lecturer on art, literature and history, died at her home in Birmingham from pneumonia. She was 82.

More than 2,000 pounds of seed will be planted in the state forest nursery to furnish seedlings to landowners interested in reforestation.

Alabama's 1936 automobile license tags will be colored with turkey red figures on a white background.

PATTERN 2092

Every now and then some simple idea comes along and creates a furor—and every one wonders why it hadn't happened before! Like this perfectly grand house dress which has been designed. Its long coat lines make one appear slim as a rail while at work about the house, and it gives much freedom of movement. Its greatest feature, of course, is the fact you can slip it on and not be bothered by mussing your hair or twisting your neck—just a dive into it and it's on. It is attractive in colored cotton broadcloth, percale or pique print, substantial materials lending themselves well to its coat lines.

Pattern 2092 is available in sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 4¼ yards 36 inch fabric and ¾ yard contrasting. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Shoppers Seek Personality Styles

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A "PLUMP, fair and forty" lady who is "all dressed up" in a kittenish, flapperish way—youth clad in fashions sophisticated beyond its years—colors that make blonds look anemic and ashen or tones and tints that cause brunettes to lose glamour—hats with impossible head sizes, too little for the unbobbed, too big for shorn locks—well, what of it, why paint so crude, so unkind a picture?

Merely by way of contrast, dear reader, for the new spring and summer fashions are a direct denial to everything we have said in the foregoing paragraph. What is actually happening is that our fashion experts have sensed the need of gently, firmly and subtly leading women in the direction they should go in the fine art of dress. Which is why we are hearing so much these days in regard to the outstanding importance of personality fashions.

Among our modern fashion educators personality in dress ranks as a theme of major importance. Have you not noticed the signs of the times yourself? The courtesy and class-you-at-a-glance manner with which you are ushered to this or that specialized department the moment you step foot in a fashion emporium?

This is, indeed, a happy era which is dawning for shoppers in that dress-designers and coat and suit makers have become that personality-conscious they are making it their goal to create fashions that will tune perfectly to each and everybody's particular type. The modes here pictured are an outgrowth of this noble endeavor. They silence the lament of the middle-aged and matron who for years have been voicing complaint that they are not having a "fair deal" when it comes to clothes they "can wear," and that all the attention is concentrated on ingenue type. Here they are right before your very eyes, fashions that couldn't possibly be more perfectly tuned to the needs and demands of gentlewomen who have graduated into the alumnae of fashion's smart set.

These stunning models for the up-to-the-moment-in-style matron were selected for our illustration from among a galaxy of fascinating styles as shown during a "personality fashions" revue which the Chicago wholesale market council presented at a midwest conference gala dinner. The fashion themes included clothes for the youthful matron, for matrons more advanced, for slender girlish ingenue types, for the larger young woman, for the outdoor and sports girl, for tall blond types and for medium-tall brunettes. The moral to this story on personality fashions is, if while en tour in the shops fashion-seeking you do not see what you want, ask for it. It's there tuned to your individuality, simply awaiting your call.

Describing the trio of fashionable costumes for the matron as here pictured, the model to the left is a travel and street outfit especially designed for the youthful matron. It is tailored of a brown and white "broken-check" tweed in standard English cut. It may be worn equally well with dark or light accessories.

The street ensemble to the right of navy and white print silk with check sheer redingote coat is designed along simple slenderizing lines. The sailor hat adds charm.

Centered in the group is an ultra chic ensemble for the mature woman to wear to afternoon club functions or smart country club affairs. It is fashioned of a white sheer material with white and black stripe trimming.

FITTED VANITIES VERY CONVENIENT

The vanity bag has been revived and is one of the most important affairs that has been seen in a good many moons.

The new ones know a new practicability. In the first place they have been made to a great extent by people who understand vanity—the cosmeticians. They have known what to include. Not only have they done a good job at making them practical, but they have seen that they have that other important requisite, which is beauty.

They are fashioned of velvet, of lame, of fine kidskin, of lovely silks, and even of metals. Their colors are almost unlimited, but women are usually careful, or should be, that they choose a color that will go with all party frocks. They may have a one or two sided opening, and usually hold purse, change purse, cigaret case, comb, lipstick, rouge and powder.

Jacket Lengths Will Vary; Suits Are to Fit Easily

There is a softness in the air that prepares one for the spectacle of spring clothes. Necklines are bowed, frilled, or softened, and even with classic tailleur, which is always chosen by certain types, a jabot or some other softening touch is suggested for the blouse. It is also advisable to have the blouse contrast. Even in the case of linen this idea is carried out.

With the usual exceptions, loose fitting lines prevail in the suit collections for spring, 1935. Jacket lengths vary to some degree, and so do their types.

Coat Dresses Smart

Coat dresses of black, navy blue or pepper-and-salt wools, cut on slender lines and finished with white pique collars in the form of petals or stylized flowers, are an outstanding spring fashion.

BEAUTY HINTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The smartest women in this country as well as abroad are wearing vivid nail polish with lipstick to match. Reports from Paris and St. Moritz say that the really chic women there are matching theirs in red and yellowish red shades. Trick effects such as metallic combinations and odd color schemes have disappeared. The most fashionable colors are coral, cardinal, ruby and the "natural" which is the lightest of the yellow reds. Most Parisian beauticians prefer to cover the entire nail with polish instead of outlining the moon and tip. Some fashionable New Yorkers follow this mode, while others prefer the trim look which white moons and tips achieve. The young woman pictured has that look of distinction which perfect grooming always gives. She appreciates the enhancement which artfully colored lips and fingertips add to a chic ensemble. Notice the costume jewelry set which she is wearing. It includes a clip on her stitched crepe hat with a duplicate clip at her throat and a bracelet to match.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for May 5

SIN, REPENTANCE, AND FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Luke 15:11-24.

GOLDEN TEXT—If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness.—I John 1:9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When a Boy Was Sorry.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus' Story of the Prodigal Son.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—When We Do Wrong.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Forgiveness of Sin.

I. The Origin of Sin (Gen. 3:1-24).

Man was placed on probation in the Garden of Eden. The means used in the testing of man were most simple. God issued just one prohibition, and alongside of the tree of knowledge of good and evil was placed the tree of life. To this tree man had access. Satan, a personal being, appeared in the guise of a serpent. He induced Eve to doubt both the Word of God and the love of God and then appealed to innocent appetite. She gazed upon and lusted after that which God had forbidden. Following her yielding to the suggestion of Satan, she induced Adam to disobey God. We see from this that so far as the human race is concerned sin originated in the free choice of the head of the race and through the law of heredity passed upon all mankind.

II. The Universality of Sin (Rom. 3:10-18).

By the use of many quotations from the Scriptures, Paul proves that every member of the race is guilty of sin.

III. The Destiny of Sinners (Gen. 6:5-8).

Man's rebellious disobedience to God was followed by his resolution to destroy the race from the face of the earth. God's holy nature is such that the sinner must be punished. The only escape from the wrath of God is through the Savior who was provided by God in the person of his Son.

IV. The Divine Remedy for Sin (John 3:14, 15; Isa. 53:4-9).

The sinless Son of God took the place of the sinner by becoming incorporated with the race through the incarnation. As a human being he rendered perfect obedience to the law of God, fulfilling every demand and on the cross of Calvary made a vicarious atonement for sin. Just as the Israelites who were bitten by the venomous serpent were healed by looking to the brazen serpent lifted upon the pole, so is the sinner saved from sin by looking to the one who was made a curse for sin in his sacrifice on Calvary (II Cor. 5:21).

V. Repentance Necessary (Acts 2:32-39).

The one who hears the gospel message and receives the crucified Savior not only has forgiveness of sin, but turns from sin to God and thus repents. On the Day of Pentecost Peter's gospel message, which centered in the Lordship and Saviorhood of Jesus Christ, convicted the people of their sins. The evidence of their faith in Christ was manifested in their conviction of sin and their penitence was shown in their confession of Christ in baptism.

VI. The Forgiving God (Luke 15:11-24).

The center of things in this parable is neither the prodigal son nor his brother, but the "certain man who had two sons." He who fails to see the heart of our Father God will miss the purpose of this parable.

1. The son's insubordination (v. 12). The son's desire for freedom moved him wilfully to choose to leave home.

2. The son's departure (v. 13). Having made the fatal decision, he went posthaste to the enjoyment of his cherished purpose.

3. The son's degeneration (vv. 13, 14). From plenty in his father's house to destitution in a far country was a short journey. The sinner realizes his destitution when the very powers which minister to his pleasures are burned out.

4. The son's degradation (vv. 15, 16). When his money was exhausted, he was driven to hire out to a citizen to feed swine. It is ever so, that those who will not serve God are made slaves to the devil (Rom. 6:16).

5. The son's restoration (vv. 17-24). a. He came to himself (v. 17). b. He made a resolution (v. 18). c. He made a confession (vv. 18, 19). d. He acted (v. 20). e. Reception by his father (vv. 20-24).

The father had not forgotten his son. So anxious was he for him that he ran to meet him and fell upon his neck and kissed him.

VII. Justification the Issue of Faith (Rom. 5:1-11).

The one who receives Jesus Christ is declared righteous. His guilt is removed; he has peace with God.

Ordeals

The hardest of all ordeals for an honest man is to stand arraigned at the bar of his own conscience. He knows more than the keenest, the most vindictive enemy could urge for a verdict of guilty.

Charity

A man's charity to those who differ from him upon great and difficult questions will be in the ratio of his own knowledge of them, the more knowledge, the more charity.—Norman McLeod.

Roman Substitute for the Modern Newspaper

Ancient Rome had a "Stock Exchange," and almost every citizen in the Eternal City, in the Second century B. C., owned shares in some joint stock company.

These Roman corporations were formed to collect taxes, loan money, construct public works, and exploit the mines seized by the conquering armies of the Caesars in Gaul, Spain, Africa and Asia.

It is hard to see how the Romans got on without stock quotations in the newspapers, but Caesar's publication of the Acta Diurna, or proceedings of the senate and assembly, would take the place of our newspapers, and the crowds which gathered at the points where these documents were posted simply parallel the throngs that collect in front of a bulletin in the window of a newspaper office today.

Couriers were constantly arriving from the agents of corporations in the provinces with the latest news of industrial and financial enterprises.

There is no evidence of an organized Roman stock exchange, but there was a row of banking offices along one side of the Forum which probably did a brisk business in stock loans.

Rome had its speculators as we have today, and in 191 B. C., a character in a play referred to a "corner in grain." There was also an "oil scandal" in Rome when speculators tried to gain control of the olive oil market.—Pearson's Weekly.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong. No alcohol. Sold by druggists in tablets or liquid.—Adv.

Don't Dodge

It doesn't pay to dodge responsibilities. You may lose them for today, but they will catch up with you again tomorrow. And dodging problems tends to make you a shirker. The best way out of difficulty is straight through the middle of it.—Grit.

COLUMBIANCHIDS

By BILL SIMS

Grave indeed, was the problem facing several local groceries the past week, but such could have been expected as all the kiddies had to have their annual Easter Egg Hunts. The reasons for the groceries being worried was due to the fact that there was an undue scarcity of eggs, which we firmly believe were hidden on the church lawns.

To the gentlemen and lady who were joined in holy wed-lock several nights ago, we wish to congratulate you on your misfortune. To anyone who should have a wreck between Calera and Columbiana, and then be carried into this village with their leg hurt and have the injured limb doctored, that to me would be bad enough but to continue on and marry the gal, "Mr., you can take it!"

Keep in mind that Saturday night is dance night at "Ye Ole Airporte". For the past three weeks this column has been devoting an entire paragraph to the duo-monthly hops in this community and hasn't received a complimentary pass yet, sompin must be done about it!

King Rumor has it Mayor Gordon's red letter day is approaching quickly; all of us know that the Alabama Air Amada will make Columbiana its first stop. I imagine with the roaring of scores of airplane motors amid the shreiks of little children, that this quiet, peaceful little hamlet will be nonchatlantly enthused.

And now to taper off with a paragraph about high school, (the castle of little boys and girls dreams). Our principal has been up in the air about several different honors bestowed upon his school. After all when a school ranks first among its college entrants, and also receives top honors for a national intelligence examination, no wonder Mr. Lawson feels like the "kittens pajamas".

A group of boys were honored recently by a very interesting style talk from Mr. Norman Lefkovits, who told the how, where, and when of the latest in clothing. Mr. Lefkovits brought several models with him and explained the tailoring and materials of each. We would like to suggest that you drop in this Columbiana Leader and look over their Spring merchandise, remember this organization can satisfy the clothing problem all the way from babies hankies to grandpops ole gray tweed suit.

We see by the bill-boards that William Tell's ultra-modern impersonator personified will appear Friday, May 3rd, come up and see the nationally known Captain Hicks demonstrate his art in rifltry. Also keep in mind that you have a date to attend the annual play, under the capable direction of Miss Souders. Miss Souders has only been a member of our faculty a short time, so everybody be present at the prevue of her first play in Columbiana, "The Red Headed Step Child", and we promise you three acts of side-bursting laughter.

Now if you will excuse me I'll remain your wreck'em and marry'em correspondent, who just found out that a friend is a person who is willing to share everything YOU have with YOU, and a pal is a guy who is willing to share everything HE has with YOU.

COOPER - OZMENT

The many friends of Miss Nalda Cooper will be interested to learn of her marraige which took place in Jacksonville, Fla., on February 8, to Harry L. Ozment, of that city.

The brides brunette type of beauty was emphasized by an early Spring ensemble of gray with matching hat and accessories. Her flowers were a corsage of rosebuds and lillies of the valley.

The bride is well known in this vicinity, having spent her childhood here and received her education in Shelby County Schools, later going to Birmingham where she accepted a position, and was transfered later by her company to Jacksonville, where she has remained since.

The groom, a native of Virginia, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Ozment and received his education in the schools of Danville and Richmond, Va., and holds a responsible position with the Hajoca Corporation of Philadelphia, he being stationed at the present with one of their branch offices in Jacksonville, where they will make their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Crumpton are receiving congratulations from their friends on the birth of a son whom they have named Milton Jr.

Mrs. Jim Davis has returned to her home here after a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Johnnie Stamps, in Birmingham.

Mrs. Talmage Blackerby and children, of Bessemer, were week-end guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Crumpton.

Mrs. Edwards has returned to her home in Birmingham after a visit here with her daughter,(Mrs. Maud Nolen.

Mrs. Myrtis Miller, of Birmingham, spent the week-end here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Beard.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Crumpton and two children, Jeanette and Laverne, have returned here after spending the past winter in Kentucky.

Mrs. H. A. Martin and daughter, Betty, are visiting friends and relatives in Birmingham.

Heart Drifts

HE MADE ME AS I AM.

I do not kneel at night
To say a prayer;
I think of spiders
And I do not dare.

I'm cold and bed is warm;
I'm better there
Than in the outer darkness
Of a prayer.

But when the morning comes
So pink and cool
And sunrise makes our
Peach trees colorful,

And God comes smiling down
Our garden walk,
I run and put my hand
In His, and talk.

I tell Him I have been
A naughty lamb.
He laughs and says
He made me as I am.

ONE GOLDEN HOUR.

I'm sending you one golden hour
From the jeweled crown of the day;
Not sorrow or care shall have the power
To steal this rare jewel away.
I'm bidding you join in the dreaming
I had in that hour with you,
When all of the old dreams in seeming,
Were gold like the hour, and came true.

So, let's dream like a child in its playing,
Let's make us a sky and a sea,
Let's change the things 'round us by saying
They're things that we wish them to be;
And if there is sadness or sorrow,
Let's dream 'till we charm them away,
Let's learn from the children, and borrow
A saying from childhood:

"LET'S PLAY,"

Let's play that the world's full of beauty
Let's play there is pleasure in duty
And light where we thought there was gloom.
Let's play that this heart with its sorrow
Is bidden be joyous and glad,
Let's play that we'll find on the morrow
The joys that we never have had.

Let's play we have done with repining
Let's play that our longings are still,
Let's play that the star light is shining
To gold the green slope of the hill,
Let's play there are birds blithely flinging
Their songs of delight to the air.
Let's play that the world's full of singing
Let's play there is LOVE—everywhere.

DEPOSIT INSURANCE
An Extra Measure of Protection

The management of this Bank always has taken every possible precaution to safeguard the funds of its depositors. In keeping with this traditionally conservative policy, deposits made here are now insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The insurance thus provided applies to all deposits, including personal and corporate deposits, deposits of public funds, and trust funds awaiting investment.

At the present time, the maximum amount insured for each depositor is $5,000. This does not mean that a depositor with an account of, say $500, is guaranteed $5,000, but it does mean that his $500 is fully insured. Deposit insurance is for your protection. SATURDAY, MAY 25, IS 'POPPY DAY' ALL OVER THE WORLD

The morning of November 9, 1918, a young Georgia woman, serving on the staff of the Y. M. C. A. Overseas Headquarters in New York City, received a copy of a magazine containing Col. John McCrae's poem, "In Flanders Fields". Touched by the poem's reference to the poppies growing between the crosses of the war cemeteries this young woman, Miss Moina Michael, of Athens, Georgia, decided to wear a poppy in honor of the war dead.

Purchasing a number of poppies, Miss Michael distributed them among the members of the headquarters staff. This was the start of the custom of wearing poppies in memory of the men who lost their lives in the World War, a custom now observed by millions of Americans on Poppy Day, the Saturday before Memorial Day, and by millions of others throughout the English-speaking world.

When the American Legion was organized by the returned veterans, the poppy was officially adopted as the Legion's memorial flower. After the American Legion Auxiliary was established, the Legion's poppy program was turned over to the women's organization and has since been carried out annually by the Auxiliary. Members of the Shirley-Holloway Unit of the Auxiliary will distribute poppies at Columbiana, Wilsonville, Vincent and Shelby, on Poppy Day, Saturday, May 25th.

The Auxiliary women have taken Miss Michael's idea and developed it into a great national program for commemorating the sacrifice of those who died and for bringing aid to those who sacrificed their strength in the nation's service. Early in the winter the making of the millions of poppies which the people of America will wear on their coats the following Poppy Day is begun in government hospitals and convalescent workrooms maintained by the Auxiliary in many parts of the country. Hands of disabled veterans, weary of idleness, are given employment shaping the little red flowers. Sick and discouraged men whose spirits have sunk to despair from long unemployment are given the encouraging experience of again earning money.

A penny apiece is the usual amount paid for each poppy made, and a man, if not too badly disabled can easily turn out 300 a day. The number each man is permitted to make is restricted in order that he will not overtax his strength and to spread the work among as many men as possible. The work is restricted to disabled veterans receiving little or no government compensation and men with dependent families are given preference.

To pay the workers and purchase the materials is a problem in financing which the women of the Auxiliary have worked out. This year, when approximately 10,000,000 poppies have been made, the earnings of the disabled men have amounted to $100,000. The work has been carried out in 56 hospitals and workrooms in 40 different states.

The distribution of the poppies except in a few southern localities, is a one-day nation-wide endeavor conducted on the Saturday before Memorial Day. On that day an army of nearly 100,000 volunteer workers from the Auxiliary takes the poppies out on to the streets and pins them on the coats of passers-by. By night fall the little crimson symbols of remembrance bloom on millions of lapels and the coin boxes carried by the women are heavy with offerings which will mean relief for countless victims of the war during the year to come.

Wearing the poppy draws its wide appeal from its dual purpose of honoring the dead and serving the living. Every poppy worn on Poppy Day means that the wearer has thought, at least for a moment, of the men who lie beneath the poppies in France, and has contributed something to the relief and rehabilitation of those who are still suffering from results of the war, the disabled, their families and the families of the dead.

Crop Loans Starting!

Raymond News Service

THE signing of the Deficiency Bill, making the $60,000,000 for Crop and Seed Production Loans available, was good news for farmers who are now buying seed, fertilizers, and other supplies. The bill will be a boost for American industry, since the Farm Credit Administration suggests that borrowers buy American-made supplies. Agricultural leaders have long felt that farmers should support American industry by using fertilizers made in the United States, such as American nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia and potash.

SHELBY HI DEFEATS MONTEVALLO, 4 - 3

In one of the best games of the season, Shelby County High School defeated Montevallo High for the second time this season. It was any one's game up to the 8th inning with Columbiana leading 2 to 1. In the 8th, Bowden pitching for Montevallo weakened and before Coach Hicks could rush in a relief pitcher, Columbiana had loaded the bases and scored one run. Hartley relieved Bowden and was also greeted by a triple down first base by Blankenship, clearing the bases. The game ended with Columbiana 4 and Montevallo 3.

Batteries: Columbiana—D. Wallace and Miller; Bontevallo—Bowden, Hartley and Eiland.

CAMP FOR GIRLS, IN MONTEVALLO, TO OPEN ON JULY 22

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — Registrations for the annual Camp for Girls at Alabama College are being made rapidly at the office of Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, director of the camp and student counselor on the faculty. The camp begins July 22 continuing until August 17th.

One of the largest groups since its organization is expected this year. It is for girls from ten to eighteen years of age. Special advantages are offered the campers through staying in Hanson Hall, one of the college dormitories, and through other college facilities such as the swimming pool, camp house, athletic fields, and tennis courts.

Three scholarships are to be given outstanding applicants selected by a special committee. The applications and references must be received by June 15 in order for a student to be eligible for these awards. Among those who are making application for a camp scholarship is Miss Jean Letson of Columbiana.

MAY DAY PROGRAM AT THOMPSON HIGH IS HUGE SUCCESS

SILURIA, Ala.—The Annual May Day Program at Thompson High School, was presented to a large audience on the beautiful school campus, Wednesday, May 1st. The campus made a very picturesque setting for the festival, with the Queen's throne as center of interest, and many colorful May poles interspersing the trees.

The program was as follows:

Spring Songs, Grammar and High School; Crowning of Queen, Roberta Fulton, Queen; Maids to Queen, Senior Class.

Dances: Come Let Us Be Joyful, all grades; Swing, section one of first grade; How do you do my partner, second grade; Kinderpolha, third grade; Flora dance, fifth grade; Ole Zip Coon, fourth grade; Sun Bonnet Babies Overall Boys, section two of first grade; Beeking, sixth grade girls; Sailor's Horn Pipe, sixth grade boys; Ribbon Donee, Junior one girls; Virginia Reel, Junior two and three girls; Old Fashioned Dance, Senior one and two girls; Races and Relays, Junior High School Boys.

The faculty of Thompson High School wishes to thank each parent who cooperated in helping to make this program a success and to express appreciation for their attendance.

STATE FARMERS PAY THEIR DEBTS

AUBURN, Ala.—Farmers of Alabama continue to live up to their reputation of meeting their obligations promptly. Robt. A. Beeland, Jr., president, Federal Land Bank, New Orleans, reported that collections from Alabama farmers on first mortgage land bank commissioner loans were 99 per cent on maturing installments on March 31 this year.

CAMPAIGN ON TO RAISE $5,000 FOR ORPHANS

The Baptists of Alabama are in a campaign to raise $5,000.00 on Mother's Day for their orphans home.

What can be more appropriate on Mother's Day than a cash offering "in memory of Mother for Motherless children?" There are 171 children in the Baptist Home who are deprived of Mother's love and care. They are the wards of the Baptists of Alabama and are supported by free will offerings of the state. This day has been set apart officially by the Baptists of Alabama for a cash contribution. It is expected that they will respond liberally. The goal is $5,000.00.

FARMERS SHOULD APPRAISE TIMBER BEFORE SELLING

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers will profit by knowing the value of their timber when selling it, reports Lyle Brown, extension forester, who gives the following experiences of two farmers which may be of value to other farmers.

"The first farmer sold a 6 1-2 acre stand of timber. He sold that timber for $260. Too late, he learned from an appraisal by an expert forester that tre stand was really worth $1,436 at market prices.

"The other farmer," the forester tells about, "was a little more canny in his dealings. He had an offer of $1,500 for his timber. But when he got that offer he called a State forester for an estimate. As a result, he refused the first offer of $1,500 and finally sold his timber for more than $5,000."

SENIOR CLASS WILL PRESENT PLAY ON FRIDAY, MAY 10TH

"The Red Headed Step Child", a comedy-drama in three acts by Charles George, will be presented on May 10th in the Shelby County High School Auditorium at 8:00 p. m., by the Senior Class. This play is under the direction of Miss Elizabeth Souders, senior class advisor.

When Richard Russell brings his young daughter, by his first marriage, from the Westerland where she has been brought up without education or culture to his fashionable Chicago home to live, society predicted that the experiment would be a failure. Whether it is or not, you will have to come and see for yourself. Of course, Bess, the daughter, must adapt herself to an entirely new environment and the method she employs and the results of this method furnishes an abundance of humorous situations and dramatically tense moments.

The cast for the play includes: Mrs. Edith Russell, Richard's second wife, Jeanette Niven; Mrs. Olive Woodruff, Beatrice Looney; Mrs. Emory Scott, Miriam McMillan; Briggs, the Russell's butler, Robert Bates; Lucia Russell, their daughter, Kathleen Mooney; Dudley Russell, their slangy son, Hugh Miller; Richard Russell, Bess' lovable father, Bill Sims; Elizabeth Russell (Bess), Richard's daughter from the West, Ellen Ruth Isbell; George Garrison, Lucia's admirer (presumably), Pierson West; Ethel Ashley, Mary McCarley; Lucille Christy, Florence McGiboney; Flora Farnum, Dudley's inamorata, Marene Edmundson.

The public is cordially invited to attend. Admission will be 15 and 25 cents, and 35 cents for reserved seats.

CLUB MEMBERS OFFERED PRIZES

AUBURN, Ala.—Prizes valued at more than $1,000 are offered Alabama 4-H club members who keep accurate farm records this year in the National Farm Account Contest, reports T. A. Sims, director of 4-H club work in the State.

"Those wishing to secure details about the contest may obtain them from the county farm or home demonstration agent," advises Mr. Sims.

82.9 PER CENT OF STATE LAND NEEDS TO FIGHT EROSION

AUBURN, Ala.—Soil erosion—in which the Federal Government is now taking a determined stand—is a major destroyer in Alabama. Already one million acres of farm land in this state have been ruined by it for practical tillage purposes and a much larger area is headed in the same direction, according to a report received at the college of agriculture here from the Federal Soil Erosion Service of which H. H. Bennett is director.

A reconnaissance survey which covered every county in Alabama revealed that 82.9 percent of the total area was "suffering in some degree from erosion." Explicitly, sheet washing was found prevalent on more than 25 million acres; and active gullying on nearly 25 million acres.

Dividing the state for erosion studies, the observers found little or no erosion on 5,616,851 acres or 17.1 percent of the total area in the state, exclusive of large cities and water.

The observers found also that "one-fourth to three-fourths of the topsoil had been lost on 17,182,166 acres or 32.2 percent of the total." More than three-fourths of the topsoil and a portion of subsoil had been lost on 8,240 954 acres or 25.0 percent of the total.

The 22,861,601 acres affected by gullying were divided into "occasional gullies" with 19,908,692 acres or 60.5 percent; "severe gullies," 2,947,728 acres or 9.0 percent; and "destroyed by gullies," 5,181 acres.

Most of these soils have lost 50 to 75 percent of the topsoil by continuous clean-cultivation of row crops of cotton and corn plus improper handling of the soil. Many deep gullies have been formed, completely destroying valuable farm land by the concentration of excess run-off water and its uncontrolled rush down the slopes. Thousands of acres of once fertile farm and pasture lands along streams were covered to various depths by inert soil material.

MEMORIAL SERVICES AT SPRING CREEK, MAY 26

SPRING CREEK, Ala.—There will be Memorial Services conducted at Spring Creek Church on the 4th Sunday in May. All friends who have relatives or friends buried there, are requested to come and bring their dinner and spend the day. There will be speaking and singing every one will enjoy. All persons interested are requested to meet on Friday morning, May 24, at the Cemetery, to clean off grounds around the church, the cemetery, and fill up the graves that are in bad shape.

ALL-DAY SERVICE AT ANTIOCH, MAY 12TH

A home-coming service has been planned to be held at Antioch Church in Kingdom Community on Mother's Day which is next Sunday, May 12.

The exercises will begin at 10:00 o'clock and special numbers, consisting of duets, recitations and readings will be given. Some good visiting singers are expected to add much to the program.

Dinner will be spread on the church lawn, after which there will be more music, readings, tributes to Mother and a brief address by a visiting speaker. All are cordially invited to attend this service.

Miss Charlie Verne Tinney, of Alabama College, was a visitor in Columbiana, last week-end.

Senate Committee Defies President and Richberg on NRA Extension—Roosevelt Lists "Must" Bills and Business Opposes Them.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

DISREGARDING the wishes of President Roosevelt, the finance committee of the senate adopted and reported for passage a simple resolution continuing the national recovery act until April 1, 1936, and at the same time making these provisions:

Donald Richberg

1. No price fixing shall be permitted or sanctioned in codes, except in those relating to mineral or natural resources which now have price fixing provisions.

2. No trade engaged in intrastate commerce shall be eligible for a code.

3. The President is given specified time in which to review present codes to carry out the conditions laid down in the first two exceptions to the resolution.

Both President Roosevelt and Donald Richberg, head of the NRA, had urged the passage of a new two year NRA bill which would set up a stricter dictatorship over business and industry. The senate finance committee, however, would not consent to this and instead passed the resolution, which was drawn up by Senator Clark of Missouri and approved by Chairman Pat Harrison. Twelve senators first called at the White House and the President seemed willing to accept the continuing resolution until Mr. Richberg came in and protested urgently; whereupon Mr. Roosevelt turned it down. The committee then took the action noted by a vote of 16 to 3, defying both the President and Richberg.

Senator Harrison said he had no doubt the senate would adopt the resolution with little debate.

HIGH optimism marked the "fireside chat" which President Roosevelt delivered over the radio to the people of America, which people. he said, are, as a whole, "feeling a lot better—a lot more cheerful than for many, many years." He asserted we are already on the unmistakable march toward recovery, and told how he means to promote the return to normal conditions with his works relief program. He promised to put to work three and a half million persons now on the relief rolls, and to press for enactment of legislation he considers necessary for carrying on the New Deal.

President Roosevelt

Only once did Mr. Roosevelt allude to such critics of his administration as Senator Long, Father Coughlin and Governor Talmadge. He said:

"The overwhelming majority of people in this country know how to sift the wheat from the chaff in what they hear and what they read. They know that the process of the constructive rebuilding of America cannot be done in a day or a year, but that it is being done in spite of a few who seek to confuse them and to profit by their confusion."

These six "fundamental principles," said the President, must guide the work relief program: Projects must be useful, most of the money must go for labor, "a considerable proportion of the costs" must be returned to the treasury, only those projects which can employ persons on relief will be approved, and projects will be approved in a given area in proportion to the unemployed in that area.

LEGISLATION which the President said, in his radio talk, should be enacted by congress immediately included the old age and unemployment insurance bill, the NRA extension bill, the public utility holding company bill, the transportation control bill, and the banking bill.

Here he comes into conflict again with the views of business leaders of the country. The National Association of Manufacturers has just issued its economic analysis of conditions, which says recovery is "within our grasp" and that the nation is closer to breaking the back of the depression than at any time for years, but asks that, in order to stimulate business, the administration and congress temporarily shelve as "disturbing" such legislation as unemployment insurance, the omnibus banking bill, the utility holding company bill, the 30-hour work week, the Wagner labor disputes bill, the Guffey bituminous coal measure and proposed changes in railroad laws.

Of tied-up capital, the analysis said this:

"Surveys indicate that close to $20,000,000,000 in expenditures, which would give employment to 4,000,000 men for two years, is pent up in the field of factory expansion, renovation and rehabilitation alone.

"The release of this flow of private capital by removing political uncertainties would dwarf the billions appropriated by congress for relief and make unnecessary the expenditure of much of the taxpayers' money."

This document was given out as the members of the United States Chamber of Commerce were gathering in Washington for their twenty-third annual convention, and naturally their speakers endorsed it and attacked much of the proposed legislation mentioned as unwarranted intrusion of the government into business.

Before it adjourned the chamber adopted resolutions condemning abolition of utility holding companies, opposing the banking bill, asking for relaxation and extension of the NRA instead of the administration bill, and postponing "for further study" the question of social security.

Henry I. Harriman, who has been president of the organization for three years, retired from that office in favor of Harper Sibley of Rochester, N. Y.

HOW the New Dealers propose to redistribute wealth by double taxation of large estates is revealed by Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau in a letter to Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee. Mr Morgenthau outlines a plan of imposing inheritance taxes and also retaining the existing estate taxes, asserting this is in line with "our fundamental objectives." That this would result in the dissolution of large properties, the secretary recognizes, for he says:

Secretary Morgenthau

"To prevent the necessity of hasty liquidation of large properties in order to pay the tax, it might be provided that inheritance taxes be payable in a convenient number of installments."

The plan as outlined by Mr. Morgenthau is to impose graduated inheritance taxes on estates, with rates following those of the present income tax rates, which approximate 60 per cent on incomes of a million dollars or more. The present estate taxes have a maximum of 60 per cent over ten million dollars.

Thus there would first be a tax of 60 per cent upon the estate or gift, and then another tax of 60 per cent to be paid by those inheriting or receiving it. This would amount to a combined rate of 85 per cent on an estate of one hundred million dollars.

If all this money were handed out to the poorer people, even Huey Long might be satisfied.

SECRETARY ICKES' Department of the Interior has now been elevated to the level of the State, Treasury and Agriculture departments, for congress has granted one of Harold's dearest wishes and given him an undersecretary, whose salary is to be $10,000 a year. This was a senate amendment to the Interior department appropriation bill, and was accepted by the house, 243 to 92, only after considerable pressure had been applied by the administration. Many of the house Democrats have asserted that Mr. Ickes snubbed them, and they would have liked nothing better than to administer a rebuke to him by defeating the amendment, but the party leaders drove them into line.

ARIZONA'S victory over the government in the Parker dam case ruled on by the Supreme court alarmed the New Dealers for the safety of some of their other big projects of the same nature. The court decided that Secretary Ickes, as public works administrator, was without authority to dam navigable rivers unless specifically ordered by congress and that the law creating the PWA had not listed any such specific projects as the Parker dam. The same applies to many huge reclamation projects that have received PWA funds, and it is not unlikely that suits will be brought to stop some of them. Mr. Ickes said congress would be asked to authorize specifically the construction of the Parker dam.

FEDERAL Judges Woodward, Wilkerson and Lindley of Chicago are not going to be impeached, for the house subcommittee investigating equity and bankruptcy receiverships and practices reported the evidence taken did not warrant such action. The report said that in several instances "conduct prejudicial to the dignity of the federal judiciary" was disclosed, but that substantial improvements had been made both in the rules of the court and in the law applicable to the administrator of receiverships and bankruptcy litigation.

CHAIRMAN JOHN J. M'SWAIN of the house military affairs committee sent to the President a letter of apology for disclosure of defense plans outlined in execeutive sessions of the committee, and assumed full responsibility for "the unfortunate incident."

McSwain was rebuked by letter from the President for the publication in a house document of possible defense plans against Canada and British and French islands in the Atlantic and the Caribbean in the event of war. Brig. Gens. F. M. Andrews and Charles E. Kilbourne had outlined the program before a secret meeting of the committee.

FOREIGN MINISTER PIERRE LAVAL of France and Ambassador Potemkin of Russia finally fixed up the mutual assistance pact between the two countries in a way acceptable to both and it was signed in Paris. M. Laval then prepared to leave for Moscow, planning to stop in Warsaw en route.

It would seem that Laval had his way with the treaty, for it subordinates military action of the two powers to the procedure of the League of Nations, to provisions of the Locarno pact and also to the Franco-Polish alliance. All of that probably would keep France out of war even if Russia were attacked. In Paris it was taken for granted that a secret military convention, supplementing the pact, would soon be signed, fixing the methods of mutual assistance.

SETTING a new transcontinental record for transport ships, a TWA test plane flew from Burbank, Calif., to New York in 11 hours and 5 minutes. What is more important, for all but about one hundred miles it was controlled by a robot pilot. D. W. Tomlinson, the pilot, was accompanied by Harold Snead, an expert on radio beam flying, and Peter Redpath, navigation engineer. Tomlinson had the controls for only three brief intervals—over the San Bernardino range, at Durango, Colo., where a snowstorm was encountered, and at the landing at Floyd Bennett field. The plane reached its greatest cruising speed of 262 miles an hour over the Allegheny mountains.

TEXANS are going to have the opportunity of deciding whether their state shall remain dry or fall into line with most other states and repeal the prohibition law. The legislature has voted to submit the question to popular action.

Under the resolution adopted the vote would be held next August 24. Regulation would be left to the legislature and at the general election in 1936, a vote would be taken on a mandatory state monopoly over sales of hard liquor. Local option would be preserved under both straight repeal and the monopoly under the straight repeal plan, which also would bar the return of the open saloon.

GERMANY'S latest breach of the treaty of Versailles, the building of submarines, is stirring up a lot of angry talk in Great Britain, France and Italy. The English are especially disturbed, for they remember only too vividly how near the Germans came to starving them during the war by the destruction of shipping by the undersea boats. Anglo-German conversations on naval restriction were to have been held in London the second week in May, and these may now be called off or at least postponed.

The French are less vexed because they think the development may force a showdown on the whole status of the German navy and Hitler's demand for at least 35 per cent of the British tonnage and approximate parity with that of France. Naval experts in Paris said the disclosure might "well prove of inestimable benefit for military France in awakening naval Britain to the dangers of Hitler's armaments policy."

Information obtained by the powers was that Germany already had under construction a number of 250-ton submarines and planned a large fleet of them. Spokesmen for the German government denied that any were being built yet, but at the same time admitted that submarines were being "considered" in connection with plans for rebuilding the navy.

HAVING listened to Senator Long of Louisiana and other orators who do not like the administration and its New Deal and also have little love for the G. O. P., the National Farmers' Holiday association, in session at Des Moines, Iowa, decided that a third national political party should be formed.

Milo Reno

Milo Reno, national president of the association, had a lively encounter with a group of alleged Communists during a business session. They sought adoption of a resolution calling for legislation for "relief without debts," "production credit without strings," and immediate repeal of the AAA. Reno denounced them as Wall Street racketeers and henchmen of Soviet Russia.

"You can't talk. You can't argue. Don't try to get the floor. I'm running this meeting," Reno said. "Sit down and shut up. Get out before we get really mad."

REPUBLICANS of nine midwestern states who met at Excelsior Springs, Mo., decided that the "grass roots" conference of leaders of the party should be held in Springfield, Ill., the date to be fixed later, though it probably will be early in June. The purpose of this gathering will be the rejuvenation of the party and the launching of a campaign to restore popular government.

POLICE of Havana apparently are well on the way to solution of the mystery of the fire which destroyed the Ward liner Morro Castle and other recent marine disasters. They have arrested three men, all natives of Catalan province in Spain, and say that they found on their persons letters of instruction concerning the destruction of the steamship Magallanes of the Spanish line, which was soon due in Havana. The documents, according to the authorities, ordered the accused to "take necessary action to precipitate a disaster similar to that of the Morro Castle." The police say the prisoners are well-known anarchists.

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—The beautiful friendship between James M. Curley and Franklin D. Roosevelt, which grew so vigorously in the spring and summer of 1932, and appeared to bloom in 1933, seems to have wilted. No official statement as to just why the governor of Massachusetts and the President of the United States are no longer David and Jonathan is forthcoming, but there are rumors aplenty.

Back in the golden days of this friendship there were many friends of both who predicted that James Roosevelt, sometimes called the favorite son of the Chief Executive would one day, with the backing of Curley, be governor of the Bay state. But now this prospect is also out of the window, for the time being at least. James no longer holds forth at Cambridge. He has moved to New York, perhaps temporarily, but certainly with no obvious intention of retaining his residence in Massachusetts.

Unkind critics say the instigator of the move was none other than the President himself, and that it was not wholly unconnected with the cooling in the friendship between himself and Governor Curley. It was partly through James Roosevelt that Curley was so successful in getting many of his friends and lieutenants put on the federal payroll in key positions. Certainly most of the appointees desired by Curley had the endorsement of James Roosevelt when they went across the desk of Patronage Dispenser Farley, the genial postmaster general.

In fact, Farley was even willing to appoint Former Representative Peter F. Tague as Boston postmaster, on Curley's recommendation, although both Senators Walsh and Coolidge had made it clear they would block his confirmation.

Got Cold Shoulder

Back in his campaign for the governorship Curley confided to the Massachusetts electorate that he, if elected, would be able to bring home a lot of federal appropriations to the Bay state, whereas, he hinted what could Massachusetts expect of an old line Republican like Bacon?

During the recent visit of New England governors to Washington to demand help for their closing textile mills, to insist on something being done about Japanese competition, and to protest against the cotton processing tax, Governor Curley, it appeared to some of them, rather got the cold shoulder.

In fact, one of the governors remarked afterwards that when he came to Washington from now on he was coming alone.

Which is a far cry from the days when Roosevelt was clapping Curley on the shoulder, telling him how sorry he was he could not put him in the cabinet, inquiring whether he would not be acceptable to Mussolini as ambassador to Rome, and later, on this blowing up, offering him the Polish embassy.

Just as Curley's recent speech before the General Motors show at Boston, when he sideswiped the New Deal rather effectively, was a far cry from his speeches, either in 1932 or 1934, from which his auditors got the distinct impression that Roosevelt was one of the world's noblemen, of unequalled ability.

Who threw the first stone is always an interesting question, and there is a lot of speculation about this case, especially since James Roosevelt was literally moved out of Massachusetts by the President. But certainly Relief Administrator Hopkins and Public Works Administrator Ickes have not helped to smooth matters over. To put it mildly, they have not looked out for Governor Curley's interest. Curley hit back vigorously, as he always does, whereupon the White House itself gave him a reception which did not enhance his prestige with the other New England governors.

Italy Clamps Down

Negotiations—quite unofficial—with Italy to induce that country to remove her very drastic restrictions on American imports, have gotten precisely nowhere to date, and the prospect is not very bright. Italy has clamped down on imports of American automobiles, office machinery, farm machinery, cotton, and dozens of other products to just one-fourth of the 1934 figures. And the 1934 figures were not very large!

But the representatives of Italy, discussing the situation informally with State department officials, say they would be glad to buy if they only had something to use for money! And it is proving very difficult to answer them. For what they mean, of course, is that they cannot go on indefinitely buying more than they sell. So it comes down to this: America must take more Italian goods if she wants to keep on selling to Italy as she did up to this month. (The restrictions have just gone into effect).

"What do you want?" the State department negotiators in effect asked the Italians:

"We want your market opened up for our lemons, tomato paste, silk and hats—straw and felt hats," the Italians replied in effect.

There is enough political dynamite in that answer to wreck any political party, and the terrible part of it is the Italians know it as well as the State department officials who were nonplussed at the answer. Which is one of the reasons why Secretary of State Hull's reciprocal trade agreements have not made more progress.

Curiously enough the Italians have not manifested the expected desire that something be done about wines. They are just discouraged about America as a wine market. They believe the country has lost its taste for good wines, and while they of course do not concede that French wines are superior to Italian wines, they know that France is suffering from the same disappointment.

As a Wine Market

A very important Italian official in Washington recently dined with some Italo-American friends. They had all been born in Italy, and he presumed of course that their taste in wine would be good.

"Maybe it was a hint, and I did not recognize it," he told the writer. "Maybe they thought I would at once send them a case of really good wine from the embassy. But the fact is they served me some perfectly miserable wine. I think it was California. Certainly it was not imported. My own thought is that if Italian people, as a result of American prohibition, have had their tastes so impaired, what hope is there for our recovering even the market for our wines that we had before prohibition?"

California, and to a lesser extent New York state and some other sections, are certainly out to get whatever market there is in this country for low-priced wines. California's problem on this is simple, but interesting. When prohibition came, many California vineyards were plowed under. Then arose a tremendous demand for grapes from would-be wine makers. So the price of grapes soared. California overdid the planting in attempting to meet this demand, but this was not apparent until along about 1930, because it takes grapes some time to come into bearing.

Then, to get rid of the grapes at some price or other, there developed the business of experts making wine for people in their own cellars, thus avoiding the tolls of the law. This business mounted to unbelievable proportions in the last two years of prohibition. Then it blew up, and it became necessary to market the California wine in the normal way. Which California has been doing, to the great distress of foreign wine makers.

But any tinkering with the wine tariff in behalf of Italy or France, or any other country, will find a solid phalanx of Californians ready to die in the breach, if necessary.

From Cotton to Corn

Prospects that the South will buy less corn from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other big corn raising states of the Mid-West are already disturbing senators and members of the house from that region. So far there are no political repercussions in the corn raising states, but they are coming, unless some very shrewd observers miss their guess very badly.

What has happened is this: cotton planters, taking money not to raise cotton, in many instances have turned to corn. This is said to be true all through the cotton belt. But the cotton belt has always been a splendid market for middle western corn. Just to cite a typical example, Georgia formerly bought about 60,000,000 bushels a year, though perfectly capable of supplying her own corn needs without bringing in a bushel.

So this splendid market for midwest corn just may not be there this year! Whereupon there will be very loud outcries indeed against a government which has paid the southern planters not to raise cotton.

It is rather curious, but in the old days before the boll weevil became such a menace in the southeastern states, the Department of Agriculture campaigned all the time for diversification. The department experts wanted the cotton planters to turn to other crops, to produce their own pork, their own milk and butter, their own corn, etc.

The boll weevil came along after years of intensive but utterly futile effort in this direction. Some sections were transformed. In one county of Georgia there is a monument to the boll weevil, in a tribute to the increased prosperity its ravages eventually produced for that section.

Gets Another Push

Now along comes the cotton curtailment program, and gives another push in the same direction. Which is all very well for the South—though there are those who have their grave doubts about that, what with the speedy development of foreign cotton production, which makes one wonder about the future—but what about the producers who formerly supplied the South with what the South is now raising? Particularly the corn growers of the Middle West?

This particular storm has not burst. Yet it would be most timely at the moment, with AAA under fire about the cotton processing tax, with New England and southern mills closing down allegedly because of Japanese textile competition, and AAA none too popular anyhow.

No one in Washington seems to be taking a long range view of the problem. But it is most interesting that the storm center of trouble seems likely to be in the Middle West—the states from Indiana to Iowa—by harvest time. This is important because if the storm center were in the South, while there might be plenty of political thunder and lightning there, no one would figure it very seriously with respect to political prospects next year.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

HISTORIC HEAT WAVE

JUNE, 1920. In the city of Chicago for six days the temperature had been above 90 degrees. Delegates to the Republican national convention had sweltered through those six days with nerves worn to a frazzle. There was a deadlock between the two leading candidates, Gov. Frank O. Lowden and Gen. Leonard Wood.

Then the "Senatorial Group," which had engineered the deadlock, got busy and offered for a compromise candidate, Senator Warren G. Harding of Ohio. The hot, weary convention was ready to take anybody, so enough votes were switched to Harding to insure his nomination.

Next a candidate for Vice President had to be chosen. The "Senatorial Group" had planned to give this honor to Senator Irvine L. Lenroot of Wisconsin—thus making it an all-senatorial ticket. But there was an unlooked-for interruption to their steamroller plan. Medill McCormick of Illinois was making the speech for Lenroot when, from the floor of the convention hall, Wallace McCamant, a delegate from Oregon, leaped to his feet.

He called out, "We want Coolidge! We want Coolidge!" Others took up the cry. When McCormick finished his speech and turned to leave the platform, McCamant shouted, "I nominate Gov. Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts for Vice President.

The stampede was under way. The perspiring delegates, disgusted with the "Senatorial Group" for the deadlock which had kept them sweltering for nearly a week in expensive hotels, saw a chance to retaliate. The engineers of the steam roller could not crush the uprising and Coolidge was nominated.

When Harding died in 1923, Coolidge became President. And the man who was sent to the White House by a heat-wave was re-elected with help of a slogan, "Keep Cool with Coolidge!"

POCKETFUL OF DESTINY

IT WAS the night of December 25, 1776. In the home of the Tory, Mr. Hunt, in Trenton, N. J., Col. Johann Gottlieb Rall and his Hessian officers were celebrating Christmas with much song and good cheer, the latter poured from tall bottles. A Tory named Wall knocked on the door. On the Pennsylvania side of the Delaware river he had seen Gen. George Washington's "rebel army" launching boats in the ice-choked stream.

Denied admittance by Rall's negro slave, the Tory hastily scribbled a note of warning. The bleary-eyed colonel glanced at the scrap of paper and saw it was written in English. He would ask Mr. Hunt to read it to him later. So he stuffed it into his waistcoat pocket. When he stumbled away at dawn, the forgotten message was still unread.

Three hours later Washington and his Continentals stormed into Trenton. The sleepy, liquor-befuddled Rall tried to rally his Hessians to stem the onslaught. But it was in vain. He went down with two bullets in his body. They carried him into a church and laid him on a bench to die.

Out of his pocket fell a scrap of paper. As he listened to what was written on it, he groaned "If I had read that at Mr. Hunt's, I'd not be here . . ." Johann Gottlieb Rall held the destiny of a nation in his pocket and didn't know it. For Washington's victory at Trenton revived the waning hopes of the Patriots and helped them carry on to final success.

DESERTER'S KNAPSACK

IT WAS just a ragged deserter's knapsack . . . full of rations.

A Union army, commanded by Gen. U. S. Grant, was on the way to attack Fort Donelson, Tenn. They were weary when the command came to halt. The staff officers surrounded their commander-in-chief and talked over the advisability of continuing the march. They all agreed that their men would be more eager for the coming fight if they stopped the march and took 24 hours rest.

The general listened to their comments and then called his aide. "Bring me that deserter who came in early today," he ordered. Then he turned to his astonished officers. "We will see what we can find out before we give any final orders."

The deserter was brought in and Grant took away his knapsack, rummaging around in its contents while he questioned the owner. "Where are you from?" he asked. "Fort Donelson," replied the deserter. "When were these rations issued?" snapped the general. "Yesterday morning—we all got the same," answered the worried target of the general's barrage.

Grant looked triumphantly at his staff. "Gentlemen," he said, "six days' rations are not issued to men in a fort if they intend to stay there and fight! This means a retreat is planned. We will attack at once!"

They did, with the subsequent result that Fort Donelson, a key point in the Confederate line of defense in the West, fell into Union hands.

CRIMINALS ON RUN AS U. S. SLEUTHS TAKE THEIR TRAIL

May Dodge Local Authorities but Never Uncle Sam's Secret Service Men.

Washington.—Fidgety, apprehensive are criminals over the land. Uncle Sam is dogging their trails. Easy it may be for them to dodge local authorities—but not federal authorities. Uncle Sam is ubiquitous.

So these fidgety, apprehensive criminals learned a short time ago under the whip of a national drive cracked by the federal government in principal cities from coast to coast, from the Canadian boundary to the gulf.

More than 2,000 men and women were seized, hundreds of them engaged in drug traffic. This is a sordid business. For years governments have sought to break it up, but to little avail. It is not that the law enforcers are lax or insincere; it is that the dealers in narcotics are too wily, too clever.

Ingenuity Shown.

The general public has not even the faintest idea of the extremes to which narcotics traffickers will go to carry on their nefarious trade.

With this, Stuart Fuller, State department official, agrees. Mr. Fuller is assistant chief of the far eastern affairs of that department, and has devoted considerable time and effort to suppression of international drug trade.

"The ingenuity of the drug trafficker is beyond belief," commented Mr. Fuller, going over his files. "Many of the cases which come to our attention are more spectacular than the wildest detective tales. Drug smugglers will dare anything to deliver their contraband. We have found drugs hidden in the hollow heels of shoes, brass bedsteads, grindstones, journal boxes of railway cars, camel saddles, automobile cushions—and even in Bibles, coffins and tombstones."

Mr. Fuller cited a few classic examples.

"There was the case of the turtles," related Mr. Fuller. "Aboard a ship was placed a consignment of live turtles in open tubs of water. This was not considered unusual but one day the ship's carpenter decided to give the turtles a change of water. He emptied the tubs. Unconsciously, his experienced eye detected something wrong with the staves in the tubs. He examined them, found quantities of opium secreted within the staves.

Smugglers Use Camels.

"Then there was the time smugglers used camels. The scene was the Egyptian frontier. Along came a caravan of camels. They carried no burdens, but it was explained that they were being brought to Egypt for sale. The officer in charge of the customs patrol being fond of animals went up to one of the camels and stroked it. On the camel's hump he felt something which did not seem to be camel. He examined it, and found that places had been shaved in the heavy hair on the camel's humps, and bricks of hashish had been glued in those places and hair glued over the bricks."

Mr. Fuller recalled another case in which an apparently innocent shipment of mineral wax was found upon examination to be a mixture of heroin and paraffin wax. A simple chemical process would have reclaimed the heroin.

"But it took agents of five governments to solve that one," added Mr. Fuller.

Policeman Is Mortified as He Finds Alibi True

Kansas City, Mo.—The policeman snorted at the hearse driver's story. He had heard much better excuses from scores of other motorists arrested for not having their 1935 city license stickers.

"Please don't stop me," the driver pleaded, "I have a body I must get to the funeral home quickly."

"Oh, one of those real excuses, is it?" countered the skeptical officer.

The driver presented a death certificate showing the victim had died of epidemic meningitis, a deadly and contagious disease.

"Drive on, pal, and make it snappy," said the policeman, sheathing his summons book.

Police Dog Is Regular Member of Town's Force

Wakefield, Mass.—The Wakefield police have a dog on their force. Teddy, a Belgian police dog, makes the rounds with his master, Patrolman Hardy Russell. The only dog ever allowed inside the guard room, it answers to the roll call with a short bark when its name is read. Teddy also reports to the station house from various police boxes with a bark.

One stormy winter's night the dog suddenly began to bark and attracted his master. He had found an unconscious man lying in the snow.

Poor Physiology Saves Lovesick Youth's Life

Valentine, Neb. — Lovesick Robert Lovejoy, twenty-two, is alive today because his heart is not on the right side. Despondent over a quarrel with his young wife, Lovejoy asked a friend on which side of the body the heart is located. He was told it is on the right and sent a rifle bullet through his right breast. Physicians who said he is recovering, said had the wound been inflicted in a corresponding left section of his body, he would have shot himself through the heart.

POULTRY

CHICKEN MANURE RICH FERTILIZER

Should Be Used Only With Other Ingredients.

By Dr. H. B. Mann, Agronomist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Poultry growers may use chicken manure in home-mixed fertilizers to materially reduce the cost of crop fertilization. The manure is rich in organic matter, but is not a complete fertilizer; consequently, it should not be applied without the other ingredients necessary to supply the proper plant food.

A mixture, including chicken manure, is as follows:

A ratio of 1,100 pounds of chicken manure, 600 pounds of acid phosphate, 200 pounds of nitrate of soda, and 100 pounds of potash.

This mixture is not suitable for all crops or all types of soil, but the county agents or the fertilizer specialists at State college will be glad to furnish formulas to growers who wish them.

One farmer applied the mixture at the rate of 350 pounds to the acre on a crop of corn and secured a yield of 40 bushels per acre. The farmer had intended to apply a side dressing of 75 pounds of sulphate of ammonia, but was prevented by the excessive rains.

The same mixture was used on ensilage corn and a yield of ten tons of ensilage per acre was secured.

This fertilizer is mixed like any other home mixture. However, the manure must be kept dry until ready for use. The manure should be cleaned off the dropping boards only when it is dry and be placed in sacks and stored in a dry place. The fertilizer can be mixed at the time of application.

Lights for Turkeys Are Demonstrated in Kansas

By stimulating early production in the breeding flock, it is possible to hustle young turkeys on to a late August or early September market and thus cash in on the high market prices prevailing at that time. The practicability of such a plan has been demonstrated at the Kansas experiment station, says Successful Farming.

In 1933 the station succeeded in stimulating early egg production by using morning lights. Under this plan of management the breeders were segregated from the regular college breeding flock on December 1, 1932, and placed in an ordinary laying house, which allowed about 14 square feet of floor space per bird. Morning light was turned on at 4:30 at the beginning, but as the days became longer this time was shortened. An ordinary 50-watt bulb with reflector gave an ample supply of light for each 15 by 15 feet compartment. After the birds were once confined in the house they were not allowed to run outside until the breeding season was over.

Sunshine Prevents Rickets

"If chicks receive a minimum of ten minutes daily of direct sunshine during the spring months," says Dr. L. E. Card, University of Illinois, "and are fed a ration that is complete except for the antirachitic factor, they are very unlikely to develop any symptom of rickets." This conclusion is the result of an experiment conducted at Ithaca, N. Y., to learn what the minimum of sunshine is that will prevent rickets. The experiment at Ithaca showed a minimum daily exposure since that point is one of the two areas in the United States that receive the least sunshine.

Separate Turkeys, Chickens

It is advocated that turkeys be kept away from chickens, that it is impossible to rear the two kinds of fowls together. That is not true merely because the two fowls are different, or because the chicken has some mysterious power for evil over the turkey, it is simply because nine out of ten farm hens are infested with the cecal worm, which is the intermediate host for the blackhead germ, and it is highly necessary to keep poults from coming in contact with this worm. If chickens were absolutely free of this worm, as well as other kinds, there would be no danger in permitting them to run together.

Poultry Facts

Surplus chickens may be safely canned at home.

Two pounds of wheat have about as much value in the poultry ration as a pound of bran and a pound of flour middlings.

Since the rooster will influence the chicks of each 12 hens, it becomes true that "the rooster is more than half the flock."

Excessively high summer temperatures are known to cause a decrease in egg size.

Colored lights are now used to candle eggs. Candled before a green or blue light, the content of the egg is more easily seen.

Egg laying ability of hens is an inherited characteristic. At Vineland, N. J., in a state egg-laying contest, one pen averaged 258 eggs per bird, another 121 eggs. Both pens were similarly cared for.

The Grunt

By BRUCE L. SCHMUNK

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

JUSTIN wasn't the type one would encounter ordinarily in a line gang. In the first place appearance beguiled his age; secondly, he exhibited more grace of culture than accoutrements of physical prowess.

I looked at the fellow for a moment the morning that Mansel, the district superintendent, brought him to the service desk, and decided in the same moment that he would be a complete misfit.

Smiling at Mansel I asked, "Line gang?"

"Nothing else open?" he queried.

"Nothing," I replied.

"Then give him a chance there," he instructed me. "But," he hesitated to add, "work him into Squint's crew."

On the following morning without formality, Justin was installed in the line crew of Squint Makony. Squint was foreman, a powerful man physically, and a congenial one socially. To the "hot stuff" with which he had worked for twenty years he was a blood brother. Mike Rullo, the other veteran lineman of the gang, was a man in a very masculine sense. Mike was careless, rough of manner and possessed of the benign brutality of utterance which is so often characteristic of men whose work demands stamina and develops physical ascendancy. The third member, Pete Bloom, a junior lineman, ranked well below the other two in moral stature.

Justin became, according to linemen's parlance, "the Grunt." He was to run errands, help load the truck, manipulate the ladders, handle the solder pot and bear the brunt of all jokes. It's a hard road from grunt to lineman.

One day soon after his inauguration, the Grunt was talking to Squint about the period of apprenticeship. He did not say that he would be willing to pay any price for a chance to climb, but such admission would have been superfluous; Squint knew it. Pete, overhearing the Grunt's remarks, seized the opportunity they afforded.

"You want to be a lineman, huh, boy?" he asked, binding sarcasm with inflection.

Justin colored. "I was talking to Squint, Jete," he answered.

Squint, one eye almost closed, turned to the junior lineman. The latter understood the tacit warning but he ventured one more thrust.

"Okeh, boss; but you ought to be orderin' a set o' rubber spurs for it. Them ones is made sharp."

The last consonant was still audible when a huge hand struck the side of the speaker's head. "You know it's time to lay off!" snapped Squint. "Now lay off!"

* * * * * * *

Although rain had fallen during the afternoon, there were no indications of an impending storm. The crews had gone off duty. Carter was at the service desk. He told me later he didn't realize there was a disturbance until one of the converters kicked over.

Within an hour four factories became paralyzed. Every minute cost the company money—penalty money. Squint's crew was the first called.

When I found them they were already at work on a pole about two hundred yards from the substation. The beam from the spot light on the truck enveloped Squint and Mike who were feverishly attempting temporary splices on the lower bank. Peter, carrying a searchlight, was walking the lines extending to the mills. The Grunt was making ready dry gloves for the men in the safety belts.

The mitts were half way to the top of the stick when it happened. A blinding flash of green light . . . a terrible hissing sound . . . a dull sickening thud as a limp body struck the mud—then silence. Mike sprawled in the muck; Squint hung motionless from his belt below the first cross-arm.

The Grunt looked at me and coughed. I tried to swallow to relieve the nausea. Pete, who had run to us, stood shaking, inarticulate.

While I bent over Mike, the Grunt removed spurs and safety belt. Pete, shaking violently, came nearer.

"Let's get him into the car," I said. Pete responded as well as he could; the Grunt had gone. We turned in time to see him buckle his safety belt around the slippery pole. Pete's teeth were chattering.

"Boss," Pete managed to stutter, "the Grunt ain't never shinned a pole. He'll get burnt, sure as—" The words died in a crash of thunder.

The kid on the pole swayed in the wind. We watched him dig in his spurs and then with difficulty tie a double hand line around Squint directly under his arms. Through a cross-arm brace he worked the rope, then called to the ground for action. A few inches at a time we let Squint down while the Grunt guided his head past bolt heads and projections. That sight I shall never forget. The Grunt fell the last ten feet.

Back in the substation hours later the crew foreman regained consciousness. I couldn't describe the emotional reaction of the younger man when old Squint opened his eyes.

After the accident the complexion of the gang changed. Mansel transferred the Grunt to the main office. He is short two fingers crushed that night on the pole, but he is happy; Squint is on the job again. The man who thought of the rubber spurs is Grunt on one of the other crews now. Mike? Well, Mike hasn't been with the company since the night of the storm.

DOLLS OF MANY LANDS SHOWN IN PUBLIC LIBRARY

In the children's room at the public library at Westfield, Ohio, called the Atheneum, various dolls, illustrating well-known historical characters and others appearing in children's books, are on display.

In the dolls representing characters from literature group an interesting figure is that of Tiny Tim, created by Dickens in his immortal "The Christmas Carol." The small bit of Royal Doulton china shows an amazing likeness to one's conception of Tiny Tim. Then, too, in the group of literature characters are found the Little Women dolls, by Mme. Alexander. They are Meg, Beth, Jo and Amy. Little Red Riding Hood is another character portrayed in this collection.

Among the dolls representing foreign countries is a Sardinian doll in native costume of authentic color and style; a Swedish peasant woman, dressed in clothes made from homespun; a Czechoslovakian doll with ball joints making it possible to move her arms and legs and dressed in the native costume of the country, and Rosika, a Hungarian doll, dressed in the authentic girls' costume of her country.

Two Russian peasant dolls add interest to the group. These latter are Tanka and Vanka. The foot coverings of these two are made from strips of bark woven into sandals.

Two of interest are the Scottish dolls, dressed in Highlander costumes, one wearing an authentic royal Stewart tartan and the other dressed in the native costume of the from Ireland also are among those in the collection.

Among the dolls dressed to represent the United States are George and Martha Washington, dressed in costumes copied from pictures of the period. The silk of Martha's dress is about one hundred years old; John Alden and Priscilla, dressed in Pilgrim garb, and Lucy Rodgers, a china doll of the Civil war period.

Washington Kin

Miss Anne Washington, Middleport, Ohio, asserts she is a closer kin to George Washington than Miss Anne A. Madison Washington, who flew with Maj. James Doolittle over Washington's Colonial trails recently. Miss Washington bases her assertion on the fact that she is a granddaughter of Andrew Park, Baltimore merchant, who married Harriett, favorite niece of George and daughter of Samuel, George's full brother.

This is headquarters for anything in the real estate line and it enjoys the patronage and confidence from all surrounding territory.

In this day and age when conservative men are constantly seeking investments where they are not only assured a permanent source of income, but a reasonable certainty of increasing in value, the real estate dealer is doing more than his share to meet the demands of such men. This locality is indeed fortunate in having in its midst such a firm as this well known agency.

This Company has been closely identified with the growth and expansion of this section and has made a close study of real estate conditions so that they could offer both the buying and selling public the very best service. They have on their books a large list of most desirable properties for sale, both town and country at prices that cannot fail to be attractive to the intending purchaser. They have made many important deals in this section.

WILLIAM H. ELLIS, Attorney

With offices in the First National Bank Building in Birmingham.

In the hurly-burly of business, education and politics, represented by countless mercantile and manufacturing interests, by the city governors and by the schools, there is bound to be both friction and salve. The tempests are called forth and allayed. The part the lawyer plays in this drama is really of a soothing nature, although most people take the contrary view.

They insist that lawyers create contention. The constructive ability of such a legal light as one of the helpful influences which tend to make any city great. Mr. Ellis is a lawyer in broad sympathy with the community's business development. That is what makes up the character of the builder, and a man does not need bricks and mortar to build well if he is willing to give the best that is in others. It is instructive and necessary to contemplate the activity of the leading business builders of the city of the quiet men who never carry a hod but who carry ideas in their head and strength of purpose in their hearts, and thus help to build a citadel which will withstand that which bricks and mortar never would.

Whitaker-Hill Insurance and Real Estate Co.

In the Woodward Building in Birmingham.

Among the progressive real estate agencies of this part of the country we are glad to make prominent mention of this agency. The activities of this Company are conducive to the progress of this section in no small degree inasmuch as their dealings in city and farm property attract new people to the community.

There are many dealers in real estate but the successful operator must be well versed in values and locations. He must also have a complete knowledge of the history of the country and of what value a particular property is to the intending purchaser.

The real citizen is the home owner. To him comes the thrill of owning a home whether it be large or small.

Every true citizen has in his own mind a picture of the home he at sometime intends to own. Perhaps it is a small bungalow with a few rooms, surrounded by flowers. Perchance a small garden where he may spend his leisure time. Then too, the owner of rural property desires the respect, regardless of the wants of comfort of a city dwelling. In any the intending purchaser or renter, this Company can take care of their needs as they have listed on their books a number of properties that are sure to please.

AROUND THE DIAMOND WITH WBRC.

The Columbiana Exchange Club sponsored a ball game on last Thursday afternoon which commanded the interest of the entire community. Bill Young, Manager of WBRC, brought his Baseball Nine down for a tilt with the Home-Town team—and before a crowded grandstand, the attempt to connect the willow stick with the horse hide pellet furnished keen competition between players. The fans were most enthusiastic on both sides, for Birmingham was represented by a large number of followers of this popular team. The result of the game was entirely satisfactory to Columbiana as they edged home a victory of 3 runs—10 to 7 being the final score.

Spectacular home runs by Oscar Martin, of Columbiana, and Freeman, of WBRC, were the high spots of the game. The hidden ball trick pulled successfully by Leland Childs on Pierson West furnished a good comedy sketch, and the audience enjoyed it.

Chatting with Bill Young after the game, revealed this genial Manager in an excellent frame of mind. He stated he had always wanted to "win" everything he attempted, but if he HAD to be defeated, he had rather Columbiana would defeat him than anybody he knew.

—Andy Smith—

Andy Smith, Radio Editor de luxe, whose fluent pen point paragraphs you follow each day in the Antenna News of the SGN, was delighted with his trip to Columbiana and to the Airport. Mayor Gordon's "blue prints" and vivid descriptions of the project when completed, Mr. Smith stated, were the most outstanding achievements he had witnessed in the entire State. Yes, "Andy Smith" was the "wicked" looking "brunette" leaning on the "tall-timber-resting place" while he Base Umpired the "ins and outs" of the game. Yes, again, Andy is married! Sorry to disillusion you girls—and to dash your hopes to the ground, but you would have "stiff competition" if you only knew the charming little "Mrs.". She is 'adorable"!

We now further answer some "personal inquiries" about "him and him" from the "blondes and brunettes" who witnessed the game, and who thought several of the "players" rather intriguing looking.

—"Doc" Graham—

"Who is the man with the little moustache who looks like a movie actor "and got two out of three hits"? His name, my dear, is "Doc" Graham, Engineer and Control Operator. The gent who mixes the bitter with the sweet notes you hear over your Mikes. And here is a partial break for you—He Is Not Married—but wait a minute, Dame Rumor told me last week while in Birmingham, "It won't be long now"—and judging from the number of feminine visitors, who do not heed the "Private" sign—"Keep out"—stuck all over his office, we were prepared to believe his chief problem would be to narrow the bevy of beauties down to "one and only one," so long as ye both do live forever and ever amen etc.——However, thats a job for "Doc", and eight hours a day at the control board should be good practice for "staying Put".

—Bill Young—

Bill Young, Manager of WBRC, is a Bachelor! He so introduced himself at the Luncheon given in Curlee's Cafe on Thursday, honoring the visitors from the Magic City, but he is not especially satisfied with his present state of "Single Blessedness"—That is, he WILL consider Matrimony—IF—the Candidate has plenty of Money. "Kale", is the only requisite——Should you desire to give him a break and think it over. He believes, with plenty of "money" on tap, he could capably manage every other little detail. In other words, this old boy is looking for some easy sailing when he embarks in a little matrimonial canoe and begins paddling double. However, he has travelled "single" a long time, we suspect him to be YOUNG in name only—and he might be rather "set in his ways". If you think he is worth spending your life's savings on, take the matter up with him direct. He gives "serious consideration" to all applicants—but TIME alone can tell what this dapper YOUNG fellow will do.

—John Connolly—

"Who is the young looking boy who "caught" the ball?"—Now I shall have to knock down your air castles again. I hate to keep shattering your dreams—but, John Connolly is Happily Married. "Hen and Biddy pecked and loves it"——The gracious and charming little Mrs. Connolly accompanied John to the game. Truth is, she made such a hit with Mayor Gordon that we had to straighten him out several times on this matrimonial fact. The three most attractive members of the Connolly group, were left at home with Nursie. A happier "quintuplet" of a family could not be found anywhere. Hats off to the "Mr.", to the "Mrs.", and to the three little Connolly's.

—Leland Childs—

Who was that "pretty boy" who pitched a while, played first base a while and talked back to the "ladies all the while"——That, "little one" is Leland Childs, Singer, Announcer, and Personality "Presenter" of WBRC. He entertains you each Wednesday night at 7:45. His ready smile, his talents, and his curly top of golden hair will likely carry him far in his chosen career—IF the FEMININE section do not spoil him before he reaches the goal he hopes to attain. Far from a "black sheep", he is the "petted lamb" of WBRC.

—Les Conners—Hank Wiggins—

The "good natured man with the green socks on"?—Les Conners (no kin to Bull), he is the efficient Sales Manager. "Hank" Wiggins, Salesman and Technician, is the man who had the "non-challant" walk you mentioned.

—Brack Phillips and his Pioneers—

Brack Phillips and the Pioneers played ball like the veterans they were. They stepped to the tune of Happy Dobbs and his Tune Wranglers who made such a hit with the High School contingent when they presented a 20-minute program for them before the game began. FREEMAN—Home Run—"over the fence" hitter!

—W. D. Smith—

Last but by no means least—"Who was the distinguished looking man with the iron gray hair who sat in the grand stand with the good looking couple on his left? "That distinguished gentleman, my "curious one", is W. D. Smith, President, Owner, Agent for 'em, Pays 'em off, the Big Boy——Listen closely, he is the all important exponent of what it takes to make the world go round. He corrals those elusive little birds which decorate the silver discs with "sterling" marked on 'em. However, he loves his work, and the success and popularity of WBRC in Alabama, is largely due to his keen business ability and personal interest in his co-workers.

To make a long story short, he is largely responsible for keeping "music in the air—and the song in your hearts" which you daily hear over the popular station, known as WBRC, "The Choice of Alabama."

The above pen pointers I hope answer your inquiries regarding the recent visit of "ether celebrities". Now, let's turn our attention to what is happening on your little old Main Street—and Mine.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats scored another hit with their melodies at the Airport on last Saturday night when the largest dance of the season was staged. Visitors, sincerely welcomed, came from Vincent, Shelby, Leeds, Birmingham, Marvel and Montevallo. The next dance will be given on Saturday night, May 18th.

The boys have re-organized their orchestra, and the "masters stroke" of the week and the "good fortune" which came their way, they tell me, was Mildred Curlee's acceptance of the Secretary and Treasurer's position. Mrs. Curlee has won the ever lasting gratitude of this "sextette", and the boys enthusiasm over Summer prospects is keen. They played for the Montevallo High School Senior Class Prom last Friday night and are loud in their praise of the cordial reception accorded them by our neighboring townsmen.

A congenial motor party composed of Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Peacock and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone, spent the week-end in Panama City following the "finny tribe" with a little rod and reel which proved successful bait. 125 "blue fish" reported caught by the party.

Judge Lyn C. Walker held a regular term of the County Court on Monday, and a number of cases were disposed of.

It is Cotton Week! Stores in Columbiana are specializing in cotton materials. Pay them a visit! "White Gold" is an essential commodity in the South—on Agriculture largely depends Shelby County's prosperity.

Why not go by Louise's Beauty Salon and give "MOTHER" a Permanent Wave for Sunday, May 12th? Two very efficient and accomodating operators await you in this modern shop—Delilah Curry and Louise Thompson—Consult them today for any "aid to beauty" you may be seeking. They will be delighted to serve you.

We pause right here to acknowledge gratefully a vase of red, red roses grown in the Flower garden of Mrs. Dick Holcombe, and prettier varieties we have not seen this season. Work becomes much lighter when we have been remembered in such a beautiful way.

The Yellow Front Store has received a new shipment of dresses just in time for Mother's Day—Why not give her a new dress in which to appear on this day set apart to honor the little "Rock-abye Lady from Lullabye Land" so dear to the hearts of us all.

The "send-a-dime" or a "dollar" chain letters continue to pile into the Democrat office. If all the people who have sent us the chain letters wished us this amount of Prosperity, our future path would be a rosy one. Much controversy over the "get rich quick" scheme is being waged—the mathematical problem of Progression seems to be the basis for the huge remuneration promised — Absured, some say—but we have seen many natives of Columbiana racing to find a typewriter to take advantage of it. You have to BELIEVE that every one is honest and sincere in writing the five names listed—but whether the individual gets rich out of it or not, Old Uncle Sam is reaping a rich reward in selling stamps to send them on their way. In other words, every time the wheels in the chain turn over, the Postoffice Department reaps $586.28. Personally, we see no harm in donating a dime to the patriotic old dear, IDIOTIC though we may be! We have "taken a chance" on people and things far more absured—Believe it or not.

The Vincent Elementary Department presented a lovely operetta on last Friday night, "Down Among The Fairies", with a cast of 65 children. The auditorium was filled with enthusiastic listeners who were loud in their praise of the little actors and actresses—and Beth Wallace and Hattie Wallace Bullard, Directors, were noted beaming their appreciation for the generous response accorded their joint efforts. The stage was artistically decorated by Pauline Gibbons, and was the prettiest one we have ever seen in scenic effects. The woodland dell, with the mellow light of Old Man Moon, just perfect for Fairyland.

Do not forget the Senior Class Play to be presented at the High School on next Friday night in Columbiana, "The Red Headed Step-Child", is the title, and is directed by Miss Souders of the English Department. From all accounts, this play will be well worth your going to see. Admission will be 15 and 25 cents, and 35 cents for reserved seats.

Miss Crutcher, of Athens, has been the charming house guest of Miss Mary Moore in Columbiana.

Mrs. H. L. Nichols entertained the Columbiana Culture Club on Thursday afternoon, with fourteen members present, and a visitor, Mrs. Norris. After the business session, an excellent program on "Dixie" was given. Mrs. Sidney Bird told of "The Old South", and Mrs. Howard Whitaker "The New South". The members sang "Dixie" in unison. "The Tides of Malvern" by Francis Gresivold, was given to the Club Library by the hostess. Delightful refreshments were served. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Robert Peacock, May 9th, 1935, at 2:45 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. DeOrsey Merritt (Evelyn Barnett), of Vienna, Maryland, are visiting their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Noland Barnett in Columbiana.

And now——"lest you forget"——Mother's Day, Sunday, May 12, 1935.

"God traced the love of Mother
In drifting summer skies
He made the glistening dew drops
Like tears in Mother's eyes—
He sent the fragrant blossoms
In token of her care
So that the love of Mother
Is shining everywhere".

Do not forget to remember——MOTHER.

Heart Drifts

MOTHER
(On her day)
Sunday, May 12, 1935.

Always you loved me with a quiet love
Folding about me such a gentle care,
Now that the fleeting years have lost their drove
Of memories, I find them full and fair.

Even as your hands were busy with the seam,
Your lips spun shining tales of fairy-land,
Or with their wisdom made my moments gleam,
But most of all, your will to understand

Outlines a glowing pattern from the past,
Beauty and laughter, guiding service, too,
Have mingled hours that somehow strangely last,
Though you are gone, no day but brings me you.
Time, as a weaver plies a skilful art,
Each second draws me nearer to your heart.

with your new ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR

It's so easy to make those tasty, frozen treats which youngsters love!

For Instance:

FRESH PEACH ICE CREAM

2 cups peach pulp — Pinch of salt
¾ cups sugar — ½ pint cream
Juice 1 lemon — 2 whole eggs
2 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon almond flavoring

Select soft peaches. Mash thoroughly. Add sugar and lemon juice; dissolve. When thoroughly dissolved pour into tray and freeze 45 minutes to 1 hour. Beat egg whites, adding sugar — then add egg yolks and mix. Whip cream to thick custard consistency (do not over-whip). Combine with beaten eggs. Add frozen peach pulp; mix lightly. Return to chilling unit; freeze 2 to 2½ hours.

Dozens of other Summer delicacies can be as easily prepared

Electric Refrigerators may be bought for as little as $3.50 Down
with 30 months to pay the balance.

THIS WEEK

Explaining to Canada
Mr. Morgenthau's Work
A West Point for Crime
Alfred du Pont

Canada, hearing of a proposed United States "camouflaged military airplane base near her border," asks for information. The State department will gladly supply it.

Arthur Brisbane

No military forts separate the two countries, no battleships on the big lakes. Inhabitants on both sides, being civilized, have no idea of attacking each other; neither craves what the other owns.

Some day, let us hope, the two countries will be one, by mutual agreement, or Canada might annex the United States in a friendly way, if that were more acceptable, a majority of voters ruling.

The North American continent, from the Mexican border to the North pole, should be one nation, or if Mexico and others would come in, all the way down to the Panama canal, so much the better.

There will be no war between this country and any part of the British empire. Common sense forbids it. Any air base of ours would probably be as useful to Canada as to ourselves, and we should be delighted to see Canada establish a string of air bases to the north of us, especially along her Pacific and Atlantic coasts.

Secretary Morgenthau, never in business as a banker, interested, personally, in farming more than in money, has shown the outside world, to its surprise, that he can make the American dollar keep its place in the procession, regardless of many billions of bond issues, no gold basis, and other novelties.

Gamblers that ordinarily enjoy speculation in "exchange" are afraid of the American dollar. And curiously, while some Americans are sending money to other countries, to make it "safe," foreigners, and especially Britishers, are investing more and more heavily in the United States.

Washington discusses a "West Point for war on crime," a semi-military school under the attorney general to train fighters to meet the national crime army, that collects almost as much money as the national government itself takes in.

The war would be simple if government would treat crime as it would an outbreak of yellow fever, or Asiatic cholera, taking it really seriously.

Habitual criminals are known, men of ten or fifteen convictions, racketeers, gunmen. Make it clear that once locked up they would never get out as long as they lived and you would see the crime fade away.

Very bad news for this country, in which efficiency and energy count as public asset number one, is the sudden death of Alfred du Pont, stricken with heart disease in his residence near Jacksonville, Fla. At seventy years of age Mr. du Pont was planning, as he should be, all sorts of new enterprises that would have been interesting to him. He needed no more money, wanted to be useful.

Great Britain is excited about the Germans building submarines, especially annoyed to learn that the submarines are of a "super" type, carrying guns as well as torpedo tubes, able to hunt British or other ships anywhere on earth, some alleged to carry a small airplane, easily launched. Britain has plane-carrying submarines, but that is different. German submarines now finished are about to start maneuver practice off Wilhelmshafen.

Nations rise to great heights, glorious power, then crumble, disappear; desert sands cover their streets and temples. Patient archeology digs them out and wonders. Read Volney's "Ruins of Empires" to find that process well described.

What causes it? Do nations grow old and die "naturally," inevitably, as individuals do? Sometimes plagues wipe them out: the black death nearly destroyed Europe. Malaria tore down the power of Rome and recently killed some 50,000, following a sudden mosquito attack in the Far East.

You are not surprised to learn, in spite of pacifist protests and protests from certain Japanese who are not pacifists, the President thinks it wise to explore around and see just what this country needs in the way of "defense methods" on the Pacific.

A crime, unbelievable, has been reported from Texas. Howard Pierson, aged twenty, killed his mother and father, then shot himself in the arm, pretending that bandits had done it.

After police had kept him awake for awhile he confessed, said he did it "for revenge."

He did it actually, authorities declared, for $17,000 insurance on his father's life. He killed the mother because she would have got the insurance.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

Payment by the Alabama Power Company of $100,000 in settlement of a damage suit brought by Bosworth Smith Company, bridge contractors, ended litigation started three years ago after a coffer dam built by the bridge concern in Coosa River had been washed away by flood waters loosed from a power company lock.

Reports that the cotton textile operators of the nation plan to close their mills down July 1 in a "strike" against the Government's processing tax on cotton were denied emphatically by Donald Comer, president of the Avondale Mills and member of the National Cotton Textile Code Authority.

A bill calculated to save the state thousands of dollars annually, by requiring relatives of persons in state hospitals for the insane and feeble-minded, so able, to contribute to their maintenance, has been drawn for introduction in the Legislature.

Florence has begun a 60-day campaign of city beautification and sanitation sponsored by the Garden Club. Co-operating are the Health Department, relief administration, civic clubs, City Commission and the Fire and Garbage Departments.

A revolt against the administration's proposal for a second recess of of the Legislature after 10 or 15 more legislative days flared as a foridable House group organized for a fight to keep the assembly in session until its work is finished.

Despite a 50 per cent decrease in the number of anti-rabies treatments in the Birmingham area over the first quarter of 1935, State Health Department attaches report 1,550 treatments issued with prospects of a year's total of upward of 7,500.

After attorneys for the state and Southern Bell Telephone Co. failed to agree on preliminary questions in the telephone rate investigation, the Public Service Commission ordered the issues threshed out at a hearing May 14.

Following the recent appearance at Athens of Hon. I. T. Quinn, of Montgomery, state game and fish commissioner, approximately 100 members have been procured for a Sportsmens' Conservation Club for Limestone County.

Members of county commissions and revenue boards must personally serve on boards of revenue or face impeachment under a section which was written into Alabama's new revenue bill by Sen. James A. Simpson of Jefferson.

Birmingham fabricators are continuing to receive a number of orders for structural steel, demand for which is expected to show a sharp increase within the next few months as the works relief program gets under way.

H. S. Geismer, state PWA engineer in Alabama, announced that application for non-federal public works projects to be constructed with PWA loans should be filed at his office at the Montgomery Federal Building.

Geneva Wright, 14 months old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Johnnie Wright, East Birmingham, was fatally scalded when she fell into a pot of boiling water at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Floyd McCulley.

The minimum mark-up on cigaret prices established last year as an emergency order has been made permanent, W. G. Patterson, chairman of the Alabama Retail Tobacco Code Authority, announced.

Henry Long, chairman of the State Tax Commission, has served notice on Alabama owners of foreign securities that his department will start an intensive drive May 15 to have all such securities registered.

Alabama's only hope for early old age pensions hangs on the possibility that the Federal Government will put up the money without requiring it to be matched by the state, Gov. Bibb Graves said.

Temporary parole of J. C. Hancock, Birmingham youth convicted of robbery in 1929, has been made permanent by Governor Graves on the recommendation of Jefferson County authorities.

Further proof that Birmingham is fast becoming "the convention city of the South" will be furnished this month when seven business and social groups gather there for annual conventions.

A state-wide malaria control program giving employment to 100,000 men will be launched in Alabama if application for a $6,000,000 Federal work-relief appropriation is successful.

Financial experts in the East have attached considerable importance to the success with which $16,920,000 worth of refunding bonds were sold by the state of Alabama recently.

Twenty-five thousand Alabama voters have signed petitions demanding a local option law for this state.

Gov. Bibb Graves signed a bill giving the State Tax Commission power to grant a 10-year tax exemption to pine pulp paper mills which may be established in the state.

For saving a fellow CCC worker from a burning barracks, Henry N. Bradfield, Tarrant City, was awarded a bronze medal by the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission.

Gordon Glasscock, Hartselle, has just completed eight years of school work without having once been tardy or missed a day. He is the son of M. R. Glasscock.

Charming Print Jacket Costumes

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FANCY a two-piece suit or a jacket-and-frock costume made exactly as if tailored of cloth, only instead of being of tweed or broadcloth or serge or a novelty woolen, it is fashioned of a gay print, either crepe or taffeta. It's news we are telling you, for the print jacket suit is fashion's big headline feature this spring.

Perhaps you have already acquired one of these attractive and wearable print suits. If not, why not, and if you haven't, hurry up and take a look at the charming types which the shops are showing.

The print may not be expensive. In fact, some of the most successful models are of simple, unpretentious patternings and weaves. Small figures on dark backgrounds are favored for practical daytime wear. The skirts are either gored or cut straight and slim with a slit hemline or, if you take delight in being very ultra, choose one of the new circular flare skirts with its widened hemline such as Paris designers announce as the newest silhouette. The jacket that is smartest is tailored along classic lines, is fitted in slightly at the waist and buttons up the front and is only hiplength. However, any style is in good form from swagger to cape-jacket style.

If you want to simulate a jacket effect, that is wear a one-piece dress that has a jacket and skirt "look," the charming model to the left in the picture is the answer. This soft taffeta frock has intriguing little style touches adapted from the utterly feminine regency period. Bows and belt of scarlet velvet ribbon pick up one of the colors in the print. The hat is of onion skin straw with a chou of velvet ribbons at the front.

This idea of employing little velvet bows instead of buttons is a note worth keeping in mind when you plan your new frocks and blouses. It is an important this-season fashion gesture. It is not unusual for these sprightly wee bows to travel up and down the front of a one-piece dress (perhaps cut in the new princess lines) from neckline to hemline. Then, again, they may even fasten a bodice up the back or pose in little groups on one's blouse. In fact, whenever a decorative touch is needed, just scatter a flock of little velvet bows over your costume for effect and up-to-the-moment chic.

Printed chiffon suits for dressy daytime wear are making fashion history. They are really the most flattering costumes one can wear at an afternoon social gathering. The young woman seated is wearing a striking ensemble, the jacket and skirt of which are fashioned of a printed chiffon which shows cornflower blue, beige and yellow flowers massed on a black ground. The classic tailored jacket has a boutonniere of cutout chiffon posies. It is lined with black taffeta to match the slip. The blouse is of handsome black lace. Black trims and faces the wide-brimmed shallow beige straw hat.

For evening formality prints are simply gorgeous. You can see, looking at the figure to the right in the picture, how strikingly handsome a formal ensemble of print can be. This model is fashioned of a flower print done in exotic multi-colorings. Here again you see a touch of velvet in that the dress collar is of green velvet, the same repeated in the sleeve and pocket facings of the loose swagger jacket. A corsage of fresh orchids (wearing natural flowers this season) tucked through the belt and a big rhinestone clip at the neck are smart additions.

VOGUE FINDS NEW USES FOR PIGSKIN

The uses for pigskin leather have steadily been increasing. So many new things have been fashioned of it, that the range in accessories mounts into numbers.

First of all, are pigskin shoes, and there is nothing that wears better than this leather, or looks any finer with sports clothes. It has been dyed to black, brown, navy . . . any color desired and is excellent in white shoes for summer.

The pigskin handbag is certainly a smart accessory, holds its shape exceptionally well, and has a grain that doesn't show markings which often mar the appearance of smooth leathers.

Pigskin gloves are the perfection of the sports world. In natural, white, brown, navy and black, they can be found to accompany any tweed, and do it in the grand manner.

Frothy Fabrics Are Used for New Dancing Frocks

Dancing frocks continue to add charm and color to the evening scene. Almost everything goes but lately there seems to be a fresh interest in frothy fabrics rather than in the stiff moires, satins and lames that have obtained for so long. Many of the frocks planned for resort wear are masses of tulle and there is more lace than has been the case for some seasons. Pleatings are generally seen when it comes to frocks done in a sheer medium. One frock of soft blue tulle embroidered in silver stars has the skirt entirely knife-pleated as is the peplum. Soft brown lace with touches of rose pink velvet makes another delightful frock for southern or cruise wear.

Vogue for Gold

The vogue of gold metal is still in full swing, but most of the new models in clips, dress ornaments, fancy bracelets or necklaces often show gold metal combined with either black metal in onyx effect or with transparent plastic materials.

BUTTONS ON SUITS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

On account of the importance of buttons this season many stores are devoting extra space to their display. The types of buttons in favor are legion. Novelty enters largely into the scheme of things. Very new and chic for the dressy blouse or frock are stars cut out of mother of pearl or set with tiny rhinestones. Clever, too, and exceedingly attractive are the new flower buttons made of an ivory-like composition and tinted realistically. The buttons which enhance the good-looking suit pictured are woven of green straw. The cloth which fashions this softly tailored two-piece has the smooth finish for which best designers are expressing preference. The coat front may be thrown open in a way to achieve big revers. Many of the smartest dresses and coats sport huge revers this season.

Lesson for May 12

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

LESSON TEXT—Ephesians 4:1-7, 11-16; Acts 2:41-45.

GOLDEN TEXT—So we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another.—Romans 12:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Going to God's House.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What a Church Is.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What the Church Is For.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Nature and Work of the Church.

I. What It Is (Eph. 3:3-6).

It is the body of redeemed men and women of Jews and Gentiles called out from the world, regenerated and united to Jesus Christ as head and to each other by the Holy Spirit (I Cor. 12:13).

1. It was unknown in Old Testament times (Eph. 3:5, 6).

2. It was predicted by Christ (Matt. 16:18). Shortly before Christ went to the cross he spoke of the Church as still in the future. He said, "I will build my church."

3. It came into being at Pentecost (Acts 2).

II. Christ Is the Head of the Church (Eph. 1:22, 23).

Jesus Christ is to the Church what the head is to the human body. He is so vitally its head as to direct all its activities.

III. The Unity of the Church (Eph. 4:4-6).

Having in verses 1-3 of this chapter set forth the virtues necessary for the realization and maintenance of unity in the Church, in verses 4-6 he sets down the fundamental unities which make unity of the body.

1. One body (v. 4). Since all believers have been united to Christ by faith, they are members of the one body of which he is the head.

2. One Spirit (v. 4). This is the Holy Spirit. He is the agent in regeneration and the baptizer into the one body and is the animating life uniting the believers to Christ and to one another.

3. One hope (v. 4). Completed redemption at the coming of the Lord is the Christian's hope.

4. One Lord (v. 5). The one ruler of the Church is the Lord Jesus Christ.

5. One faith (v. 5). This faith is the one doctrine which centers in Christ and the one instrument which unites the believer to Christ.

6. One baptism (v. 5). This means the baptism of the Holy Spirit—that sovereign act of the Spirit which unites believers to Jesus Christ as head and to each other as members of his body.

7. One God and Father of all (v. 6). This is the almighty Creator and Sustainer of the universe.

IV. How the Church Grows (Eph. 4:11-16). It is through the ministry of certain officials having the gifts of the Spirit.

1. Gifts bestowed upon the Church (v. 11).

a. Apostles. These were appointed by Christ to superintend the preaching of the gospel in all the world and the creation of an authoritative body of teaching, the Scriptures.

b. Prophets. These ministers were given for the expounding of the Scriptures.

c. Evangelists. These seem to have been traveling missionaries.

d. Pastors and teachers. The pastor was a shepherd-teacher, the two functions inherent in the one office.

2. The object of the ministry of the Church (v. 12).

a. "Perfecting of the saints." Perfecting means the mending of that which has been rent; the adjusting of something dislocated.

b. "For the work of the ministry" (v. 12). The perfecting of the saints has as its object the qualification to render efficient service.

c. "Edifying of the body of Christ." Edify means to build up.

3. The duration of the Church's ministry (v. 13). It is to continue until

a. There is unity of faith.

b. We come into the knowledge of the Son of God. Unity of faith can only be realized when the members of the Church come to know Jesus Christ as the very Son of God.

c. A perfect man, which is the measure of the stature of Christ.

4. The blessed issue of the ministry of the Church (vv. 14-16).

a. Not tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine (v. 14). Knowledge of Christ as the very Son of God is the sure defense against the efforts of cunning men.

b. Speaking the truth in love (vv. 15, 16). Holding the truth of Jesus Christ as the Son of God in the spirit of sincerity and love will issue in the symmetrical development of believers, causing them to grow up in him as head.

QUIET THOUGHTS

Every man is worth just so much as the things are worth about which he busies himself.—Marcus Aurelius.

People glorify all sorts of bravery except the bravery they might show on behalf of their nearest neighbors.—George Eliot.

What St. Paul wrote to the Christians in Rome nearly two thousand years ago is as true today as ever it was. There is "peace in believing."

Unique "Primrose" Rug to Crochet

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

This rag rug measures 42 inches and requires about three pounds of material to finish. It appears to be made of six squares each of a different size, with the horizontal positions alternating. Work is started with the center square about 5 inches in diameter. Triangles are then crocheted on the four sides of inner square forming the second square. Continue same way for third, fourth and fifth squares. The sixth square is the same size as fifth square and therefore requires smaller triangles on sides than the others. Colors should be so arranged that center is in light shades of yellow, while outer triangles represent the petals of flowers, and may be shaded in color desired. This can be made into a very attractive and unique rug, depending very much on the color scheme used.

This is one of the twenty-six crocheted and braided rugs illustrated with instructions in Grandmother Clark's rug book No. 25. Detailed instructions are given in this book for the "Primrose" rug, and if you are interested, send 15c to our Rug Department and we will send it to you by mail.

NATURAL TASTES BEST GUIDES TO CORRECT EATING?

We Americans have become health-conscious and in a subtle way it is a psychologically bad point of view. In the first place we are losing interest in the taste of food and in good cooking. All we think of is whether our food contains the right number of calories; whether it is sufficiently endowed with vitamins A, B, C, D and sometimes W and Y. Whether it has enough minerals, and roughage; whether, in other words, it is good for us.

It is a dismal point of view to sit down at the table and say to oneself, I must order this because it contains vitamin XYZ, I must choose that because it will give me my daily dose of iron and if I don't get it Lord knows what dire thing may befall me in the future.

However, we are perfectly correct in feeling great interest in the new and constantly growing knowledge about vitamins. This knowledge represents a tremendous addition to our understanding of the why of things. But this does not mean that it is obligatory on the part of lay folks to burden themselves with this information except as a matter of casual interest.

One's natural taste will lead one fairly accurately to a hygenic selection of food. And by natural tastes I mean tastes that have not been corrupted by dietetic pedantry or by overindulgence in sweets. Assuming that these and analogous distortions are ruled out, an enlightened laissez-faire is a pretty safe policy on which to order one's meals.—Arthur F. Kraetzer, M. D., in Esquire.

IF IT SAVES YOU FROM A BLOW-OUT ACCIDENT LIKE This

HOW NEW KIND OF TIRE MAY SAVE Your LIFE!

• Right now is the time to get real blow-out protection. Remember, the dangers of blow-outs are with you wherever you drive. So why not play safe—why not get Life-Saver Golden Ply blow-out protection before a high-speed blow-out throws your car out of control?

Here's How Blow-outs Happen

At the high speeds that are common these days, terrific heat is generated inside the tire. This heat causes rubber and fabric to separate. A tiny blister forms—grows bigger until BANG—the tire blows out, and your car may plunge off the road.

How the Golden Ply Works

But in the new Goodrich Safety Silvertown the Life-Saver Golden Ply resists the heat inside the tire. The rubber and fabric don't separate. No blisters form. And these high-speed blow-outs are prevented before they get started.

Come In Today

Let us show you this new Silvertown. Press your hand on its deep-grooved tread. Feel its big, husky cleats grip. Then you'll understand why Silvertowns give protection against dangerous side skids. And notice the ruggedness of this extra-thick tread that gives extra mileage at no extra cost.

Let us put a set of Safety Silvertowns on your car. Remember—ask for Goodrich Safety Silvertowns. They cost no more than other standard tires.

FREE: This handsome Safety League emblem has a red crystal reflector to protect you if your tail light goes out. No obligation—just join the Silvertown Safety League at this store. Come in today.

CHARLIE H. McCAULEY, Architect

Office in the Jackson Building in Birmingham.

Different styles of architecture mark the eras of progress of all nations, and history is depicted in the various changes that come about in the style of building.

Our American nation is a young nation, but a progressive one, and our imposing buildings stand as monuments to great American minds who have planned and engineered them.

As our country became more thickly populated we have turned pioneer days to structures, pleasing to the eye—and arranged to conserve space and at the same time provide for all comforts. The metropolitan cities and communities have learned to appreciate the services of the architect who has made a study pertaining to these features, for he is capable of conserving time and money and providing greater comfort, beauty, and more convenient arrangements.

No matter what you contemplate in the way of building, you look upon it as a lasting, permanent accomplishment, and you want to realize full value of every dollar invested. In order to do this you would consult a reliable architect, who can advise as to plans, materials and construction.

ALABAMA COLLEGE PRESIDENT RESIGNS FOR TENNESSEE JOB

The appointment of Dr. O. C. Carmichael, president of Alabama College for Women at Montevallo since 1926, as dean of the graduate school and senior college at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tennessee, was announced formally by Chancellor James H. Kirkland, of Vanderbilt, last Friday.

At Montevallo, Dr. Carmichael said that he had accepted the appointment.

"It is with a sense of deep regret that I contemplate leaving my native state and Alabama College," Dr. Carmichael said. "I shall always cherish the friendship and associations formed through 18 years' service at the State College for Women.

"At Vanderbilt, an institution which serves Alabama and other Southern states, I shall not anticipate losing connection with my friends in Alabama. I shall always be interested in the state's educational developments. It is only the recognition of the wider opportunity for educational service that has prompted me to accept the new position."

Served In War

Dr. Carmichael received his A. B. degree at the University of Alabama in 1911 and his master's degree two years later. He taught at the Florence Normal School, now Florence State Teachers' College, for one year before going to Oxford University as a Rhodes scholar. He was serving as principal of Woodlawn High School at the time he was called to Montevallo in 1922 to be dean and assistant to the president. He was made president four years later.

In 1914 and 1915, he served with the Hoover Relief Commission in Belgium and later joined the British forces in India. He was appointed honorary captain in the British Army in East Africa in 1916. Dr. Carmichael then obtained a fellowship at Princeton but resigned to enter the United States Army, seeing service with Three Hundred Twenty-First Infantry of the Eighty-First Division and with the intelligence section of the general staff.

Dr. Carmichael received a doctorate in literature from Howard College. He is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa Honorary Fraternity.

Successors Mentioned

In announcing the appointment of Dr. Carmichael, Chancellor Kirkland said that the graduate work at Vanderbilt will be administered as a separate school under the direction of a dean and graduate faculty beginning next September. This graduate work will be closely tied in with the work of the senior college, the chancellor said. Commenting on the selection of Dr. Carmichael as dean, he said, "Vanderbilt University is fortunate in securing the services of an educational leader of such distinction for its new program."

Among those who have been mentioned in educational circles as possible successors to Dr. Carmichael at Montevallo are Dr. A. F. Harman, former state superintendent, and Dr. T. H. Napier, dean at Montevallo.

Station Announces Best Cotton Spacing

AUBURN, Ala.—Over a period of five years, the highest cotton yields have been obtained on 3 1-2-foot rows with hills 18 inches apart, with little or no difference in yield between 1, 2, and 3 stalks per hill.

That is a brief summary of the results obtained in experiments by the Alabama Experiment Station.

"All of the work indicates that where something like a bale of cotton per acre is possible the hills should be something like 18 inches apart and the rows about 3 1-2 feet wide, with 1, 2, or 3 stalks per hill," says Dean M. J. Funchess, director. "When 6 stalks were left in each hill the average yield was reduced approximately 50 pounds of cotton per acre.

"An experiment at Auburn where no fertilizer was applied indicates that the same general recommendation might be made where expected yields are a half bale per acre as would be made where expected yields are a bale per acre. With this general modification it might be best to have the rows only 3 feet wide rather than 3 1-2 feet wide. Otherwise, the same recommendation is made where the expected yields are low or where they are high."

MEMORIAL SERVICES AT SUMMER HILL CHURCH

SUMMER HILL, Ala.—Memorial services will be conducted at Summer Hill Church on the 4th Sunday in May. An appropriate program has been arranged for this annual event. Bring well filled baskets and spend the day. There will be services both morning and evening. Remember the date, Sunday, May 26.

MAYORS PROCLAIM SATURDAY, MAY 25, AS 'POPPY DAY'

Hon. Harry Gordon, Mayor of Columbiana; Hon. G. H. Stewart, Mayor of Wilsonville, and Hon. T. C. Elliott, have each issued proclomations proclaimin gSaturday, May 25th as "Poppy Day" in their respective towns.

They each memoralized those who gallantly answered the call of their country during the World War and called upon all citizens to do honor to the memory of the valiant dead and render aid to the disabled living by buying and wearing a poppy on this day.

These poppys will be offered on this day by the women of the American Legion Auxiliary to all patriotic citizens, who wish to wear them, for what ever price they feel they can and should pay for them.

The proceeds will all go to welfare work among the disabled veterans and the orphans of veterans.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL WILL PRESENT AN OPERETTA, MAY 17

"The Wedding of The Flowers", an Operetta, will be presented by the Grammar School children on May 17th, at the Shelby County High School Auditorium in Columbiana.

The heralding of Spring is beautifully sung by those harbingers of happiness, known as Bluebirds. The guests as they arrive, are announced by the Jonquils. Among the flowers dance the butterflies and fairies, while the Bluebells merrily chime the hour for the arrival of the wedding party. The groomsmen are represented by dandelions. The bridesmaids are costumed as Tulips. The bride, Miss Lily of the Valley. The groom, Johnny-Jump Up. A water lily is the brides maid, and the tiny flower girls are brightly portrayed as Sunbeams. The Ring Bearer, is a wee little elf—Jack in the Pulpit, of course, performs the ceremony. Before the ceremony, Pansy sings, "I Love You Truly", and they are all married and lived happily ever after.

The faculty and children of the Grammar School of Columbiana most cordially extend an invitation to you to be present. The admission is 15 and 25 cents for reserved seats. The hour—8 o'clock p. m.

MAY TERM CIRCUIT COURT IN SESSION

The May term of the Circuit Court opened in Columbiana on Monday morning with Judge Lamar Field, of Anniston, on the bench. Judge W. W. Wallace being disqualified in this district, was transferred to Talladega where the Circuit Court will be in session for two weeks.

The first case on the Shelby County docket was the Katherine R. Gunn vs. Woodmen of the World Insurance case which is now being tried for the fourth time, and which will consume a greater part of the Civil week. L. H. Ellis represents Miss Gunn, and McCollough, of Birmingham, is attorney for the W. O. W.

There are 100 cases on the Docket for Civil and Criminal week the present term of Court.

MORE PEOPLE ON FARMS THAN EVER

UNIFORM GASOLINE PRICES FOR STATE IS AIM OF NEW BILL

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Mr. J. B. Reynolds, representative from Dale County and author of the bills for uniform gasoline taxes throughout the state, told a delegation of automobile men last Friday, that his measures, if adopted, will not increase the average of taxes paid on motor fuel in the state as a whole, but would correct the many inequalities that now exist in various counties and cities.

Mr. Reynolds also stated that the situation is rapidly growing worse, and if uniformity is not obtained by legislation at this session, it will be difficult or impossible to remedy the situation when it becomes a more complicated with special county and city gasoline taxes.

One of his bills, introduced last week, proposes a constitutional amendment designed to check this kind of local gasoline tax legislation. The other is a lengthy measure to make the gasoline tax a uniform seven cents in all parts of the state; adding one cent to the present state tax. When this added one cent is collected in all incorporated municipalities and their respective police jurisdictions, the proceeds go to the municipality. The balance collected outside of municipalities goes to the 67 counties in equal shares.

Under this Act, the first six cents of the state tax would continue to be divided between the State Highway Department and the 67 counties, with each county receiving a like share of the three-cent tax allocated to the counties.

All acts permitting taxation of gasoline by counties and cities are specifically repealed, but special provision is made for those that have pledged their share of the special funds to secure bonded obligation.

Mr. Reynolds stated that some counties having highest local taxes on gasoline are strongly supporting his bills.

ARKANSAS BAPTIST CHURCH PUTS BAN ON DRINKS, GAMES

BLYTHEVILLE, Ark.—Rigid enforcement of a resolution barring as First Baptist Church members anyone who drinks, gambles or has anything to do with liquor or games or chances is promised by the Rev. Alfred Carpenter.

"This has been written in our church covenant for a long time but no one seems to know it. So we had a meeting and reemphasized it and this time it is to be enforced," said the pastor of Blytheville's largest church concerning a congregational meeting's action.

Members of the church will not be permitted to have a part in gambling "from a penny on the corner of the bridge table to $1 000 in horse racing," Mr. Carpenter declared.

The resolution, unanimously adopted by some 100 members after being presented by the committee of deacons, bars persons from membership who drink beer or liquor in their homes as well as liquor or beer dealers or those engaged in the sale of intoxicants.

Grocery salesmen engaged in the sale of beer will be given a short time to resign their positions or make other arrangements before they are removed from church rolls, said Mr. Carpenter.

If it is necessary, he was instructed to appoint a committee to confer with members violating the order and declare them out of fellowship with the church when guilt is admitted or the member refuses to cease barred practices.

"People doing these things already are off the church's roll even though they may come to church," said the pastor. "We don't want them serving as leaders in our congregation or holding any offices."

Brown Tells How Kill Bean Beetles

AUBURN, Ala.—Bean beetles are numerous in Alabama and are likely to destroy an entire crop of beans unless farmers control the pests.

"To control these insects it is necessary to spray or dust with some kind of stomach poison," says Julian Brown, extension horticulturist. "Derris has been found most satisfactory and it will control them if properly applied. Dusting appears more satisfactory than spraying.

"The Derris, with 4% Rotenone content, should be mixed with superfine dusting sulphur in the proportion of 1 part of Derris to 7 parts of the sulphur. Some distributors are handling the Derris ready-mixed.

"To control the Mexican bean beetle it is necessary that the dust be applied to the underside of the leaves. The bean leaf beetle may be controlled by applying the dust to either side of the leaves. It should be applied while there is moisture on the leaves to aid the material in sticking. It is usually necessary to dust every ten days to two weeks during the life of the plants, the frequency of application depending on the amount of ranfail."

COUNTY COMMITTEE TREK TO CAPITOL

At a meeting of the farmers of Shelby County on last Thursday, A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent; Frank A. Gorman, prominent merchant of Vincent; and Solon E. McGraw, Member of the Board of Revenue for Shelby County, were elected as a Committee to represent Shelby County at the National meeting to be held in Washington of the Agriculture Adjustment Administration. The party from Shelby County will arrive in Washington on Tuesday and attend the meeting which will have among its distinguished celebrities present, President Franklin D. Roosevelt, Senator John H. Bankhead and Secretary Wallace. Members of the County delegation are expected to arrive back in Alabama, Friday.

The Shelby County Board of Education held an all-day session on Tuesday, to which the public was invited. At this meeting the patrons of the schools were expected to discuss the school problems in their respective communities. A representative group from all over Shelby County were present.

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The Montevallo Chapter of the Alabama College Alumnae Association called a special meeting, May 13th, for the purpose of earnestly and enthusiastically endorsing Dean T. H. Napier as the new President of the College. In as much as the college is loosing Dr. Carmichael, the Chapter feels that Dean Napier commands the confidence and support of the alumni and that he will maintain the tradition and the prestige of the college as no other could.

Resolutions were drawn up to be sent to the Governor and other members of the Board of Trustees, protesting any political appointment, and urging that the attitude of the alumnae be given serious consideration.

COTTON VALUE IS UP $38,501,673.00

AUBURN, Ala.—The value of cotton and cotton seed produced in Alabama in 1934 was $38,501.673 more than that produced in 1932, reports Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service. Lint and seed were worth only $34,651,751 in 1932 compared with $73,153,424 in 1934.

In presenting the figures Dr. Duncan said that the "weighted average price of cotton for 1932 was 6.5 cents per pound and cotton seed $10.36 per ton; monthly average price of cotton from August, 1934, to February, 1935, was 12.4 cents per pound and cotton seed $36.31 per ton."

DR. McADORY BECOMES STATE VETERINARIAN

AUBURN, Ala.—Dr. L. N. Duncan, president, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, has appointed Dr. I. S. McAdory acting dean of the school of veterinary medicine in the place of the late Dr. Charles A. Cary for the remainder of the fiscal year.

R. J. Goode, commissioner of agriculture and industries, has also named Dr. McAdary as acting state veterinarian.

COOKING SCHOOL AT HELENA SOON

HELENA, Ala.—The ladies of the Helena Methodist Church are sponsoring a cooking school, May 27 and 28th. The proceeds of this school will be used to help buy pews for the Helena Methodist Church. The admission will be 15 cents.

SEVERAL NEW CCC CAMPS ALLOCATED ALABAMA BY U. S.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Participation by the State in the President's Emergency Conservation Work program as provided by the Act of the Alabama Legislature, approved February 5, has resulted in the allocation to Alabama of several new CCC camps. The first of these is a private land forestry camp known as Camp P-75 in Butler County. Projects designed to work upon private holdings are exceedingly difficult to secure, since the Federal Government demands that the State guarantee continued maintenance of the work done on such areas. For localities where the part performance of landowners plus the amount of State funds which properly may be spent in cooperative protection work in the vicinity together give assurance of future upkeep of forest improvements, the Federal Government construes the circumstances as an adequate basis for the State's guarantee.

In Butler County numerous individual owners, including those controlling some very large holdings, have been engaged for many years in developing and maintaining the productivity of their forest lands. The legislative Act of February 5 has considerably strengthened the position of the State before the Federal Government with reference to the guarantees that must be made as to continued maintenance of the improvements, and on the assurance provided by this Act the new projects have been allotted.

Farmers Advised To Swat Roosters

AUBURN, Ala.—This is the time of the year to remove the roosters from poultry flocks, advises John E. Ivey, extension poultry sperialist, who is at present telling farmers to kill their sorry roosters and remove the good ones from the flock and place them on a range to themselves. By eliminating roosters from the flock, farmers will be able to produce infertile eggs which will keep longer during the summer months.

BOY SCOUT NEWS

By WILLIE THOMASON, Siluria, Alabama.

Troop Number 1, seems to have gone out for baseball in a big way. The boys have a daily work-out and have dropped 2 out of 8 games. Other Troops in the County, or school teams may schedule games with these Scouts by writing Fred Jones at Siluria. Teams wishing to play the Scouts, however, must be within our age limit, 12 to 16 years.

Helena's new Scout Troop is reported making an excellent record.

Much talk is being agitated in the County about sponsoring a Scout Circus. Lets get together and discuss this project and come to some definite decision. We believe with the cooperation we could command that we could make a grand success of it. We call on Scouts and citizens of Shelby County to express themselves regarding a program of this character. Drop me a card and let us know how you stand.

Troop Number 1 is supplied with hammocks at the low cost of 88 cents to $1.00 per. The boys are more eager to go camping now that they do not have to sleep on the ground. Sleeping in a hammock is as much fun as sleeping in your own cozy little bed at home. Any Troop or Scout desiring to purchase one of these hammocks may communicate with me for detailed information.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR PAROLE.

Notice is hereby given that application will be made to the Governor and Board of Pardons for the parole of Harrp Reynolds, who was convicted in the Circuit Court of Shelby County, Alabama, on July 29, 1929, for the Murder of Lon Turner.

Senate Passes Patman Bonus Bill in Face of Presidential Veto—Amelia Earhart Makes Another Fine Record Flight.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

BECAUSE the Patman inflation bonus bill would be easier for the President to veto than the Vinson measure, some of the administration senators joined with the Patman followers to put the former bill through the senate by a vote of 55 to 33. Previously, for some devious reason, the senators put aside the compromise measure offered by Pat Harrison's committee with the assurance that Mr. Roosevelt would sign it. That the President would veto the Patman bill was taken as a certainty and it was believed the inflationists could not gather enough votes to override the veto in the senate, though they had enough in the house.

Rep. Patman

Rather surprisingly, Senator William G. McAdoo of California, a former secretary of the treasury, advocated the Patman bill, asserting that it was "a mere conjecture" that the issue of $2,200,000,000 in noninterest bearing notes, or greenbacks, would be inflationary.

"We have nothing in the United States today but greenbacks," he said. "Is your money redeemable in gold? Is it redeemable in silver? No. It is redeemable in nothing but the honor and good faith of the American people.

"What constitutes inflation is a matter of conjecture. It is also a mere conjecture that we must have a so-called specie basis. The best proof of that is that, since going off gold, the dollar is as sound as it ever was.

"The issuance of $2,000,000,000 in new currency would affect the credit of the United States about as much as if I threw a shovelful of sand into the ocean and tried to stop the incoming tide."

TWO billion dollars of the works relief fund were segregated for immediate distribution by the works allotment division at its first session. The sum was divided into works classifications as provided by the works relief act, these including road construction, grade crossing elimination, rural rehabilitation, rural electrification, low cost housing and general construction. Allotments for specific projects were to be made later, a list of these contemplating expenditure of $100,000,000 being submitted by Mr. Ickes as approved by the PWA and referred to Frank Walker's division of applications and information.

FROM Mexico City to the Metropolitan airport at Newark, N. J., nonstop, 2,100 miles in 14 hours and 22 minutes. That is the new record set up by Amelia Earhart in her red monoplane. Her husband, George Palmer Putnam, and more than 3,000 other enthusiastic persons were at the airport to welcome her, and she was almost mobbed by the throng.

Amelia Earhart

After her start from Mexico City, Mrs. Putnam was not heard from nor reported seen for more than six hours. Her course took her straight east at first, high over the mountain peaks between the Mexican capital and Tampico. She was not seen at the oil port, nor was she reported by radio. Observers knew, however, that she expected to be above 10,000 feet as she crossed the shoreline out over the gulf for her 690 mile hop over the water to New Orleans.

Passing over New Orleans, she communicated by radio with the Department of Commerce station there, and then flew swiftly along the airways of American Air Lines and Eastern Air Lines. As she swooped over Hoover airport, Washington, Eugene Vidal, director of the air commerce bureau, radioed: "You have done a splendid job, so come down." But Amelia replied, with thanks for the invitation, that she was going on through. And that is what she did.

GOLD medals of the National Institute of Social Science were awarded to four American humanitarians at the institute's annual dinner in New York, and no one will say they were not deserved.

One was given Senator Carter Glass of Virginia "in recognition of distinguished services rendered to humanity as one of the leaders in the planning and creation of the federal reserve banking system, as secretary of the treasury, as United States senator, and as one who, through a long life, consistently and unsparingly devoted his abilities and energies to public service."

Dr. Harvey Cushing of Boston received a medal for his "distinguished services rendered to humanity as a leader in surgery and social medicine."

Dr. George E. Vincent was honored for services "as professor of sociology, as president of the University of Minnesota, as president of the Rockefeller foundation, as president of the Chautauqua institution, as one of the leaders in the development of community chests in the United States, and as an educator whose life and addresses have been an inspiration toward unselfish public service."

To Cornelius N. Bliss, former president of the institute, was presented a medal for his work "as a director of the Julliard School of Music, as a director of the Metropolitan Opera association, Inc., as a member of the central committee of the American Red Cross, as a governor of the New York hospital, as a director of the Milbank Memorial fund, as a trustee of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and as a member of the board of managers of the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor."

GEORGE N. PEEK, in his capacity of advisor to the President on foreign trade, has just made public statistics that tend to show the United States is losing its position as the world's chief creditor nation, and makes recommendations that are in accord with the growing trend against internationalism in the administration and in conflict with Secretary Hull's program of removing barriers to international trade by reciprocal trade agreements.

George N. Peek

Stating that whether or not this country still owes less to other nations than they owe to it appears to depend on the true value of defaulted war debts, Mr. Peek recommends these immediate steps:

"1. The inauguration of a detailed study of our direct investments abroad and foreigners' direct investments in the United States, to supplement the studies now in progress of capital movements.

"2. A review of all national policies based in whole or in part upon our international creditor status."

The proposal seems to lead toward high tariffs and a policy of allocating our foreign trade among other nations, as is done by many of the European countries.

Figures compiled by Mr. Peek indicate that the United States is a net international creditor by $16,897,000,000, but this includes $10,304,000,000, principal amount of war debts owed by foreign governments, and also foreign bonds held by private investors in the United States invoiced at their face value, and a pre-depression estimate of the value of American branch factories abroad and other direct investments in foreign countries. Mr. Peek strongly infers that a re-estimation of these "assets" will result in such a scaling down that this country will no longer be a creditor nation and need not act as such.

FOLLOWING a lively debate the house passed the omnibus banking bill, which rewrites the federal reserve act so as to make a virtual central bank out of the reserve system, with power to manipulate monetary policies for the purpose of promoting business stability. The final vote, after various amendments had been rejected, was 271 to 110.

In the senate the measure will be strongly combatted, with Senator Carter Glass leading the opposition. Glass wrote the banking bill during the Wilson administration, and he objects to having the system tampered with by Federal Reserve Gov. Marriner S. Eccles.

IN THE crash of a transport plane of Transcontinental Western Air near Atlanta, Mo., Senator Bronson M. Cutting of New Mexico and four other persons fell to their death. The pilot was unable to land at Kansas City because of a dense fog and his fuel gave out before he could reach an emergency landing field at Kirksville. Besides Mr. Cutting those killed were Miss Jeanne A. Hillias of Kansas City, Mrs. William Kaplan of West Los Angeles, and Harvey Bolton and K. H. Greeson, pilots, both of Kansas City. Eight passengers were seriously injured.

Senator Cutting

Bronson Cutting, a millionaire of an aristocratic family, was a radical Republican and was one of the outstanding members of the senate. He supported Mr. Roosevelt for President in 1932, but when he came up for reelection last fall he was not given the endorsement of the administration. His victory was contested by Dennis Chavez and the case is still before the senate elections committee. Mr. Cutting was born on Long Island in 1888, graduated from Harvard and thereafter went to New Mexico. In the World war he was an infantry captain and assistant military attache at the American embassy in London. He was appointed to the senate in 1927 to fill a vacancy and was elected next year to a six year term.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT strongly resented the criticism of his New Deal policies by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, and retorted by calling to the White House Secretary Roper's business planning and advisory council for an endorsement of NRA extension and the social securities program. Then to the newspaper correspondents Mr. Roosevelt scored the action of the chamber, asserting that in too many cases so-called business organizations misrepresent the business men for whom they claim to speak, and that he did not believe a single speech made at the chamber's meeting contained any mention of the human side of the picture. He declared the business organizations were not indicative of the mass belief and that he would go along with the great bulk of the people.

Several members of the business advisory council were also members of the Chamber of Commerce, and it is said they resented the President's action in seemingly using them to offset the attack by the chamber.

ALL the vast British empire celebrated the silver jubilee of King George V and Queen Mary—the twenty-fifth anniversary of their accession—and for three months there will be a continuous series of fetes in the United Kingdom and all the dominions and dependencies. London, of course, was the scene of the chief celebration on the opening day, and the metropolis was thronged with visitors. Hotels and rooming houses were overcrowded and the king ordered that Hyde Park be kept open so some of the overflow thousands could sleep there.

King George

There were seven state processions the first day. The first was that of the speaker of the house of commons, Capt. Edward A. Fitz Roy, with five ancient gilded coaches; the second, that of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, with six coaches in which rode the dominion prime ministers. Then came a two-coach procession of Lord High Chancellor Sankey, and one of the lord mayor of London, Sir Stephen Killik. The fifth procession was that of the duke of York, from Buckingham palace, two carriages with a captain's escort of the magnificently appareled royal horse guards.

The prince of Wales, as heir to the throne, came sixth. He had with him a captain's escort of the Life Guards and two carriages, in the first of which he rode with Queen Maud of Norway and his brother, the duke of Gloucester, like him, a bachelor.

Finally, in the most gorgeous parade of all, came George and Mary, and as their ornate coach, drawn by the famous grays, passed, the voices of all loyal Britishers rose in a roar of "God bless the king and queen." The rulers, accompanied by all the other notables, went to St. Paul's cathedral to give public thanks to God.

THE senate committee named to devise a means of curbing such attacks on the President as are frequently made by Huey Long on the floor of the senate has not yet reported, but it is said Senator Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri has figured out how it can be done. Clark is the upper chamber's chief expert on parliamentary procedure and for four years he was parliamentarian of the lower house. His plan is to rewrite rule 19 of the senate rules to include the President and so protect him from unwarranted attacks and slanders. That rule reads at present:

Senator B. C. Clark

"No senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another senator or to other senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a senator."

One of Long's favorite ways of launching his diatribes is to rise to a question of personal privilege, and Clark proposes that in this respect the senate rules be changed to conform with those of the house. In that body when a member feels he has been aggrieved he must explain exactly how he has been injured before he is permitted to speak. The speaker decides whether or not his injury is justified.

Senator Glass of Virginia has failed at various times to silence the "King fish" and he, too, has a plan he thinks might help accomplish that end. He recommends a requirement that all amendments offered to an appropriation bill be germane. Such a requirement would affect other senators, but Glass' move admittedly is directed against Long.

AFFIRMING a decision of the Supreme court of the District of Columbia, the United States Supreme court held unconstitutional the railroad retirement act, ruling that many of its provisions are invalid. The act provided for a system of old age pensions for all railroad workers. The decision was read by Justice Owen J. Roberts. It condemned many provisions of the law as "arbitrary," placing an undue burden on the railroads and having no relation to safety and efficiency in the operation of the railways.

The act was passed by the Seventy-fourth congress just before it closed, and had the tacit approval of the new administration, although President Roosevelt said he believed it would have to be perfected by amendment. It set up a compulsory pension plan, requiring contributions by both the carriers and the benefited employees.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—A new gold strike in Alaska, old-timers who know that territory insist, is the only thing that will save the pioneers who are now being taken to that distant land by a benevolent government in the hope of giving them a fresh start in life and making them self-supporting.

For the simple truth is that Alaska, while a most interesting part of the world for tourists, is not precisely the sort of Canaan that our forefathers who came over in the Mayflower, or earlier with John Smith, were seeking. Nor is it the agricultural paradise that the later pioneers found along the Ohio and Missouri rivers. There is plenty of evidence to support this contention, but it is an old saying that no one, much less any government, is willing to profit by another's experience. The cruel facts have to be discovered afresh for each generation.

Warren G. Harding dreamed the same sort of future for Alaska that the Relief administration envisages for the down and outers it is sending to the frozen North. When a small boy in school, he had read about the acquisition of this marvelous territory for only a few million dollars. He had read how more gold than the purchase price had been taken out. Yet there remained marvelous natural resources, coal, lumber, furs, water power without end—and salmon. Not to mention an agricultural domain so rich that its products, put up in glass jars, had played an important part in inducing congress to vote $50,000,000, in the early Wilson days, for the construction of a railroad to open this marvelous territory up to one and all.

The railroad was built, but the expected results did not follow. The population of the territory was actually declining instead of increasing. Harding was told what was the matter. It was that governmental red tape snarled up every effort for advancement. Everything had to be transacted via Washington, which was a long way off, both in miles and time.

Herbert Hoover, then secretary of commerce, was also impressed. He grew fond of the story of the three bears, one variety being under the Department of the Interior, another under Commerce, and the third under Agriculture! He made speeches about the absurdity of it.

What Harding Found

So Harding took the three secretaries to Alaska, intending to listen to the various problems and difficulties by day, and sit around the table each night with the three cabinet members involved, snipping away the red tape. Beautiful! But what did he find? That if he cut away this red tape, and the red tape winders went back to the states, Alaska would lose its chief industry—red tape winding! The clerks and officials whose jobs depended on this same red tape would return to "civilization" and the white population of Alaska would be reduced by just that number.

Which is no joke at all when it is considered that the total population along the fifty-million-dollar government railroad, from Seward to Fairbanks—longer than from Washington to Boston, just the distance from San Francisco to Los Angeles—is 6,000, including Esquimaux!

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, father of the present incumbent, discovered that the rich agricultural land so much boasted about has a normal rainfall less than that of eastern Colorado. It would grow good crops the first year the frozen land was plowed, and after that would really need irrigation! Secretary Hoover discovered the salmon industry was suffering from too much activity. They were killing off the fish.

Secretary of the Interior Work was distressed to learn that the coal, which had been thought so valuable it had been protected into a naval coal reserve, was of such poor quality and cost so much to get on shipboard, that down through the panhandle, including Juneau and Sitka, they bought coal from British Columbia instead!

All discovered that the boys who had gone to war from Alaska did not come back. They stopped off somewhere in the states where opportunities looked better. So let us hope for the sake of those now pilgrimaging up toward Skagway that a new gold field is discovered!

New Commerce Head

Despite the fact that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States has picked a new president who happens to be a very close personal friend of President Roosevelt—a classmate at Harvard, both of old upstate New York families, and all that sort of thing—prospects remain that the chamber will continue to have just as little influence in Washington as it has since Hoover left the White House.

If anyone could be calculated to "get somewhere" with the White House, it would be Harper Sibley. In the first place, the personal relation of the two families is so close that Mrs. Roosevelt, when stopping in Rochester with Mrs. Caroline O'Day last fall, stayed at the Sibley home. In the second, Mr. Sibley's economic views are by no means as far removed from those of the President as the news dispatches about the chamber's meeting would have one believe. A very close friend of many years standing tells the writer that he is one of those rich men who regard the rich as being "trustees" not "holders" of wealth! Which sounds very New Dealist, indeed.

There is another angle, however, on which his fellow members of the chamber, in picking him for president, relied rather than on their misinformation about his economic views. This is his ability to work out a compromise, and to induce those with whom he is working to co-ordinate. He is said by those associated with him, either in his lines of business, charitable or church interests, to be marvelously persuasive, though no one claims that he is an orator.

But the whole picture is wrong—meaning the picture viewed by those who think that Mr. Sibley is going to be able to steer the President tactfully away from the New Dealers and brain trusters, and back into safe and sane economic channels. President Roosevelt is just not that kind of person, and there is no club, whatever, in Mr. Sibley's hands which rouses any fear, whatever, in political minds.

Can't Scare 'Em

It is not possible for an organization like the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to frighten politicians. It is a collection of very potent figures, in business, but their potency is too diffuse, too scattered, spread out too thin, to bother men running for the house or senate. Or even for President.

Two accomplishments very dear to business hearts have been put over in the last few months, but the machinery that accomplished it was not the chamber, nor any other huge aggregation of widely diversified and spread out business interests.

One of these was repeal of the pink slip publicity for income tax returns. This was done by two agencies, working independently. One stirred up the newspaper editors of America. Practically all of them began writing editorials against income tax publicity, many of the editorials advising people to write to their senators and representatives. Later they carried extensive stories about the effect of letters and telegrams on congress, which naturally provoked more.

The other was the Pitcairn organization, which circulated repeal slips, and worked up the people to write to Washington. It was this resulting avalanche of letters which did the trick.

Then there was the modification of the public utility holding company legislation. This was made possible, despite the power of the President on Capitol Hill, by the utilities inducing their stockholders to write to their senators and representatives. Most of the legislators were amazed to find how many utility stockholders were among their constituents. And when they saw these stockholders were watching the legislation, the picture changed.

In the old days big business leaders controlled political bosses. Their whispers were respected. Politicians are just as timorous as ever, but they have to be shown that voters in their states or districts are on the warpath. Then they break records flopping.

Bailey's Big Fight

Two generations ago Arthur Pue Gorman, senator from Maryland, won undying fame, and nearly attained the Presidency by conducting a filibuster which killed the famous so-called Force bill.

Today North Carolina's senator, Josiah W. Bailey, is conducting a fight just as dear to southern hearts—the battle against the anti-lynching bill.

The cleavage is along practically the same lines—almost strictly geographical. The chief difference is that in those days northern Democrats and western Democrats—though there were mighty few of them in office—stood shoulder to shoulder with the southern wing of the party. Today the bill so obnoxious to southerners is actually sponsored by a New York Democrat, Senator Robert F. Wagner. Both Kentucky senators are voting with its advocates. (Kentucky has a lot of negroes voting!)

Maryland, though its percentage of negroes voting is as great as that of Kentucky, stands firm by the Gorman tradition. There's a reason, too. Remember what happened to Governor Ritchie?

Boosters of the anti-lynching bill insist the spirit is entirely different from that of the bill talked to death under Gorman's filibuster, despite heroic attempts to force it through by Henry Cabot Lodge. They say anyone who opposes the bill condones lynching. Southerners point to the statistics, which prove that lynchings have decreased amazingly, and ask why the federal government should trample state rights to intervene in a situation which is fast correcting itself.

Object of Bill

If the proponents of the bill will consider the merits of the Force bill controversy, they will find less difference than is at once apparent.

The object of the Force bill was, avowedly, to insure honest elections, honest polling lists, and honest ballot counts in the various states. Actually, it was aimed at preventing, by federal troops, disfranchisement of negroes in the South who wanted to vote for the party of Lincoln; aid coming from leaders of that party who wanted their votes—who had to count their votes, honestly or not, in Louisiana and Florida, to elect their President in 1876.

The object of the present anti-lynching bill is to prevent mobs interfering in the administration of justice—avowedly. Actually its chief purpose is to curry favor with negro voters in the northern, western and border states of those fighting for the bill. It is as purely a local interest bill as a tariff measure, liked in communities where products are protected, hated in communities which as a result may have to pay higher prices.

HEART OPERATION SAVES FROM DEATH MAN CUT IN BRAWL

Puerto Rican Derelict Joins the Legion of Modern Medical Oddities.

New York.—A knife thrust in the heart usually means death. To twenty-three-year-old Jose Malandez, until recently a Puerto Rican derelict, it meant fame and a good living.

Jose now belongs to that exclusive legion of medical oddities who, by the turn of fortune and a surgeon's scalpel, have been converted into rare physiological specimens, the living exhibit A of science who are the cynosure of attention at gatherings of physicians and surgeons, writes John Kobler in the Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Headliners All.

Other members of the legion have been headliners in the newspapers recently—Klaus K. Evavold of Fergus Falls, Minn., who lived for a year without a stomach; the several persons who speak without a larynx; Jesse Combs, Lebanon (Ind.) farmer, who lived for 13 years minus most of his intestines; Beatrice McCrory, Rushville, Ind., who is fed through a "window" in her side because food cannot reach her stomach through her throat; the New York infant without an esophagus, and Alice Jane McHenry of Omaha, "the girl with the upside-down stomach."

All are destined to become case histories, like the Los Angeles man whose body is steadily growing smaller; the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) child whose body is turning to stone, and Alexis St. Martin, the Indian who provided science with its first accurate knowledge of digestive processes when the accidental discharge of a shotgun laid bare his stomach without killing him.

Jose Melandez was stabbed through the heart—and lived to tell the tale! As a result of knowledge gained from his case, an incalculable number of lives of persons whose hearts are punctured in war or industry may be saved.

Unusual Operation.

Jose owes his life and his fame to Doctor Joseph Stenbuck of Harlem hospital, New York, who performed the heart suture which virtually dragged Jose back from the dead. This operation, technically known as cardorrhaphy, is not unique, but in the annals of medicine it has been attempted only a few hundred times, rarely with success. Stenbuck himself has performed it only five times, and Jose is the only subject to have survived.

One night Jose was brought into the Harlem hospital unconscious, bleeding from a terrific rent through his heart, the result of a brawl over a woman among the denizens of Harlem nightlife. He was placed on the operating table, and Surgeon Stenbuck went to work. First the skin and muscle over the heart were folded back in a flat. Then two pieces of rib were cut out and the pericardium, or shell surrounding the heart, was cut wide open.

The heart was held in place by a thread pulled taut through it. This was removed as soon as the operation was completed. Two stitches were taken in the wound and the flap sewn back.

The most dramatic part of the operation occurs at the moment when the surgeon enters the pericardium. Unless he is quick the patient will bleed to death.

Federal Agent Gets His Man After Nine Years

Salem, Ore.—It took Roy R. Norene, head of the federal immigration and naturalization service in Portland, nine years but he "got his man."

Since 1926 Norene has been looking for Lew Sen, Chinese who was smuggled into the United States. On a visit here Norene went into a Chinese restaurant and as mere routine asked the orientals there to show their papers. The certificate presented by one man bore the name Lew Sen and the federal agent's search was ended. Sen said he obtained the certificate in Seattle, Wash., where he attended school and declared he had been in Salem most of the time since coming to this country.

Wills Cash to Friends Who Lost on His Tips

Medina, Ohio.—Fearing his influence may have caused friends to lose money in unprofitable investments, William E. Griesinger, Medina business man, attempted to make reparations in his will.

The document, filed for probate, revealed the following bequests, based upon that fear: Mark Hazen and S. H. Brainard, $1,000 each; Dan R. Pelton, Medina, and Ivan Ault, Ashland, Ohio, $800 each; Clarence Shumaker, Seville, Ohio, $1,000; John Kemp, now in Florida, $500; Jay Einhart, Leland Einhart and John Crooks, all of Weymouth, Ohio, $400 each.

Stolen Prayer Book Is Found in Another Car

Boston, Mass.—Miss Virginia Tobin's automobile was stolen and recovered in Jamaica Plains a year ago, but a prayer book left on the seat was missing.

Recently thieves stole Mrs. Mary S. Kane's car from the same neighborhood and when it was recovered police found Miss Tobin's prayer book.

They returned it to Mrs. Virginia McGurk of Malden, who was Miss Tobin before she was married.

Blood and Thunder

By R. H. WILKINSON

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

ISAIH FLEMISH was past fifty. He was fat and bald and prosperous.

He was accepted in the better circles, was, in fact, regarded as somewhat of a social lion.

He attended operas and musicales.

Occasionally he took in a stage hit or went to the movies.

In short, Isaih Flemish was not unlike forty or fifty million other Americans who are past fifty, bald and prosperous.

And, like all of the other forty or fifty million, Isaih had a weakness. It lay in the realms of literature.

That is, if blood and thunder stories can be called literature.

Isaih doted on stories of real he-men, men who carried six-shooters and handled them with uncanny skill; men who thought nothing of running a knife between the ribs of other men, men who lived by the law of might and cunning.

It is said that all great men mix blood and thunder reading with the classics.

Not that Isaih was great.

He was like great men only from a literary standpoint. And probably like the rest, Isaih's weakness was frowned upon by a socially ambitious spouse.

There was no use explaining to her that blood and thunder, to Isaih, was meat and drink to a soul that had been deprived of adventure.

As far as Mrs. Flemish was concerned, it was all a silly and uncalled for business.

Hence Isaih was forced to do his reading in private, and was forbidden to mention the extent of his literary achievements in public.

It would, Mrs. Flemish stated, ruin them socially.

He was told—and he believed it, too, that blood and thunder stories were for morons and nit-wits.

No one, he was given to understand, with an ounce of intelligence, would waste time and money buying and reading blood and thunder magazines.

As a result of this Isaih, through fear of being ridiculed, never mentioned his weakness to any of his compatriots.

His opinions and ideas regarding the great open spaces and the men who rode the range, were confined to his thoughts and secret dreams.

This, of course, was before Isaih met Buck Willard.

He was returning one day from a business trip to New York and chanced to glance over the shoulder of the man occupying the seat in front of him.

His heart leaped.

The man was perusing the contents of Isaih's favorite blood and thunder periodical.

Moreover, the particular story then being perused was written by none other than the great Buck Willard, foremost of all blood and thunder writers.

Isaih stood up and with apologies seated himself beside the stranger.

Here, he thought, was a kindred spirit, an understanding soul.

One who would listen to and appreciate the prattle that he had for years longed to pour into the ears of one who would know what he was talking about.

"I noticed," said Isaih by way of an opening, "that you are reading a story by Buck Willard. A great writer, Willard. I enjoy his stiff immensely."

"Glad to hear it," said the stranger, smiling in friendly fashion.

"I'm one of his most ardent admirers. In fact, my name is Willard. Buck Willard. I wrote this story."

Isaih's jaw sagged. He gulped. Reddened.

"You—you don't mean it! You're not Buck Willard, really?"

"None other. And no one enjoys reading my stuff better than myself. Great, I calls it."

"Say!" Isaih's eyes filled with admiration. "By George, this is a pleasure. By George! You don't know how I've followed your stories. This is an honor! Can't imagine anything I've wanted more than to meet a real he-man writer like yourself. You're good!"

Mr. Willard beamed.

"Sure, I'm good. Hope to be better some day."

"Look here, Mr. Willard," said Isaih earnestly, "mind telling me how you get material for stories? It must be interesting work."

"It isn't," said Mr. Willard. "It's drudgery. Forever plowing through encyclopedias and reading western novels and going to movies. It's drudgery, I'll tell a man."

Isaih was a little nonplussed

He couldn't quite conceive how a writer of blood-and-thunder stories could call his work drudgery.

Isaih changed the subject. "What part of the West do you come from, Mr. Willard? Arizona, I suppose? Most of your stories are laid down there. Must be a great country?"

"Don't come from the West," Mr. Willard said briefly. "Never been outside of New York state in my life. Don't want to. Like it here. Wouldn't live in the West if I was paid for it."

"But—but—you must know a lot of westerners—two-gun men?"

"Don't know any. Don't believe there are any. Far as I can make out cowboys are a dirty, ignorant lot of nincompoops who can't find anything better to do."

Mr. Willard picked up his magazine and went on reading.

Isaih hesitated.

He was bitterly disappointed, sick to his stomach, disillusioned.

He hesitated a minute, made as if to speak, changed his mind and stood up. He returned to his seat, and his glance fell on a copy of the latest issue of Western Thrills, his favorite magazine.

He had anticipated an enjoyable journey home, with two-gun artists as his dream companions.

Sight of the magazine angered him. He picked it up, flung it on the floor and slumped into his seat.

After all, he thought a man is foolish to read that sort of stuff.

Hereafter, he'd devote his time to better literature.

Read the classics, try to improve himself so that he could talk intelligently when Shakespeare or Trollope or Dickens was being discussed by his literary friends.

Isaih did not again see Buck Willard. The writer left his seat shortly after Isaih had returned to his own compartment, and disappeared.

At Bridgeport, Buck Willard alighted, even though his ticket read to Boston.

"Easier than I thought," he told himself as he hurried into the telegraph office. "Old lady ought to be satisfied."

He grabbed a blank and scribbled off the following message: "Mrs. Letty Flemish, Boston, Mass. Plan worked fine. Your husband fell for gag. Is thoroughly disgusted with Buck Willard and all blood-and-thunder stories. Will expect check by return wire. Signed, Paul Jones."

Angel Fairy Decorated Birds to Match Woods

When the world was very young and all the lovely things like trees and flowers were being made, an angel fairy was sent to paint the birds so that they should be as beautiful as the woods where they lived, observes a writer in the Montreal Herald.

So eager they all were that a long queue had to be formed for the birds to wait their turn. The large ones came first, the little ones stood at the end of the line.

Last of all, among the small birds, was the goldfinch. Such a restless, perky little attractive fellow, too. Chirping impatiently to attract the fairy's attention, he hopped about restlessly, instead of keeping his place.

"What a lot there are to be painted before my turn comes," he thought. "I'll take a fly around while I'm waiting."

Up and up he soared on his little wings, revelling in the clear sunlight and bright blue sky. Presently he flew down again. What a lovely world it was, fresh and young and glowing with color. He was admiring the just-opened flowers and leafy trees when he suddenly remembered his own coat and flew back to the meadow. But the long queue of birds had gone. They had all been decorated, and the angel fairy was packing up his paints and palette.

The poor little goldfinch was left dowdy and plain in a beautiful world. Overcome with sorrow, he sat weeping on a branch until the fairy took pity on him.

"You were too late, through your own fault, little bird," he said. "My paints are nearly finished, but I will do what I can for you."

He still had some scraps of color left and set to work on the finch's coat with these. There was a dab of crimson for his face, a touch of blue on his head and long wing feathers, cream and yellow and soft browns for his body, and—what luck—a big splash of gold for each wing. So that is—so it is said, how the little goldfinch came by his beautiful coat.

Hail a Great Menace

Hail, the coming of which cannot be predicted, is a menace that hangs over all crops east of the Rockies, particularly in the Midwest. A hailstorm can reduce a promising field to a total loss in a few minutes. Hailstones, says Dr. W. J. Humphreys of the weather bureau, are formed in the vigorously rising air of a thunderstorm. Raindrops are blown up to a level where it is so cold that they freeze. But the ascending air is puffy, so that many of the frozen lumps must make several excursions back and forth between the levels of snow and rain. All the time they grow larger and larger by capturing snow crystals in one level and raindrops in the other, until at last they are too large to be supported by the uprushing air and fall to the ground.

Sweden Keeps Relics of Past

In preserving relics of its past, Sweden keeps not only examples of costumes and handicrafts, but whole houses, barns and mills from every part of the country. At Skansen in a 70-acre outdoor museum are buildings representing almost every development in Sweden's national life and giving one a full picture of life in former times. To preserve the illusion completely the curators have furnished the dwellings with kitchenware, furniture, hangings and wall paintings typical of each period.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MOST HISTORIC THREE R'S

SPEAK of the Three R's and you naturally think of those you learned in the little red schoolhouse—readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetic. But more historic are those which kept James G. Blaine out of the White House. They were Rum, Romanism and Rebellion.

Blaine, twice denied the Republican nomination for the Presidency, had won it in 1884. Despite the attacks made upon his character, he seemed a certain winner over Grover Cleveland, the Democrat. Republican leaders, to counteract those attacks, staged a reception for their candidate by a group of Protestant clergymen.

Rev. Samuel D. Burchard, a Presbyterian minister, acting as spokesman for the group, said to Blaine: "We are Republicans and don't propose to leave our party and identify ourselves with the party whose antecedents have been rum, Romanism and rebellion." Blaine, tired out from a long speaking trip, was paying little attention to the speaker and did not catch those three fatal words. If he had, there is no doubt that he would have repudiated them.

But he didn't and the news leaked out. Immediately the Democratic press took them up. Soon Dame Rumor whispered that Blaine himself had uttered the Three R's. They were a direct slap in the face, not only for the people of the South but more particularly for the large body of patriotic Roman Catholic voters.

In vain the Republican candidate repudiated this slander. It was too late. As the campaign drew to a close it became apparent that the state of New York would decide the issue. Cleveland carried New York by only 1,149 votes.

Had it not been for Doctor Burchard's "three little words," it is probable that Blaine would have had that narrow margin and with it, the election.

A BOX OF PILLS

JUST before sunrise on June 22, 1918, a train en route to Hammond, Ind., stopped just east of the little town of Ivanhoe, because the conductor had noticed a hot box on one of the cars. It was the second section of the Hagenbeck-Wallace circus train.

The trainmaster, dozing in the caboose, awoke suddenly to see the headlight of a speeding locomotive boring through the dim morning light. It was an empty troop train—21 steel pullmans drawn by a powerful locomotive. It had not slowed down for a caution signal two miles back; it had passed the next one set on the red; it had ignored a flagman from the circus train, frantically waving his red lantern, and as a last resort—he had tossed a lighted fusee at the engine cab window as it roared past.

In another moment the big engine had plowed into the rear of the circus train. Wooden coaches crumpled like cardboard boxes and almost immediately burst into flames from the shattered oil lamps.

Hours later when they cleared away the wreckage and counted the toll, it was 68 dead and 127 injured—clowns, bareback riders, trapeze performers, acrobats, animal trainers, veterans and internationally known stars of the "big top."

An investigation followed. The engineer of the troop train admitted he had been dozing at his post and hadn't seen any of the warning signals. Was his health good? Yes, it was all right except—well, just before starting on his run, he had taken some pills!

The pills left in the box were sent to chemists who found in them drugs which produced unavoidable drowsiness. Because of them, there had occurred the worst disaster in circus history!

A COUGH AND A MASSACRE

CHARLES LOUIS NAPOLEON BONAPARTE wanted to be emperor of France, as his uncle, Napoleon Bonaparte, had been.

The revolution of 1848 gave him his first chance, for it resulted in his being elected to a seat in the national assembly. His popularity grew and he secured the office of president.

But Louis Napoleon wasn't satisfied with this. He wanted his term of office extended to ten years and a residence in the Tuileries. Then on December 2, 1851, he staged his famous coup d'etat. The assembly was dissolved and 180 of its members were placed under arrest. At once there was an uprising in the French capital.

An excited young aide dashed into the palace with news that a mob was on the way to storm the gates. He gave the information to Count de St. Arnaud who happened to have a very bad cold. Between his fits of coughing, he heard the aide's news and, in apology, said "Ma sacre toux!" (My d—d cough!) The aide misunderstood him, and thinking he said "Massacrez tous!" (Massacre them all!) ran outside to give the order to the troops.

Several hundred people were killed and before the day was over the fighting in the streets of Paris was a bloody slaughter—all because of a bad cough!

Goes to Jail So His Wife May Have Aid

Salem, Mass.—Because he wished his wife to collect welfare aid of $1.50 a day for herself and four children, Charles R. Ingraham asked and received from Judge George B. Sears a term of one month in the house of correction. Sears, appearing in District court on non-support charges, told the judge:

"I have been unable to get work of any kind, your honor, and I feel my wife and children will be better off if I am sent to jail and they are put on the welfare list."

PITCHES DENTIST THROUGH WINDOW

Burly Patient, Taking Gas, Goes Haywire.

New York.—A Washington Heights dentist was thrown out of the window of his operating room by his patient while he was engaged in extracting a molar from the left side of the jaw and was busy administering gas. Fortunately, the window was on the first floor, and the dentist was not seriously hurt.

The dentist is Dr. Alvin B. Leavitt, sixty years old, with an office at 144 Audubon avenue on the ground floor of a house between One Hundred and Seventy-second and One Hundred and Seventy-third streets. The patient was Albert Callahan, thirty, of Washington Heights. Mr. Callahan is six feet tall and weighs some 175 pounds.

The patient, a burly individual in fine condition, threw the dentist out of the window with his right hand and the gas machine out with his left, and then leaped through the window himself.

When all three were outside, the patient went after the dentist and tried to throttle him. He was subdued by several astonished citizens.

A few minutes later the patient was back in the operating chair. A policeman and an ambulance surgeon were holding him down, and the dentist, without the use of gas, removed the troublesome tooth from the left side of the jaw.

The patient then went home to resume what most of the time is a normal existence.

Hysterical Man Knocked Out by Woman Air Ace

New York.—Miss Annette Gipson, woman flyer and promoter of air races, landed a monoplane at Roosevelt field, New York, after fighting off a student flyer who became hysterical and "froze" to one of the dual controls at 2,000 feet.

After a few maneuvers Miss Gipson attempted to nose her plane to earth when the young passenger who was sitting beside her at the controls, held the control stick and refused to permit Miss Gipson to push it forward for the dive.

She struggled for a moment, then noticed that her companion was hysterical. Fearing that a struggle might prove fatal to both of them, Miss Gipson grabbed a metal fire extinguisher and struck the man on his head.

He toppled forward. As he straightened up, Miss Gipson reached to strike again. This time he parried the blow and the extinguisher struck Miss Gipson on her nose. The man then collapsed.

Miss Gipson brought the plane down and helped the young man from the plane. He was semi-conscious but soon revived.

All Smith had to do was to sit around a San Francisco hotel, eat plenty of meals—and drink plenty of beer.

Russian Gives Birth to Child With Three Legs

Moscow.—A peasant in the village of Sebezh on the Latvian frontier gave birth to a child with three legs.

Ten days after the child, a girl, had been born, the mother noticed a peculiar swelling near the base of the infant's spinal column. She took it to the local hospital where surgeons found that it was a miniature leg. The joints could bend and the leg was ordinary in every way except that the big toe was inverted.

The mother's other children are normal.

POULTRY

CORN, BUTTERMILK, GOOD CHICK RATION

Yellow Grain Makes Excellent Basis for Diet.

Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Poultrymen have long known that yellow corn makes an excellent basis for the diet of chickens. A long series of feeding experiments at the Beltsville research center of the United States Department of Agriculture has confirmed this opinion and has emphasized the point that poultrymen can hardly do better than to feed yellow corn to growing chicks. Yellow corn requires a protein suppplement, and after trying a wide variety of sources of protein the poultry specialists came to the conclusion that nothing answers the purpose better than dried buttermilk except that when it is relatively high in price part of the dried buttermilk might well be replaced by good quality meat scraps or similar products.

Some very simple rations such as the one composed of five-eighths corn and three-eighths dried buttermilk permitted excellent growth and very good egg production when fed to birds with access to a grass range. Such a ration is practically balanced as regards protein but requires vitamin D as supplied by 2 per cent of cod-liver oil when fed to birds confined without access to direct sunlight. Also for chicks reared without outdoor range, the ration is greatly improved by the addition of 10 per cent of rice bean.

Addition of meat scraps or fish meal increased the protein in the feed, and young chickens made slightly greater gains, but did not make more efficient use of the feed. The buttermilk provides a high-quality protein, and these six years of feeding tests showed that when a reasonable per cent of protein was fed the quality was more important than the quantity.

For farm flocks it would be possible to feed nothing but yellow corn and all the liquid buttermilk or skim milk the birds would drink and still expect very good results in growth and egg production.

How to Figure Pullets, Problem for Poultrymen

Every poultryman should plan to raise enough pullets to displace from 60 to 70 per cent of his old flock each year, says a writer in the Missouri Farmer. The number of old hens to be displaced should depend upon the quality of the old birds. If the old stock is of exceptional good quality, say from trapnested stock with production records ranging between 200 and 250 eggs each per year, it usually pays to hold more of them the second year, because each pullet must be fed six months before she begins to earn her living, whereas the old hens already have this six months behind them and are ready to produce. If the old hens are of ordinary quality, more of them should be displaced with pullets.

It is a problem each spring to figure out how many eggs to set or how many baby chicks to buy in order to rear a certain number of pullets. A conservative rule to follow is this: Five eggs are usually required to produce one mature pullet, and three baby chicks to produce one mature pullet. This allows for a reasonable mortality, culling, and the roosters. If good quality of chicks are started and the brooder house under, rather than over, stocked, a better average than this can be had—this, coupled of course, with good management.

Set Good-Sized Eggs

Selection of hatching eggs for large size must not be carried to an extreme. Farmers who do their own hatching often make the mistake of keeping oversize eggs while best results are to be had from eggs weighing 26 to 28 ounces to the dozen. Hens hatched from such eggs should produce good-sized eggs that will bring best market prices. Hens hatched from small eggs usually produce small eggs. The competition which Middle Western egg producers face in Eastern markets calls for larger eggs.—Prairie Farmer.

Washed Hatching Eggs O.K.

According to tests conducted by the New South Wales (Australia) department of agriculture, washing hatching eggs did not affect hatchability. Dirty eggs and washed eggs hatched as well as clean eggs, but dirty eggs increase the possibility of infection in the incubator. If necessary to set dirty eggs, therefore, it is best to first wash them, although the safest measure is found to be set only perfectly clean eggs, that is, eggs that are clean but unwashed.

Overcrowding Brooder

Overcrowding is a practice that is common in chick brooding and should be avoided to obtain best results, according to C. E. Lampman, poultry husbandman with the Idaho experiment station. The number of chicks that can be brooded in a given area of floor space will vary, depending upon how soon and how consistently the chicks will use an outside yard. The thumb rule he advises to allow one square foot of floor space for every three chicks.

FRANK HEAD ..... Editor and Publisher
MILDRED WHITE WALLACE ..... Associate Editor

ASSOCIATE EDITOR'S NOTE—In view of the fact that Poppy Day will soon be observed, and wishing whole, heartedly to sponsor through these columns this patriotic project, we reprint a letter which our good journalistic friend, Lewis Follett, received and commented on as follows: "Surely no one can read this letter without a prayer for a legionaire who loves his country; and now after years of living death, may yet 'set out alone' leaving a world which, for all its purgatory, seems desirable and beautiful."

No more stirring appeal has crossed the Associate Editor's desk than the letter which we reprint below—LEST WE FORGET—the WORLD WAR and its AFTERMATH.

Dear Mr. Follett: The war clouds hanging over Europe today prompt this letter. When it reaches you, if I have not "passed over", I shall be in a government hospital—shall have been thru the agony and nausea and vomiting following ether; shall have had a stomach torn up by German shrapnel patched up for the third time. That doesn't very pretty, but war isn't pretty, either.

I look back now in pity on the 18-year-old boy I was when that happened—screaming in pain, because I was too young to be silent and suffering was so new to me—trying to close with bloody hands the gaping wound in my abdomen. I should have been at home in school—in Sunday school—but the bands, the trappings of war misled me.

I lay 15 months in a hospital in France, where I suffered the tortures of the damned. Infection set in, following the operation. My torn stomach felt literally inside out from vomiting. Pain stripped the glory from war, and I wondered why in hell I was there, anyway—I wasn't mad with anybody. Today I know I wouldn't have been there if men then, with influence, wrote and taught boys about war's insanity.

Vera Brittain says, in "Testament of Youth", that if a million animals were assembled and slaughtered the whole world would be in an upheaval with horror. Such cruelty would not be tolerated. Yet, men were sent from all over the Christian, civilized" world in just that way. By the millions they were cut down, torn to bits, slaughtered—their blood poured out on a thousand fields. Why don't you, who have the medium of expression, tell them about war? . . .

It may be that my browsings with "The Wanderer" are about over; the time may have come for me to set out—alone—as it always must be, "down the long trail." But, barring war, it has been a great game, in a beautiful world, and I have loved it. Is it amiss to add that I hope the story isn't so soon ending?

But if it is the end, this in farewell—as surely as God never meant for an 18-year-old boy to suffer as I did, war will finally be outlawed, and no mother's son will be asked to go through hell, simply because he loves his country.

TRENDS FAVORABLE IN STATE BANKING

Recent Figures Indicate Large Increases in Deposits and Invested Funds

Improvement in the condition of state banks in almost every respect during 1934 is shown by statistics recently assembled, Robert M. Hanes, President Wachovia Bank and Trust Company, Winston-Salem, North Carolina, points out in an article in "Banking" published by the American Bankers Association. The figures on which this statement is based were gathered by the Committee on State Bank Research of the association from reports furnished by state bank supervisors throughout the country.

"Ever since 1921 the number of state banks has been declining," Mr. Hanes says. "Between 1931 and 1934 the decline was rapid. Figures for December 31, 1934, showed that the downward trend has not yet ended, but the decline last year was the smallest in twelve years."

There are now, he says, about ten thousand state banks, which term includes all state chartered institutions with the exception of mutual savings banks. The article continues:

"Even more significant was the ending of the decline of deposits in state banks which had been going on since the collapse of the stock market boom in 1929. In recent years for which figures are available the drop has been particularly abrupt. Total deposits in state banks declined from $20,395,762,000 on December 31, 1931, to $15,424,823,000 on December 31, 1933. The record for 1934 shows a recovery to $17,503,766,000 at the year-end.

Significance of Increased Deposits

"It is particularly gratifying to note the expansion of deposits, since it was their decline which made necessary the liquidation of investments, the calling of loans, and all the other phenomena which go under the name of 'deflation' and have brought banks so much criticism in recent years. It is now plain that this was due to efforts of the banks to place themselves in the possession of enough liquid assets to meet the growing demands of depositors for the return of a part of the money which had been placed on deposit.

"That this is true is borne out by the movement of invested funds of state banks, which has paralleled that of deposits. These invested funds (loans and discounts plus investments) for state banks, dropped from $20,291,320,000, at the end of 1931, to $14,915,773,000 at the end of 1933. By December 31, 1934, however, they had recovered to $15,769,510,000. All of this gain is accounted for by the increase in investments during 1934, the expansion amounting to approximately $1,300,000,000.

"As for loans and discounts, they registered a slight drop again in 1934, but the rate of decline was much smaller than in previous years, which in itself is progress. Whereas the drop in loans and discounts amounted to approximately $3,300,000,000 in 1932, and to approximately $1,300,000,000 in 1933, it was less than $500,000,000 in 1934.

"In another respect the balance sheet figures for December 31, 1934, were especially impressive. Bills payable and rediscounts of the state banks, which at the end of 1932 had reached a depression high of $669,709,000, had dropped by the close of last year to the low figure of $82,101,000. One must search the records as far back as 1917 to find bills payable and rediscounts of state banks at a lower figure. Moreover, it is reasonable to expect a further reduction of such borrowings during the current year."

CHELSEA NEWS

CHELSEA SCHOOL NEWS

The students of Chelsea Junior High School will present a play at the close of school. The title of the a three act comedy by Walter Richplay is, "The Gay Pretenders". It is ardson, given in one hour and forty-five minutes. Richard and Irene Tully, a newly married couple, have rented a charming bungalow. A teleegram arrives announcing the coming of Richard's uncle, Hiram. His uncle is wealthy and plans to set him up in Wall Street if he should find him properously situated. The couple pretends to have plenty. Close on the heels of Uncle Hiram, comes Irene's Aunt Mirandy, who is always preaching economy. Immediately problems begin to arise and follow one after another in rapid succession until Uncle Hiram falls for Aunt Mirandy when he discovers that they both use the same kind of liver pills. It is a very interesting play. We hope everybody will come and enjoy the evening. We hope you will enjoy laughing at Rufus and Deliah, two colored servants. A small admission will be charged. CONSOLATION

With you so far, so many miles away,
I pause remembering that still we may
Be warmed and cheered by the same high sun,
Have the same star wish when the day is done,
Marvel and wonder at the same full moon,
And both alike with the God of love commune.
These thoughts bring you so close to my heart—
Mere miles can never keep love-bound souls apart.

LOVE LIGHT

We two have all our lives
Lived many miles apart;
Yet all the while
We've looked and hoped
Sometime we'd meet
Our own, the only one
That we could really love,
Along the road we trod.
And we had always thought
We'd know each other
By the love-light
We would plainly see,
Shining in the other's eyes;
And thats the way—we met.

It Takes More Than LUCK To Build A Business

IT TAKES ambition, energy, money, brains and—above all—PEOPLE. People who are interested; people who will buy; people to whom your name is as familiar as a best friend's telephone number.

They are the ones who build businesses, the people who feel they know you, respect you, trust you.

You can make their acquaintance in many ways.

But, because they ARE people, they're human. They naturally judge a man by the company he keeps.

If you care about their opinions, meet them where they are accustomed to finding information and opinions they know they can safely respect and believe.

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

Who says M-O-T-H-E-R did not have HER DAY on last Sunday? Surely everyone who has been fortunate enough to play this coveted role was happier for having lived to be a part of the lovely program arranged for MOTHER on May 12th. The air was filled with melodies honoring the little Lullabye Lady from Rock-a-bye-Land. Flowers, candy, cards, and daintiest of gifts were tendered this world renowned Pal of our cradle days. The day will not soon be forgotten! Long will it linger in the hearts of those of us who were so beautifully remembered.

Judge Lamar Field, of Anniston, is holding a term of the Circuit Court of Shelby County in Columbiana this week. Judge Wallace is in Talladega for two weeks holding Court. Both Judges are disqualified in their respective Districts on account of former interests in cases on the docket.

Misses Alice Roberts, Ruth Luck, Margaret Ellis, Charlie Verne Tinney of Alabama College, A. D. Gordon and Harris Milton Gordon of the University, were among the Collegiates who spent the week-end in Columbiana.

The home of Mrs. R. F. Waters, of Pelham, was gay last week with week-end visitors who included, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bradfield and Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Edwards of Tarrant City, Alabama. J. D. Walters returned from Tarrant City where he has been vacationing for the past week.

Mrs. R. F. Waters was a delightfully enthusiastic visitor to Columbiana on Thursday, and we acknowledge with pleasure a personal call from the little lady who lives up Pelham way.

The Rhythum 'Ristocrats are rehearsing nightly for the Saturday night dance to be given at the Airport this week. The boys are getting better all the time and are contemplating adding some new "combinations" this week.

Frank A. Gorman, Solon McGraw, of Vincent, and A. A. Lauderdale, of Columbiana, left for Washington on Monday morning. These three gentlemen were chosen to represent Shelby County in the fight to retain the Cotton Program sponsored by Bankhead.

Do not forget to attend the Operetta at the High School on next Friday night. This tuneful musical attraction is directed by Miss Irene Bishop and Miss Nix—and has a cast of 75 children who will entertain you in their own inimitable way.

Isn't it funny that you can spend one day in Birmingham and actually meet more people from Columbiana whom you know than you see on Main Street in a month?

This chain letter craze is settling down into a good sized racket. My desk is piled high with letters ranging from Oklahoma to Alabama. Where on this earth did the "idea" originate that any one in the newspaper racket in Shelby County had a dollar anyway? We are no longer even "bidding" on the probability of getting one.

"Selfishness is a chord, tight drawn, it strangles Friendship".

Miss Beatrice Looney continues to merit "scholarships" in Voice, and this week is the happy recipient of a $100.00 scholarship recently won from Huntington College in Montgomery. Miss Looney won a $50.00 scholarship in Alabama College in the Inter-State High School competition held during the month of April. LeRoy Mooney, pianist, accompanied Miss Looney.

B. E. Swindle, Director of the Siluria Band, will spent one day each week in Columbiana instructing Saxophone, trumpet, trombone and all wind instruments. The enthusiastic interest in orchestral instruments will make for better musical programs for Columbiana. And let me repeat what many others have said before, Columbiana holds the spot light for possessing more native musical talent than any town of its size in the United States. This talent just needs developing, and since chatting with Mr. Swindle, we personally believe he can deliver the goods.

Gratefully do I acknowledge on this Tuesday morning, loveliest of roses from Mary T. Goodwin. Had not this bit of thoughtful kindness come to bless the day, I could not have gone about my tasks assigned in such a happy frame of mind. There is something more potent than you might think in the "atmosphere" or "environment" in which a fellow grinds out his daily tasks—and when, amid the clackety clack of the typewriter and linotype as they sing their "rasping duet", you can look into the heart of a lovely rose—well, the "harmony" even of these mechanical instruments grows more melodious. Thanks, little lady for your friendship and for the thought which prompted remembrance on this occasion.

Walter Chancellor, popular Legionaire and owner of Chancellor's Ferry, near Wilsonville, spent Tuesday in Columbiana.

We unqualifiedly state that the Strutwear Hosiery line is the best buy on the market. For a number of years, T. R. Walton has handled this exclusive and dependable line of hose. Go by today and buy a box. The sheer beauty of the finely woven all silk hose in the new spring shades will enhance your costume and no matter what color the frock you may be wearing, you can match it. See ad in this week's issue and take my word for it, you won't find prettier nor better hose anywhere for the money.

Prominent citizens of Shelby County noted circulating under the dome of the "Temple of Justice" this week, included: Charles Cox, representative from Chilton County; E. O. Jones, state auditor, now engaged in checking the Tax Collector's office; B. I. Jackson, of Clio; Burton Lucas, Judge E. S. Lyman, E. D. Carpenter, and Dr. E. G. Givhan, of Montevallo; George Kendrick and Kenneth Cunningham, of Calera, who are serving on the Jury now engaged in trying the Gunn case. Phillip Arnold, W. A. Davis, Manager of Alabama Power Company office in Montevallo; Tom Lee, of Pelham (who had many lovely things to say about the Democrat and its popularity in his section, and we pause long enough to say "thank you" and mean it)—and many others whom Columbiana citizens delight to welcome.

Have you noticed the adorable hand carved cedar tables made by J. L. Brand in his own little work shop. Truly works of art—lovely and useful—See him today!

Mrs. W. B. White entertained her son, Milton Falkner White, with a birthday party on last Friday afternoon. A delightful program consisting of games and contests furnished entertainment for the guests who were invited to share the seventh anniversary of this popular and handsome boy who numbers his friends by the score. After the program, ice cream and cake were served the following guests: Allie Clara Cooper, June and Harrell Fore, James and Claud Jr. Crumpton, Carl and Bob Mooney, Myra Holcombe, J. W. Edmondson, Bobby Baker, Hazel Spearman, Doris Merrill, Gene Collins, James and Betty Green, Harold and Hudson Glass, Earl and Billy Martin, Emma Jean Luquire, Morris and Leslie Seale, J. L. and Ralph Atkinson, Douglas Rasco, Ruby Walton, James Crawford, Jim Duke, Wylodine and W. B. Jr. and Milton White.

Mrs. White was assisted in entertaining the little guests by Misses Nancy Wooley, Vonzelle and Helen Goodwin, Mrs. Garvin Baker, Mrs. Bolin Cooper and Mrs. Donald Falkner.

TALBERT MORGAN, Announcer Who Succeeds Charles Wright At Station WBRC, Birmingham.

The new voice you have recently heard over Station WBRC, Birmingham, Alabama, is that of Talbert Morgan, formerly connected with the Don Lee Broadcasting System, which is a branch of the Columbia Broadcasting Company.

If education and preparation for the radio profession have any thing to do with it, Talbert Morgan should be one of the South's most successful Announcers. He is a graduate of Washington and Lee University, has two years of graduate work to his credit from Stanford University, and now, he states, he is going to Birmingham-Southern "just for the fun of it".

Mr. Morgan is a native of Alabama, but moved to Memphis when a small boy, and received his early education in the schools of Tennessee. While attending Stanford University in California, he became interested in Radio work and began his early training by writing script for KFI, Los Angeles. From this place he travelled to KGN, San Diego, thence to KMOX in St. Louis and on to WLW (The Nation's Station), where he was prominently identified with the Announcing staff and Continuity Department. Recently he moved to Birmingham to be with his grandfather, Judge Alfred Benners, and to attend Birmingham-Southern. When he heard of the vacancy at WBRC, he applied to Bill Young for the position. Mr. Young states he read and pronounced the difficult musical names and terms more perfectly than any applicant who has ever tried out at WBRC.

Mr. Morgan is now engaged in making good with the Station authorities, and is daily winning for himself favorable acclaim by many radio fans in Alabama. He is regarded as "one announcer in Birmingham who is thoroughly competent to handle any type program assigned him".

Personally speaking, my brief pilgrimage with this new comer to Alabama ether waves has been a delightful experience. Traversing the ether waves for the past nine years has naturally thrown me with many Directors, Announcers, Technicians etc. incident to the radio world. Finding an Announcer who is gracious, charmingly cooperative, and who takes a personal interest in putting across the type program the Artist is presenting, is a joy not to be over-looked, for the part he plays is an important one toward a successful program. There is always a certain "tenseness" about a radio studio. The exact timing of a program, the exact timing of announcement, the exact-exactness of everything connected with the flash of a little red light, the signal from Engineer to Announcer, the signal from Announcer to artist, the minute hand on the little clock—the second left to sign off—well, to make a long story short, THINGS around a radio studio can get on your "nerves" unless you have a good "balance wheel" in your Announcer. Announcers, believe it or not, can "make" or "break" a program, no matter how good the program may be. Talbert Morgan is calm, collected, well poised, graciously charming under all conditions, (and I have seen him cope with several temperamental artists recently and leave them all well pleased with themselves which is good "politics", and cooperative to the nth degree, which makes him the delightful Announcer to work with which it has been my pleasure to do for the past few weeks.

Alabama is fortunate in having claimed this outstanding young man and we extend congratulations again to WBRC for their wise choice in selecting a successor to Charles Wright.

So Much Value, So Little Money

That's how W. K. Weaver, proprietor of the Weaver-Ragsdale Mercantile Company, of Talladega, Ala., feels about Alabama Power Company service. Recently he wrote:

"I have been a customer of the Alabama Power Company for over 10 years. I've always found the service far superior to what I might expect, and I've always wondered how you could give such value for so little money. And the nice part about it is, you keep doing it for less and less money."—Adv. Alabama Power Company.

THE PURPOSE OF DEPOSIT INSURANCE

WHEN Congress created the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation its primary objective was the protection of depositors. This Corporation began insuring deposits January 1, 1934. It is a permanent organization.

It now insures deposits in a great majority of the banks, including this institution. As a result, millions of depositors enjoy a degree of financial security heretofore unknown. When you have money on deposit here you know for a certainty that your deposits up to $5,000 are fully safeguarded against loss. Deposit insurance is for your protection.

Pass the Patman Bill
They Love King George
Parachutes?
Puzzle for Solomon

The senate votes, 55 to 33, to pay the veterans their bonus in cash. That vote, not being a two-thirds vote, would not overrule the Presidential veto, which is expected.

Arthur Brisbane

The Patman bill, wisely approved, gives the veterans their money to spend in their way for things they want. Under that bill veterans are to be paid with new money. That money as soon as received would all vanish, in purchases in every corner of the United States.

New United States money is exactly as good as new bonds, since paper dollars and paper bonds get all their value from the name of the government printed on them. There are no longer any gold payments promised or implied. If government money is not good, government bonds are not good.

President Roosevelt, congratulating King George, says: "It is gratifying to contemplate the wise and steadfast influence which your majesty has exerted for a quarter of a century." That was about all that the President, with the best of intentions, could say, for the British ruler's popularity is based on sticking to his job, which is, letting his people alone, while they attend to their business in their own way.

The king seems to think that those who have built the greatness of the British empire to its present height may be trusted to continue building it.

Some "best minds" here feel that any success or progress in the United States has been more or less of an accident, under bad management, and needs to start again on a new plan.

Time will tell whether a government policy of "let them alone" or "tell them how" is better.

Five killed, eight injured, in an airplane crash. The dead include Senator Cutting of New Mexico, who will be deeply regretted by his state and by the senate.

Flying in fog, fuel gave out. The last radio message was: "Fuel's getting low. We can't find a break in the fog. It looks like a forced landing."

Both pilots were killed; they did their best.

An occasional disaster will not discourage flying, but this particular accident raises again the question, Should not airplane builders concentrate on parachute protection for passengers?

King Solomon never solved any such problem as this: A New York manufacturer wished to advertise "invisible panties," in usual words—small trousers worn by modern women. NRA rules say that if the article advertised is not invisible, the advertising is "false and misleading and violates the code." If those panties are invisible, NRA cannot pass on them, and their manufacturer must not attempt to display them on models, for evident reasons dealing with morality.

Eight million young women in Germany are unmarried. The government invites 333,000 of them to marry "healthy, virile, hereditary farmers."

To lead the unmarried German girl to the "virile, hereditary farmer" may be easier than making her marry him.

A labor law compels women under twenty-five years of age to serve one year on farms before they can take other jobs.

Once you begin to tell human beings how they must live, life becomes complicated.

Pope Pius, addressing 130 German pilgrims, spoke plainly about Germany's present Hitler government:

"They wish in the name of so-called positive Christianity to dechristianize Germany, and they wish to conduct the country back to barbaric paganism, and nothing is left undone to disturb Christian and Catholic life."

The pope's words referred to the unpleasant welcome home of 2,000 young German pilgrims that went to Rome to receive the papal blessing.

Harry L. Hopkins, federal emergency relief administrator, uses language as plain as that of Mussolini or Stalin. He finds that we have in America a class of "oppressors," rich men, and promises that that small, oppressive, business minority "who extol poverty and profits in the same breath" shall be made outcasts in the "new order" that is coming.

One English town will celebrate the king's jubilee by distributing free beer. Might it not be a good idea to make light beer part of the regular food supply of men in this government's CCC camps?

Minus government tax, it would cost little, keep men contented, abolish or diminish complaints of some workers spending their small supplies of money with bootleggers.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

Operators of the Higgins Hive and Honey Co. at Alabama City believe in a kind Providence. A number of empty hives were placed on the railroad platform for shipping a few days ago. A colony of Italian bees immediately established themselves in one of the hives. The hive will be kept on the platform this month for exhibition purposes.

More than 700 employes of the Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Co. attended an all-day outing and barbecue at the company's Lewisburg mine recently. The barbecue was held to stimulate interest in the company's campaign to avoid accidents at the mine during 1935.

Attorneys for the City of Tarrant have prepared to file a petition with the Alabama Public Service Commission requesting that its new street lighting contract with the Birmingham Electric Co. be made retroactive to July 1, 1933, instead of July 1, 1934.

At a meeting of organized labor in Florence, R. J. Bailey of the painters and decorators' union introduced a resolution condemning the United States Chamber of Commerce for "its vicious attack" upon President Roosevelt. The resolution was adopted.

Clarence E. Cason, journalism professor at the University of Alabama and former Birmingham newspaperman, was found shot to death in his office at the Union Building by his wife. Coroner S. T. Hardin returned a verdict of suicide.

Confidence that the Birmingham district will be allotted at least $6,000,000 in Federal funds for the construction of an industrial water supply system was voiced by City Commissioner Lewey Robinson on his return from Washington.

Abolition of Alabama's system of casting absentee ballots by mail was foreseen as two bills, both providing drastic changes in the state's voting laws, were up for the consideration of the Senate revision of laws committee.

Gaston Scott, highway commission chairman, formally announced the appointments of three division engineers and said John R. Peavy, former Mobile County engineer, had been appointed state highway maintenance chief.

Henry Sprott Long, son of Mrs. E. W. Long, Jasper, and a senior in the School of Architecture, Georgia Institute of Technology, has won top award in a competition sponsored by the Beaux Arts Institute of Design, New York.

A "last call" to persons having postal savings accounts to convert these into postal savings bonds of the July 1, 1935, issue, was sounded in an announcement received from Washington by Postmaster Green, Birmingham.

Expenditures by the Barbour County Emergency Relief Administration during the first two years of its existence, March 1, 1933, through February 28, 1935, totaled $207,036.68.

Birmingham Retail Druggists Association will be hosts at the annual convention of the Alabama Pharmaceutical Association, June 18, 19 and 20, at the Thomas Jefferson Hotel.

Clarence M. Tardy, soft drink salesman, Birmingham, was reelected president of the Alabama State Elks Assn., at the concluding session of the state convention at Demopolis.

Mrs. Julia Mae Rost, of Sheffield, was elected governor of District Four of the Pilot Club at the closing sessions of a two-day meeting of the organization in Birmingham.

An elaborate entertainment program has been planned for the state convention of the Eighty-First (Wildcat) Division in Selma Sunday and Monday, May 26 and 27.

Included in three-way highway projects approved by the Alabama Relief Administration was the hard surfacing of six miles from Mt. Pinson to the Blount County line.

J. B. Lassiter, former Birmingham banker sentenced to serve six to 10 years for receiving funds in an insolvent bank, has been paroled by Gov. Bibb Graves.

Nearly 83 per cent of Alabama's total land area is suffering in some degree from soil erosion and almost a million acres has been ruined for practical farming.

Selma housewives have declared war on the state milk control bill which has been introduced in the Legislature by Rep. R. F. Hamner, of Dallas County.

The first of several new Civilian Conservation Corps camps in Alabama has been located in Butler County, Page S. Bunker, state forester, announced.

Pipe is being laid for the $20,000 Stevenson waterworks expansion program. The expansion is being financed by a Reconstruction Finance Corp. loan.

With some 5,000 Colbert school children taking part, in addition to many parents, the annual Field Day at Tuscumbia was a marked success in every way.

A colorful procession of speeches and festivities will form the 104th commencement exercises at the University of Alabama, May 26-28.

Smart Daytime Fashions of Lace

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A LACE epidemic is raging throughout the realm of fashion. You couldn't escape wearing lace if you would and you wouldn't if you could, not after you have seen the charming, smart and flattering apparel designers are creating of lace this season.

Not in all the centuries past has lace played so versatile a role as it is now playing. Fashion has decreed that we are not only to dine and to dance and attend functions of high degree clad in filmy, exquisitely patterned lace but we are to wear tailored lace in the daytime, go swimming in lace bathing suits, make our smartest sports clothes of lace tuned to the occasion and if we keep pace with the mode our lace-gloved hands will carry handbags of lace. The newest number on the summer program is the all-lace hat; also capes, jackets and evening wraps that are fashioned of lace.

The idea of lace used in a fabric way has been welcomed by designers as a new avenue of expression for their talents. The outstanding gesture of the moment is the shirtwaist dress which is tailored of fabriclike lace. It is smart in navy and other dark colors and it is adorable in the new pastels. We predict that the new season will not be far spent ere the majority of us will be going about in these flattering lace shirtwaist fashions. For a summer of travel and week-end visits a lace shirtwaist is ideal, for it packs without creasing or wrinkling and it looks smart wherever one goes in the daytime.

Lace has been shown in beautiful and striking creations at every Paris collection this season and our own American designers are equally as enthusiastic and exciting in their use of it. While lace is fashionable for every hour of the twenty-four, the big news about lace is its acceptance as a medium for practical daytime clothes.

One of the most distinctive daytime lace costumes of the Paris season is shown to the right in the illustration. It is a Martial et Armand creation in answer to the call for an ensemble that would be appropriate for the races without having to resort to a formal full-length gown. A beautiful pattern of ecru in cotton lace was selected to pose over black silk. Both the dress and jacket are made of this combination of black all-silk crepe and lace. The black crepe is used also for the belt which ties like a sash.

While the all-lace theme is vastly important, it is not any more so than is that of lace used in a trimming way. Lace edgings and trimmings cannot be left out even in tailored things. For instance Dilkusha tailors a blouse (pictured to the left) of navy blue linen using narrow white val lace on the sleeves and the cuffs and in rows up and down the front. In fact, all of the French designers are making voluminous use of val lace for trimming this season.

Speaking of lace sports fashions, you will be wanting one of the new jacket-wraps made of cotton lace in the color you like best. They are to be worn over your linen and pique frocks this summer.

GRAY IS MODISH

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Among best dressed followers of fashion gray is proving a favorite. Gray woolens fashioned into coats, suits and tailored street dresses make special appeal. The gray woolen dress here pictured is typical of the sort of costumes worn by the smart set. The stunning cape is lined with red woolen and is detachable, in that it buttons on to the sleeves.

Smart Sport Suits

Little tailored jackets with detail of pleats and fullness at the back in men's suiting, flannel or gabardine worn with odd skirts will constitute smart sports suits this spring.

Wrist Ruffles

Wrist ruffles are flaunting their graceful folds on some of the new and dressier blouses. They usually occur with jabots or ruffled collars.

NEW BLOUSES HAVE FEMININE ACCENTS

When considering blouses, remember they have gone feminine. Some of them are even made of chiffon. Soft lines, delicate colors, ruffles, all the typical feminine accents, make this season's styles.

For example, shirring is smart and new. Shirred collars, cuffs and pockets, shirred shoulders, even shirred sleeves, are among the most popular style notes. One of the smartest of these is shirred in black at the neckline, just as a peasant frock. But it doesn't stop there. Three rows of shirring are used to set the sleeves into the blouse.

Monograms to Be Popular With Maids This Season

The ultra-smart maid and matrons will bear labels this season.

Handsome monograms in the new modernistic letters are available for handbags and vanity cases.

There are brooches in beautifully-wrought metal or wood or rhinestones for scarfs and the lapels of tailored suits.

There are broad metal bracelets with an open side into which initials may be slipped, and a smart metal fob on the same principle. Even pull-on gloves are being lettered with small initials especially designed for gloves.

Celluous Tissue Fabrics All Glitter Like Metal

Wonders no end! The new "glass fabric" heralded earlier in the year has been duplicated in several celluous tissue fabrics for the style-right spring wardrobe.

The fabric is much like the tissue used in wrappings and has a mystifying effect when first seen. It is stiff as moire but very light in weight, it is durable, and glitters like metal cloth.

You'll find it in black, white and rainbow colors, and wear it in glamorous evening gowns, formal blouses and collar and cuff sets that lend a formal note to the street clothes for afternoon.

Lesson for May 19

BAPTISM

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 28:19, 20; Acts 8:26-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matthew 28:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When People Are Baptized.

JUNIOR TOPIC—When People Are Baptized.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Be Baptized?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of Baptism.

I. The Baptism of Jesus (Matt. 3:13-17).

1. His request of John (v. 13). This was in act, if not in word. He came from Galilee to Jordan to be baptized of John.

2. John's hesitancy (v. 14). He perceived something in Jesus which impressed him with the impropriety of such an act, even moving him to hinder the execution of his demand.

3. Jesus' explanation (v. 15). He insisted upon John's compliance on the ground that it was a method of fulfilling all righteousness.

4. The heavenly acknowledgment (vv. 16, 17). As Jesus emerged from the waters of the Jordan the heavens were opened, the Holy Spirit descended, and a voice from heaven declared, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

II. Jesus Enjoins Baptism (Matt. 28:19, 20).

In Christ's commission to the apostles he imposes the following obligations:

1. To teach, to make disciples of all the nations (v. 19). They were to make known to the world that Christ had died to save sinners and that God had committed to Jesus the redemption of the world.

2. To baptize those who believed (v. 19). This is the divinely appointed way of making a public confession of faith in Christ. This baptism is to be in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, indicating that the believer has been brought into definite relationship to each member of the holy Trinity.

3. To teach the disciples obedience. (v. 20). Profession is not enough. It must issue in obedience. This commission is preceded by the assurance of the divine authority of Jesus (v. 18). All authority was given him in heaven and earth and was followed by an all-sufficient promise (v. 20).

III. Baptism Practiced in the Early Church.

1. At Pentecost (Acts 2:38, 41). This was the first baptismal service in the Christian church. Multitudes were brought under conviction of sin as a result of the apostolic preaching and thousands were baptized. Baptism was administered in the name of Christ, which doubtless refers to the authority of Christ.

2. The Samaritans under the preaching of Philip (Acts 8:5-12). As a result of his preaching men and women believed on the Lord Jesus Christ. Their profession of faith was followed by baptism.

3. The eunuch (Acts 8:26-39). In the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch the Lord's work is seen broadening in its scope. The gospel was first preached to the Jews, then to the Samaritans who nationally were on the borderland between the Jews and the Gentiles. This Ethiopian was in all probability a Gentile, a proselyte to the Jewish faith. The Spirit of God called Philip away from the great work in Samaria and directed him to go near and join himself to the chariot of the Ethiopian treasurer. This providential meeting gave Philip the opportunity to preach to the Ethiopian. Philip preached to him Christ as the Savior, who through suffering and death saved from the guilt of sin. This resulted in the eunuch's request for baptism.

4. The baptism of Paul (Acts 9:18, 19). The great apostle to the Gentiles, before entering upon his work, received baptism at the hands of Ananias, who was not even himself a church official.

5. Cornelius and his household (Acts 10:47,48). When God would send the gospel upon its world-wide conquest, he providentially brought Peter and Cornelius together. Peter preached to Cornelius the sacrificial death of Christ for sin and his triumphant resurrection. Seeing the visitation of the divine Spirit upon the Gentiles, Peter proposed baptism.

IV. The True Meaning of Baptism (Rom. 6:1-14).

Water baptism symbolizes the identification of the believer with Jesus Christ in his death and resurrection. It is the outward sign of the inner experience.

Friendship

When I see leaves drop from their trees in the beginning of autumn, just such, think I, is the friendship of the world. Whilst the sap of maintenance lasts, my friends swarm in abundance; but in the winter of my need they leave me naked.—Warwick.

Adversity

I account it a part of unhappiness not to know adversity. I judge you to be miserable. There is no one more unhappy than he who never felt adversity.—Thomas Brooks.

Airplanes Enlisted for War on Locust Hordes

During the past nine years locust swarms have been devastating vast areas in Africa and western Asia, and since 1929 experts have been studying means of controlling the insects. Recently, at an international locust conference held in London, it was resolved that the locusts could be halted through the control of their breeding grounds, or, if they are already in migration, through their destruction in flight.

Agricultural development in Africa has been considerably impeded by the depredations of the locusts, which have caused losses of approximately $35,000,000. Investigations have now disclosed that each species of locust inhabits exclusively a definite zone of vegetation and that its migrations are governed by the seasons. Many of these breeding regions have now been located. The desert locust, for instance, is known to breed in the remote lands south of the Sahara and to migrate northward to the fertile Mediterranean coast of Africa.

Once the breeding areas have been found, the conference reports, the next step in control is to establish field stations where the life habits of the insects will be studied. Evidence already gathered tends to show that swarms form when the life cycles of solitary locusts are accelerated, causing a rapid multiplication of numbers.

As swarms gather preparatory to flight, if their migratory courses have been discovered as well as their breeding sources, it is then possible, recent experiments in Africa indicate, to destroy them with poison dust sprayed from airplanes. Locusts make no effort, it has been shown, to avoid a cloud of sodium arsenate dust blown across their line of flight. Nor does the passage of an airplane through or across their ranks deter them from the course.

Most of the locusts passing through the sodium arsenate eventually drop out of the swarm to their death, apparently because the inhalation of the dust brings on paralysis. The poison will remain fatal to a passing swarm for about three minutes. It must be discharged several times for large swarms and must be sprayed at a height of about 100 feet to avoid damage to crops.

And Then It Kicks

The public never knows what it wants until it gets it.

Overcame Her Nervousness

"A few years ago," writes Mrs. Charles Sivil, of Hartshorne, Okla., "I was weak and run-down. It seemed that nervousness was about to get the best of me. My mother told me about Cardui and that is what I decided to take. After I began taking Cardui, my appetite was better. I gained strength and was less nervous. By the time I had taken two bottles, I felt fine."

First, better appetite, and then more strength and a feeling of well-being! Thousands of women testify Cardui benefited them. If it does not benefit YOU, consult a physician.

54% MORE TREAD RUBBER
IN NEW GROUND GRIP TRACTOR TIRE
TO GIVE GREATEST TRACTION FOR EVERY FARM NEED

IF YOU are using a tractor with steel lug wheels, change over now to Firestone Ground Grip Tires. If you are ordering new equipment, specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires on your new tractor.

Look at this amazing Super Traction Low Pressure Tire illustrated at the right, and read the many advantages over steel lug wheels.

Firestone has constantly been the pioneer and leader in the development of balloon tires for farm equipment, and today 54% more rubber is used in the deeper, wider, flatter, self-cleaning tread, with higher, more rugged shoulders.

This thicker tread is held securely to the tire body because of the patented Firestone construction feature of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords directly under the tread. This binds the Gum-Dipped cord body and the more rugged tread together in one inseparable unit.

Call on the nearest Firestone Service Store, Firestone Tire Dealer or Implement Dealer today. Find out about the easy payment plan for equipping your tractor, truck or car with these new Ground Grip Tires that give you Super Traction for every farm need.

Remember! This heavy, Super-Traction tread is guaranteed not to loosen from the tire body under any conditions, and all other parts of the tire are fully guaranteed to give satisfaction.

KINGDOM NEWS

The observance of the second annual home-coming was held at Antioch Church on last Sunday and was well attended, not only by people of the community, but many living in other counties and towns came "back home" for the day. After a program of duets, solos and recitations a splendid sermon was ably delivered to a large congregation by Rev. Judson Jones of Howard College. At the noon hour dinner was generously served on the church lawn and many old friends and relatives were seen greeting one another and talking over old times. For the afternoon, more singing, readings, and special tributes to mother with a brief address by Rev. E. E. Wells, bringing the day to a close. Many who came from other counties left the church yard after the services closed declaring their intention to come again next year.

THE WEEKLY BLAH

By BILL SIMS

Just a word of comment on the loads of chain letters that have infested our fair community, and gotten into our hair for the past week. Without a doubt, all of us have received one of these missles from some deah fran whom we have never heard of, and who probably lives way up in OshKosh, and all they want us to do is just keep the ball rolling. That boys and girls, will bring prosperity back. Yow-sah.

We notice that a lot of cement is being slung up and down the various streets, which naturally tends to beautify our village, but take it from me, the several couples who are that way about each other, will have a more scenic and extended stoll on pretty moonlit evenings, nice isn't it?

We want to invite everyone to come over and witness the champion checker players of the century each afternoon after lunch. These heros of the red and black squares meet under the village magnolia tree, and here they play until the game is called on account of darkness.

From here, there and yonder come reports of our baseball team who have played recently in several neighboring borroughs. We should all support this energetic bunch of boys who promise to offer you real baseball. Remember every Thursday afternoon, bring your own popcorn and peanuts, and we'll help you eat 'em. Speaking of baseball, those present enjoyed the four-ring circus furnished by radio station WBRC, who recently sent their peppy first-string men down to these parts to get beaten. This column would like to suggest a full course in gymnastics, you know in order to reduce several of their men back into youthful form once again.

As everyone knows we only have a week and half up at school and then vacations. Consequently the coming of vacations bring final examinations and all that sort of thing, so we have been busy. Of course last Friday the Senior play was exposed to the audience, and if I do say it myself, I believe it went over O. K. Thanx to Miss Souders for marvelous directions and untiring help. We would like to apoligize for the unnecessary noise that prevailed during the first act, but you will have to understand that the play was given to the public, naturally such an undertaking has to cater to all classes of people. We regret that better sportsmanship was lacking.

Now if you will excuse me, I'll be back in a week with a scorcher, until then I remain your Democratic correspondent who just found out that the Junior II Class is to entertain the quituators with a feed tonight. I know you wouldn't want me to miss my first free meal. So I'll be thar when soup's on.

EGG A DAY WILL KEEP COLDS AWAY, PROFESSORS SAY

NEW YORK, N. Y.—An egg a day will improve chillren's resistance to colds, two Columbia University nutrition experts said Sunday.

Dr. Mary Swartz Rose, professor of nutrition, and Miss Gertrude M. Borgeson, research associate, said their experiments had punctured the old-fashioned idea that eggs are too rich for everyday consumption of young chillren.

An egg a day is not only a good "protection" against colds, they said it also will "induce a significant improvement in longevity."

Their conclusions are based on experiments with 60 children two to six years old in a nursery for two years. Dividing the children into two groups, an egg-a-day and a no-egg group, Dr. Rose said that egg-a-day children proved superior in resistence to colds anl general well-being.

Capstone Requires Higher Grade Tests

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — Students entering the University of Alabama in or after September, 1935, will find it harder to graduate with a Bachelor of Arts degree. The University has tightened up requirements, according to a new ruling in the current catalogue.

Effective next session, the university is adopting the quality point system of grading. Though the passing grade for undergraduates is "D" (60-69), an average of "C" will be required for graduation.

According to the new system, a student may complete the number of hours required for his degree but he will have to pursue additional courses if he lacks the necessary quality points.

Students entering before September, 1935, will be allowed to graduate under the old system.

Student Body Urges Napier's Promotion

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Copies of resolutions signed by practically the entire Alabama College student body urging the appointment of Dean T. H. Napier as president of the college to succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael, resigned, May 18 had been sent to Governor Graves and the school's board of trustees.

Dr. Carmichael recently accepted the position of dean of the graduate school and senior college of Vanderbilt University. Several alumnae chapters of the college already have adopted resolutions urging Dr. Napier's promotion.

Total Collected, $231.21. Percentage sent to State and National Association, $57.50. Supplies and postage (including seals, stationary, posters), $15.59. Total paid out, $73,39. Balance, $157.83.

At a meeting called by Seal Sale Chairman, Mrs. M. P. Jeter, which was held in Montevallo in March, Dr. H. T. Donovan, County Health Officer, was invited to meet with the committee and assist in plans for using the money to best advantage in Shelby County, built around educational program in early diagnosis campaign during the year. A picture machine for use in giving illustrated lectures was decided upon, and Dr. Donovan was instructed to purchase the machine which he stated would cost about $50.00.

This machine will last for years, with purchase of additional pictures when necessary, at small cost.

The American Legion Auxiliary of the County, who sponsored the sale of Xmas Seals, wish to express their appreciation again, to all who made it possible to increase their sale this year from $38.00 for last year to $221.00 for this year, gaining special recognition from the State Tuberculosis Association.

UNIFORM GAS TAX BILLS PREDICTED TO BE SUCCESSFUL

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Both of the Reynolds Uniform Gasoline Tax bills have been favorably reported and will go to the House calendar for passage on the next Legislative day.

The measure creating what is in effect a gasoline tax code for municipalities was approved by the Ways anl Means Committee and the proposed constitutional amendment to prevent future local gas taxes was also favorably acted upon, without an opposing vote.

Alabama has wider variation in gasoline taxation than any other State, because of its numerous special local acts and ordinances. Only six states permit local taxation of motor fuel and Alabama is the only one that appears to be drifting into unrestricted local taxation of this character.

The immediate passage of the Reynolds bills is being urged by the Gasoline Division of the State Tax Commission to avoid confusion and effect a more equitable distribution of the gasoline tax funds.

A popular feature of the bill is that which provides for the "distribution of the tax to all incorporated municipalities where the tax is collected in the corporate limits and police jurisdictions of such municipalities; and that the balance collected in the county, go to the 67 counties in equal shares each month as the tax is collected." Representative J. B. Reynolds, of Ozark, author of the two bills, has been assured by Capitol leaders that this needed legislation will be adopted and approved by the Governor.

TEMPERATURE HAS NO EFFECT ON COLD

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—No matter how much cold and rainy weather a person is exposed to, he will not catch a cold unless he is infected by a coid germ caught from another individual, Prof. Wilson G. Smillie of the Harvard University School of Public Health revealed in an address here May 18th.

Speaking at the annual meeting of the Associated Harvard Clubs, Professor Smillie described four Harvard expeditions to isolated communities for the purpose of studying the common cold.

The investigations were conducted at Stevenson's "Treasure Island," which is St. John's in the Virgin Islands; at a Hudson Bay trading post on the Northwest River in Labrador; at Spitsbergen, northernmost permanent settlement in the world, and at Happy Hollow, on the Patsiliga River in Southern Alabama.

Head Is Re-Elected Boy Scout President

CHICAGO, Ill.—Walter W. Head of St. Louis, was re-elected president of the Boy Scouts of America for the tenth time at the final meeting of the National Executive Council. President Roosevelt was re-elected honorary president.

'WEAR A POPPY' ON SATURDAY, MAY 25

"Wear a poppy". This request will be made of all of us on Poppy Day, Saturday, May 25th, and who, understanding the significance of the little red flower, can refuse?

The poppy is the flower that gave the only touch of life and beauty to the World War battle fields and cemeteries. It is the flower of the war lead, those gallant young men who gave their lives in the country's service, and we are asked to wear it in their memory.

When obtaining our poppy, we are asked, too, to make a contribution for the welfare of the disabled World War veterans, the widows and the children left fatherless by the war. None of us with a dime to our names and a touch of human kindness in our hearts can refuse this request, either. We can only honor the dead, but those living victims of the war are still with us. We can still help them.

The Poppy Day requests will be made to us by the women of the American Legion Auxiliary, the wives, mothers, sisters and daughters of men who served in the war. They have had the poppies made for us by needy and disabled veterans, vroviding employment for hundrels unable to do other work. They will take the contributions we make and, with understanding and sympathy, turn every penny to the service of war disabled and dependents.

Yes, we will "wear a poppy" proudly and gladly. We have not forgotten and we are not ungrateful. For one day this blood-red symbol of highest patriotic sacrifice will blaze on our coats, and our coins will be given to help through the coming year those who are living a life of suffering and sacrifice because of service to the nation.

WORRY IS BLAMED FOR HOST OF ILLS AND EARLY DEATH

Register In Chancery 7-6-35

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The kind of worry that puts many persons in hospitals, even gives them angina pectoris pains and sometimes hastens death, was analyzed for the American Psychiatric Association last Friday by H. Flanders Dunbar, of Columbia University School of Medicine.

Dr. Dunbar told how the emotions retard recovery from broken bones and heart troubles. Her cases, the beginning of a study of effects of wirry on all diseases, were designed to investigate a belief among psychiatrists that many hospital beds are occupied by persons who would have been perfectly well long ago if their worries had been taken into account during convalescence.

She told of a woman who had been an invalid for 18 years, with high blood pressure, angina pectoris, severe palpitation and indigestion.

The woman also suffered from emotional upset due to ambition for success and to an unhappy marriage. The doctor said that under medical advice she mastered her emotions, her blood pressure dropped, indigestion disappeared and heart pains eased although the angina pectoris was still present.

CHAIRMAN WOOD EXPLAINS BETTER HOUSING PROGRAM

Mrs. Lida Wood, Columbiana Chairman, explans the Better Housing Program:

The National Housing Act is a financing plan to molernize your property.

It was designed to help people improve their property and increase its value and usefulness through one of the simplest and most reasonable systems of financing ever devised.

The act makes it possible for home owners to make delayed repairs and provide better surroundings for the family.

The Better Housing Program has oiled the credit machinery, it has set the wheels in motion. The keynote in the credit jam which has been holding back the building industry was removed by the National Housing Act, signed by the President, June 27th, 1934.

Millions of dollars in idle capital are now available throughout the whole country for repairs, replacement, improvements to homes and business property. This money is not government money, nor emergency, distress nor relief money. It is government insured private capital, released by local financing institutions, for the benefit of private enterprise.

For several years past, homes all over America have been steadily going down hill, many property owners have been unable to pay for normal repairs and upkeep.

Wise building improvements increase the selling value of your property. Timely repairs forestall more costly repairs later on. Many property owners have been unable to pay for normal repairs and upkeep. A far greater number have delayed the larger improvements which means better housing and better living.

Improvement on your property indirectly benefits the whole community by employing men an creating a demand for materials. When you improve business or home property, others are impaired to do likewise. When neighborhood standards are raised, your property naturally becomes more valuable.

The Federal Housing Administration makes no loans to the public, and cannot deal with distress conditions. It insures loans made by private lending agencies for the purpose of modernization of all types of buildings.

The success of the Better Housing Program and the amount of business it brings to us must depend on the cooperation and effort of the people.

For further particulars, see Mrs. Lida Wood, Columbiana Chairman.

Thinning of Fruit Protects The Trees

AUBURN, Ala. — Thinning overloaded peach and apple trees will avoid the breaking of trees and increase the size of the fruits, advises Julian Brown, extension horticulturist, stating that the fruits should appear 4 to 6 inches apart.

"Thin after the 'June drop', which usually occurs in May," he advises. "Thin by hand-picking and not by shaking or frailing the tree."

PIE, CREAM SUPPER AT OLD CHAPEL, MAY 25TH

There will be a combination pie and cream supper at Old Chapel Church, Saturday night, May 25, for the benefit of the church. At this time, a beautiful quilt made by the ladies will be given away. Everyone come with plenty of money and aid so worthy a cause. (Signed)

COMMITTEE.

COUNTY AGENTS TO BE USED IN WORK RELIEF PROGRAM

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Use of the hundreds of county farm agents throughout the country in helping decide where the remaining three-quarters of the $4,000,000,000 work relief fund shall go was planned by administration officials last Sunday.

The special job listed for these workers was cooperation with the Rural Resettlement and Rural Electrification Administrations, which are slatel to spend nearly $500,000,000.

In a recent conference with Morris L. Cooke, head of the electrification program, agriculture officials were understood to have agreed that agricultural engineers will promote an interest in electrification among farmers and determine whether potential electricity uses warrant various projects.

This new development in the big works machinery occurred as officials determination of the wages to be paid jobless getting work on the $1,091,000,000 of recommended projects heaped on his desk. Whether protests of organized labor would force a revision in tentative plans for a 30 per cent reduction in prevailing wage levels was a secret closely guarded by Harry L. Hopkins, head of the progress division.

Other Questions Listed

Other questions to which answers were sought included:

How many of the 1,000 000 farm families on relief or receiving loans are to be given work. What can be done about unskilled labor in large cities and mining areas where insufficient construction projects are available.

How can cities able to pay for part of their projects be induced to do so instead of demanding that the federal government bear the entire cost?

What will be the attitude of the unemployed not on relief who do not get jobs?

Well-informed quarters said comparatively few additional projects would be approved until these problems are solved.

Work relief officials said the bulk of new projects had not started through the intricate machinery which links 60 government agencies.

Projects Told

With a few exceptions, they said, the projects approved by the advisory allotments committee for a share in the $4,000,000,000 were old projects which government engineers had approved some time ago.

Assistants to Frank C. Walker, head of the Applications and Information Division, expressed hope his organization—the "control room" of the new works machinery—would be completed and operating smoothly "before the week ends."

A check among some of the 60 agencies which must review projects, revealed they had seen "few plans."

But the "correspondence section" which Walker has set up, reported arrival of "four to six mail sacks" of projects and queries each day. A battery of stenographers guided by 10 form letters was attempting to answer this flood of requests.

Already Walker's organization has expanded into four different buildings in less than a month. Executive offices now occupy four floors of a downtown bank building.

President Stirs Wrath by Calling Critics of AAA "Liars"—Senate Votes NRA Only Brief and Restricted Life.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© by Western Newspaper Union.

FOUR thousand farmers, gathered from all parts of the country, invaded Washington and told President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace that they were enthusiastic believers in the efficiency of the AAA program and supporters of the amendments which the administration asks congress to make in the agricultural adjustment act. Mr. Roosevelt addressed, from the south portico of the White House, what he called a "surprise party," and prefaced his remarks with the statement that "a great many of the high and mighty" have been deliberately trying to mislead many people by "lying about the kind of a farm program under which this nation is operating." He went on to deny emphatically that the government has "wastefully destroyed food in any form."

Sen. Hastings

Next day many of the visiting farmers were in the senate gallery and heard Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware, Republican, score the President for characterizing critics of the AAA program as liars. The senator said:

"In his radio speech of April 28, the President urged his audience to 'feel free to criticize.' He invites criticism and then shows that he 'can't take it.' We who have criticized the New Deal were earlier called 'tories,' 'traitors,' 'whiners,' 'chiselers,' etc., but now we are called 'liars,' and everybody understands just what that means, and it comes with little dignity from a man who holds the high position of President of the United States.

"But I want to say that if this term is applied to all of those persons who have criticized the New Deal, we have developed the greatest crop of 'liars' within the last six months ever found in any country."

Senator Hastings then introduced a resolution calling upon the secretary of agriculture to submit all correspondence between the department and the visiting farmers, together with any instructions sent out to county agents with a view of producing the "spontaneous" visitation. Mr. Hastings also demanded to know how the delegates were selected and what financial assistance "directly or indirectly" was extended to them by the agricultural officials.

Over in the house Representative Fish of New York started a lively debate on the same topic, and he was even more outspoken than Mr. Hastings, saying:

"Confused and confounded by the marked swing away from the unsound and Socialistic New Deal policies, the President lost his head—and that is the mildest term that can be applied—when he called his critics liars."

There were plenty of defenders of the President and Secretary Wallace in both chambers.

BY ADOPTING the resolution of Senator Bennett C. Clark of Missouri, Democrat, the senate gave the NRA life only until April 1, 1936, and considerably curtailed its powers. The expressed wishes of the President and NRA Chairman Donald Richberg for a two year extension with enlarged powers were ignored. The changes called for in the Clark resolution provide for prohibiting inclusion of business firms engaged wholly in intrastate commerce under NRA codes or regulations; banning price fixing except in mineral resource industries, and directing the President to revise all codes within thirty days to conform to the provisions of the resolution. Majority leaders in the house were prepared to fight for the two year extension, but admitted the Clark resolution was likely to prevail there also. In that case, in the opinion of many observers, the NRA will be practically dead.

Senator Clark

While the senate was debating the matter, Mr. Richberg told a mass-meeting of NRA workers that the Clark resolution was "complete folly." This aroused the Missourian to wrath. He called it "the most brazen exhibition of impudence on the part of a bureaucratic official which has fallen under my observation during my lifetime," and next day, in a set speech, he told his fellow senators at length just what he thought of Mr. Richberg and "his ambition to be a Mussolini in the United States."

An organization called the Industry and business committee for NRA extension was called into action, as were the farmers for AAA, and its head, Ward Cheney, silk manufacturer, announced that a meeting of delegations of industries would be held in Washington May 22.

SENATOR HUEY LONG'S resolution for an investigation of Postmaster General Farley was rejected by a vote of 62 to 20, the "Kingfish" being the only Democrat recorded in favor of it.

The senate then passed the Norris amendments to the Tennessee Valley Authority act, increasing the TVA's bonding authorization from fifty to one hundred million dollars and protecting its electric power activities from court interference.

Next on the senate program was the Wagner labor relations board bill which its author declared was "responsive to the ominous industrial disturbances of last summer when blood ran freely in the streets and martial law was in the offing."

After several amendments designed to limit the power the measure inferentially gives the American Federation of Labor had been rejected, the bill was shoved through by a vote of 63 to 12.

RURAL electrification administration, one of the new divisions of the works relief program, was established by President Roosevelt in an executive order, and Morris L. Cooke, a Philadelphia engineer, was appointed to be its chief. The sum of $75,000 was allotted for its administrative expenses, and allocations are to be made later for authorized individual projects.

M. L. Cooke

The executive order described the duties and functions of the new unit as "to initiate, formulate, administer and supervise a program of approved projects with respect to the generation, transmission and distribution of electrical energy in rural areas."

The order permits the administrator to acquire by purchase or by the power of eminent domain any real property or any interest therein and improve, develop, grant, sell, lease or otherwise dispose of any such property.

CONGRESSMAN MICHAEL L. IGOE of Illinois was appointed United States district attorney for Chicago and immediately confirmed by the senate—and thus Senator James Hamilton Lewis scored one on Secretary of the Interior Ickes, who had hoped for the naming of a man of his own choosing so as to strengthen his position in Chicago politics. Mr. Igoe temporarily lost his standing in the Democratic party when he sought the Illinois gubernatorial nomination which went to Judge Horner; but through the good offices of Senator Lewis he was restored and was elected congressman-at-large last fall.

BY A vote of about 2 to 1 the striking workers in the Toledo Chevrolet plant decided to accept a compromise offer that had been fixed up by federal labor committeemen, A. F. of L. leaders, company officials and federal mediators. It was expected that this would result in the return to work of 35,000 men in Toledo and other motor car manufacturing centers. The strike in Toledo was engineered by the local union and really was not in accord with A. F. of L. plans.

DENNIS CHAVEZ, who contended that he really defeated Bronson M. Cutting in the election of a United States senator from New Mexico last year, now has Mr. Cutting's seat in the senate. Following the senator's death in an airplane crash, Mr. Chavez was appointed by Gov. Clyde Tingley to fill the vacancy. He will hold office until the next general election in November, 1936, when a successor will be elected, and it is likely Mr. Chavez will again be chosen.

Dennis Chavez

The new senator, who is the head of the Democratic party in New Mexico, was born in that state 47 years ago. While serving as a senate clerk he attended Georgetown university law school and after returning to Albuquerque to practice law he was elected to the state legislature. In 1930 he was elected New Mexico's one representative in the national house and was re-elected in 1932. He resigned in 1934 to oppose Cutting in the senatorial race and was defeated by about 1,000 votes.

PIERRE LAVAL, French foreign minister, held important conversations in Moscow with Dictator Stalin and other high Soviet officials, and the result, according to a joint communique, is that France and Russia will unite in an effort to bring Germany and Poland into a general pact of nonaggression to insure peace in eastern Europe. Both governments will open diplomatic negotiations to this end.

The communique declared that neither country will allow its "means of national defense to weaken in the slightest degree," although preservation of the peace is a primary duty of both countries.

EVERYONE who knew anything about the matter knew long ago that the "Protocols of the Elders of Zion" were a fraud, and now a Swiss court has declared them "false and obvious plagiarism" and fined two Swiss Nazis for circulating them. The court said it was definitely established that the protocols were copied or plagiarized from Maurice Joly's "Dialogues in Hell," which appeared in 1864 and was a vile attack on the despotism of Napoleon III. The object of the suit, brought by Jewish leaders in Switzerland, was to vindicate world Jewry by proving the falsity of the protocols which professional anti-Semites everywhere had been using to excite hostility against Jews.

REAR ADMIRAL RICHARD EVELYN BYRD and members of his South Polar expedition came sailing home at last on their ship Bear of Oakland and were given the warmest kind of a welcome in Washington by President Roosevelt, Secretary of the Navy Swanson, other officials and a host of their relations and personal friends. The admiral and Mrs. Byrd spent a night in the White House. Then he was joined by his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Bolling Byrd, and his four children, and the family party left for the Byrd home at Winchester, Va. The Bear of Oakland and the Jacob Ruppert, supply ship of the expedition, departed from the Washington navy yard for Boston, the admiral planning to board the Ruppert en route.

Admiral Byrd

Admiral Byrd has plenty of work ahead, with the mass of data gathered in the Antarctic, a book to be written and a lecture tour to be made, but his plans for the immediate future were uncertain.

ETHIOPIA'S government renewed its demand that arbitrators be named to settle the disputes between that country and Italy, as provided in a treaty, and Great Britain and France were reported to be trying earnestly to persuade Italy to a peaceful course. Unless settlement of all differences is assured at the League of Nations council meeting May 20, or if more Italian troops are sent to the Ethiopian border, Emperor Haile Selassie will mobilize his warriors.

Foreign residents of Addis Ababa said they were ignorant of any war preparations by Ethiopia, and that there had been no troops or munitions concentrations or censorship on travel. This contradicted a story in a Rome newspaper to the effect that great quantities of munitions had been shipped into Ethiopia and were being concentrated, along with thousands of troops, near the borders of Italian Somaliland and Eritrea.

Premier Mussolini, in a speech in the Italian senate, warned all other nations not to interfere in the Italo-Ethiopian quarrel, declaring that no nation but Italy "can be the judge in this most delicate matter." He denied that Great Britain and France had taken diplomatic steps to avert the threatened conflict and said those nations need not fear that Italy would be weakened in Europe by the sending of thousands of troops to Africa.

"We shall maintain under arms for all the time necessary," he declared, "the three classes of 1911, 1913 and 1914. Moreover, another class, that of 1912, is in reserve and ready."

RIGID censorship, such as would be imposed in war time, shrouded the American fleet's tactical operations in the Pacific, but was relaxed enough for the announcement of two unfortunate occurrences. While destroyers were leading larger vessels through an "enemy" network of submarines the Lea smashed into the Sicard, tearing a big hole in her side. Richard Chadwick, second class gunner's mate on the Sicard, was killed and three other men were slightly injured, official records stated.

Commander E. W. Tod.

Lieut. Mathias B. Wyatt of San Diego, a graduate of the naval academy, was piloting one of eighteen fighting planes which took off from the aircraft carrier Saratoga 200 miles east of Honolulu to ward off an attack of "enemy" submarines. His plane was caught in the slipstream from another and fell into water three miles deep. No trace of him or his ship was found.

In connection with the maneuvers the greatest interest was in the mass flight of forty-three planes from the Pearl Harbor naval base westward, presumably to Midway islands. They were under the command of Commander E. W. Tod, U. S. N., and for the time being all that the public was permitted to know was that they reached their secret destination safely and were "executing their missions."

COMPLICATIONS in the already precarious European situation were expected to result from the death of Marshal Josef Pilsudski, the virtual dictator of Poland. The "father of his country" succumbed to cancer of the stomach in Warsaw and his death was a great shock to the Poles for the serious nature of his affliction had been concealed from the public.

The government announced it would continue to function as though Pilsudski were alive. The authority of the dictator, it said, has passed to his lifelong friends, President Ignace Moscicki, Premier Slawek, Foreign Minister Beck and Gen. Edward Rydz-Smighly.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—Now it can be told—who started the depression and why!

It was Australia, many months before our stock market crash, and the why is that a change in fashions played hob with Australia's exports of wool, for the simple reason that women stopped wearing so many woollen garments and men began wearing lighter clothes.

Whereupon, nearly every one in Australia being "poor," and the balance of trade against Australia reaching frightening proportions, Australia clamped on drastic restrictions against imports, especially leveled against automobiles and trucks.

Which, added to the fact that up to then Australia had been the largest single purchaser of American-made automobiles and trucks, knocked over the first card of a distressingly long pile, and each successive falling card knocked over the next one.

All of which, of course, is not really intended to convince anyone that Australia really started the depression, or that the present impasse on world trade would not have resulted if there had been no Australia, but is a highly illuminating telescopic view of the world situation reduced to an easily understandable formula.

It is particularly appropriate at the moment in view of the hubbub up over the alleged statement of President Roosevelt that foreign trade is a thing of the past, to which Senator A. H. Vandenberg paid so much attention in the senate.

It is also appropriate with Italy and Poland just having restricted imports of American automobiles, machinery and many other products to one-fourth of the 1934 figures.

Look at the Record

Without attempting to place Australia in the prisoner's dock, therefore, let's look at the record. The big commonwealth "down under" made these restrictions well in advance of the beginning of the depression here. The date of this beginning in America is hotly disputed, but most economists agree that the stock market crash of October, 1929, was merely the result of a collapse in business, which was already well under way before most business men—even those engaged in the industries hardest hit—appreciated it. Nearly every one thought it was just a temporary dip in the production curve. They had heard cries of "Wolf! Wolf!" a dozen times before during the Coolidge administration, but had seen business march on to higher levels later, with stock market prices continually climbing as a result.

But when Australia stopped buying American motors and trucks the avalanche started, though no one thought for the time that it was more than a pebble rolling downhill. For the drying up of motor manufacturing, with its cutting down of buying from steel plants, tire factories, battery makers, upholstery weavers, etc., was well under way by July, 1929, three months before the stock market dive.

What brings all this up for consideration in Washington at the moment is that several very important persons, some from Europe and some from other parts of the world, including Australia, have been in our midst for the last few days, and have been trying to figure out how to end the present international trade stalemate.

Nearly every one agrees that if some nation would just start the upward push, as some think Australia started the downward drive, the world could work out of the present doldrums. But how to get started? Naturally the visitors with one accord say that the United States is the nation to start it. The British say that we should reduce our tariff on textiles, whereupon they would buy more of our cotton, etc. That gets a loud laugh, though with no mirth, in New England, not to mention North Carolina. But it illustrates the difficulty of applying a self starter!

Old Problem Up Again

The old long and short haul railroad rate controversy is due for another airing. This time the subject will be brought up in an effort to help the struggling railroads. Chairman Rayburn, of the house interstate and foreign commerce committee, proposes to try to remove one of the restrictions in the present law which has irked the railroads considerably.

This is the provision that if a through rate is made, which happens to be less than the rate for part of the same distance, the cheaper through rate must be compensatory. Or in short that the railroad must make a profit at the lower rate.

At first blush it would seem that the railroads would have no objection to such a provision. But they have—plenty. Their chief objection is that the Interstate Commerce commission, worrying about this injunction, has been very slow about approving any cheap through rates. It was said, time and again, to some railroad seeking to put one in, that obviously there could be no profit in such a rate, so there was no use considering it.

Whereas, the railroad company involved might be perfectly sure that there would be more dollars in its treasury at the end of any given period if it were allowed to make that rate, whether it could prove that the particular rate would yield a profit on the particular shipments made under it or not.

The point is that it is next to impossible for a railroad to figure whether it makes the profit on any particular shipment. It knows where it stands, within reason, on its entire business. But it is very difficult to break the thing down the way mathematicians would like. For it is not a question of subtracting the cost of an item from the selling price, deducting handling charges, and figuring the profit, as it would be in a retail store.

How it Works

In fact, railroading is almost at the other extreme from a retail store when it comes to figuring what should be charged the customers. To consider a specific case of how this long and short haul thing works, take the three cities of Pittsburgh, Youngstown and Chicago. The Baltimore and Ohio might consider it good business to make a rate from Chicago through to Pittsburgh cheaper than from Chicago to Youngstown, though its trains from Chicago to Pittsburgh pass through Youngstown.

If by this lower rate to Pittsburgh a large number of cars loaded with freight should be added to each train, there would be no doubt about it. For it costs very little more to haul a train of 100 freight cars than a train of 80 cars. Or to haul a train of 50 cars than a train of 40 cars. Even the fuel cost of the trip is not raised anything like proportionately by the additional cars. Whereas, the labor cost is rarely advanced an amount worth considering.

But the law does not take cognizance of this factor. It says that the lower rate must be compensatory. And the I. C. C. has been holding that this means there must be a profit, which can be demonstrated, at the low rate. And this is a hurdle which the railroads have not been able to take.

Especially as the intermediate towns always raise cain, send delegations from their chambers of commerce, and bear down on their congressmen to get into the picture and do something. As Youngstown probably would in the case cited.

But there is a strong disposition on the part of the administration to do something for the railroads, complicated by the fact that it is very difficult to figure out what to do. It is that desire which makes bus and truck regulations probable.

New Trade Treaties

Trade treaties with Sweden, the Netherlands, Switzerland, and Spain are almost ready. This is the answer to the erroneous statement that the publication of the sensational George N. Peek report proved President Roosevelt was now siding with him in his row with Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

As a matter of fact, on the very date on which the Peek report was made public the President passed on some details with respect to the proposed treaty with Sweden, indicating his general approval of the Hull policy.

Whereas, when asked for comment by newspaper men a few days before the Peek report—in their hands for release later—was printed, the President smiled it off, saying that not even the author could vouch for all the figures!

American match interests have been terribly concerned over this Swedish treaty. Again Japan, the chief target of the protesting textile interests, figures. True, it is the general impression that Japanese matches, like Japanese light bulbs, are not as good as those made in this country, but cut prices spell trouble for better goods, many a time, as every merchant knows to his sorrow.

Now Japan would like nothing better than for the United States and Sweden, in their negotiations for the reciprocal trade treaty, to agree to reduce the American duty on matches. For under the "most favored nation" clause Japanese matches at once would get just as much benefit as Swedish matches.

America is the promised land of match manufacturers all over the world. It is virtually the only country where matches are not either a government monopoly or taxed out of all reason. It is often said that matches are free in America. Due to the advertising possibilities of the packages, this has almost been true, though all the indications are that this era may be drawing to a close, beginning with a small federal tax on matches in the last revenue bill.

Match Market Limited

So rich in revenue is the match in most foreign countries that there is a tax on lighters. In fact it is sometimes said that the only public lighter in all France is the one in the lobby of the chamber of deputies!

Obviously the match market of the world is very sharply limited by these artificial restrictions. Just as the cigarette market is restricted by governments anxious for a big revenue.

Experts say that American cigarette manufacturers would drive all others in the world out of business if artificial barriers were removed. But also that the Swedes and the Japs, the first on quality (though they are not as good as American matches) and the second on price, would capture the match market if artificial barriers were eliminated.

Sweden is hanging up a bit of tempting bait to American negotiators, however. She promises that she will reduce duties and restrictions, which would result in the Swedes consuming vastly larger quantities of American fruit and other farm products. Now the agricultural vote that would be interested in this new market is very large. Whereas the vote interested in match production is rather small. All of which indicates that the concessions Sweden wants will be made.

U. S. "SPY" COUPLE FREED BY FRANCE; HELPED NAB AIDS

Twelve Confederates Are Given Jail Sentences on Switzes' Testimony.

Paris.—Two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gordon Switz of East Orange, N. J., were freed after France's most sensational spy trial in recent history, but their testimony sent twelve confederates to prison or exile.

Worn out by twenty-eight months in jail, the Switzes were released under article 10 of the espionage act, which provides liberty for those giving information useful to the state, even though convicted of spying.

Mme. Bercowitz, Mme. Lacoste, Mr. and Mrs. Douchan Narandzitch, Vatroslaw Reich and Moise Salman were acquitted. Salman's wife, an interpreter at the ministry of marine, was sentenced to three years in prison and fined 3,000 francs.

Mme. Mermet and Mme. Salman each gave birth to babies, whose wails punctuated the trial.

Plenty of Money.

The Switzes, after the trial, appeared to have plenty of money. Switz is a graduate of Princeton and a capable pilot. Mrs. Switz was graduated from Vassar.

Switz said:

"I am happy that everything has ended just as it has. I was disgusted with the cheap politics and war maneuvers of the Soviets and the mercenary attitude of the spies with whom we associated."

Other sentences imposed by Judge Benon were:

Benjamin Bercovitz, Rumanian, paymaster for the spies; five years' imprisonment, five years' exile, 3,000 francs fine.

Colonel Dumoulin, retired army officer, five years' imprisonment, five years' exile, 3,000 francs,

Jean Aubry, French engineer, four years' imprisonment, 2,000 francs. His wife, two years' imprisonment, 500 francs.

Riva Davidovici, woman dentist, two years' imprisonment, 1,000 francs.

Woman "Brains."

Marie Mermet, school teacher, three years, 3,000 francs.

Louis Martin, government interpreter, five years' imprisonment, five years' exile. He was convicted of "indiscretions" only.

Lydia Stahl, a Russian, former student of Columbia university, regarded as the "brains" of the ring, was sentenced to five years and fined 3,000 francs.

Switz' extreme nervousness at the last sessions of the trial have been ascribed partly to the knowledge that by breaking down and revealing his gang's activities he had lost the affection of his more iron-willed wife, who became known as hard-boiled Marjorie to the French police.

North Carolina Tract to Be Wild Fowl Refuge

Washington.—An executive order recently set aside a 50,000-acre tract of land as the Lake Mattamuskeet Wildlife refuge in Hyde county, North Carolina, for restoration of waterfowl under the bureau of biological survey program.

Drainage operations were started on the lake, a shallow body of water 12 miles long and seven miles wide, several years ago. They proved unsuccessful, however, and the new program will restore to waterfowl one of the best resting and feeding areas on the Atlantic coast.

The government is purchasing the lake bed with funds provided by the FERA for the retirement of submarginal lands. It is expected that the lake will restore itself naturally.

Fire Chief "Operates" on Hen Neck With Penknife

Painesville, Ohio.—Fire Chief Lee J. Elliott turned "surgeon" when he performed a successful operation on a chicken's neck.

Elliott had asked his wife for needle and thread. Curious, she followed him to the chicken house. There Elliott caught a sick young hen, tied her feet, then deftly with his pocket knife split her throat. Carefully he removed a small wad of straw that had lodged in the crop, then sewed the wound shut.

Just as the chief finished, a fire call sent him scurrying. The hen clucked contentment and walked off.

Stopped Three Times for Stealing Own Car

Lawrence, Mass.—Samuel Goldstein proudly showed the new automobile he had just purchased to some friends, then went into a restaurant for lunch. The friends, playing a practical joke, pushed the car around a corner from the restaurant. When Goldstein emerged to find the machine gone he reported the "theft" to police. He later found it, but en route home to Arlington he was stopped three times for stealing his own automobile.

Avenging Bees Routed by Artist With Bomb

Youngstown, Ohio.—When a bee insisted on buzzing around in his studio several days ago, Ralph Ellis, commercial artist, took a swat at it. A moment later a whole swarm descended upon him. But Ellis showed those bees a thing or two. He cleared out the studio with a stench bomb.

The Fascinating Stowaway

By GEORGE M. HUNTER

©, McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

DILLON, the second engineer, looked down into the defiant blue eyes of the stowaway, Isabella Johnson.

"How'd you pick the Iverson? How come? And who did do it?"

Angry that her identity had been discovered, she told reluctantly how Parry of the Blue Funnel line had shot Bills at the Anchor inn owned by her mother.

She had followed Parry into the garden and raised her hand to stop him.

Being close together the gardener, the only witness, swore she fired the shot.

"I was trying to stop Parry instead of him trying to stop me." The trains and steamers were being watched so she had slunk aboard the first tramp steamer in the nearest dock and the day before been hauled on deck.

Eight bells interrupted Dillon's first talk with the stowaway.

Coming off watch he found the fourth engineer by her chair.

Angling his thumb over his shoulder, he snapped, "Gwan!"

Her eyes protested.

"Fresh kid. Say, you're looking great." He said it with a proprietary air. "Anybody else been snoopin' around?"

Her face clouded as she told about the chief engineer asking how she was to get ashore in New York.

"Aw, now don't worry."

He leaned across her chair.

"Say, let me get you out of this mess. You're a swell girl."

She glanced shyly at him as the mess bell rang.

Dillon ate silently, scowled when the engineers bet three to one the stowaway would crash the gates of the United States.

Next day when he found her distressed, the captain had hinted at deportation.

"Get that worry off your chest, Isabella.

"Here's the chief coming. So-long."

Coming off night watch, Dillon whistled outside her door.

On opening, he drew her into the darkest place on the deck and learned the chief engineer had offered to pass her off as his daughter, and take her ashore.

Dillon laughed.

"Oh, lor', Isabella, you and him would be like a tug boat and a liner. Shure, girlie, you are a first-class liner."

"Oh, it would be better than deportation," she interrupted.

"Don't borrow trouble. Let Bill see you through—"

The bridge bell clanked eight bells.

He kissed her hand and hurried below.

Off watch at twelve next day, Dillon made straight for the stowaway's chair.

"Who's been botherin' now?" he demanded.

"Captain Dart says he'll need to log me. What does he mean?"

"Why, he's a square shooter. If he hasn't you in his log as a stowaway—he'll not do it."

"But I can't go back," she cried.

"All right, girlie, there's a way out."

"How? What do you mean?" she asked, puzzled.

"Say—I—I am hard boiled. Women, I've known 'em by scores. I ain't been a marryin' guy. Never thought about it till I saw you."

She drew away from him.

"Say, girlie—" He looked around and saw Captain Dart coming.

"So-long."

He gave Dart an ugly look.

Before going on watch, he slipped a note under her door asking her to meet him at midnight.

In the darkness he gained the corner below the bridge and waited.

At the sound of her footsteps, Dillon turned, reached out his hand, seized hers and pulled her to him.

"Listen, Isabella," he murmured.

She pulled back.

"Let me go."

"Isabella, girlie," his tones were soft and crooning tender.

His arms about her, she sighed as his lips found hers.

She abandoned her struggles and they stood silently for a long time.

"Do you love me that much, Isabella?"

"I guess I do," she said trembling.

"But we must forget that—this ever happened."

"Never, I'm crazy about you. Once I had a poetic guy on my watch, and he'd spout about love bein' blind. Love me and the world is mine."

"Just leave it to me—"

Footsteps coming aft, she kissed him and vanished.

He made for his room.

Dillon saw her for a moment before the quarantine doctor came aboard. "The captain says I'm to keep to my room, and Bill, he didn't write in his log that he had a stowaway."

"Savin' his face, huh!" Bill grunted.

The Iverson passed quarantine, then docked at pier 40. Captain Dart dressed for the city, called the steward, handed him twenty dollars.

"See what Miss Johnson—eh—wants in clothes. If more money than that let me know."

"Yes, sir."

"You know nothing about her."

"Very good, sir."

The steward was edging past the longshoremen thronging the deck, when the second mate gripped him by the arm. "Say, Steward," jerking his thumb over his shoulder toward the stowaway's room. "How does a fellow buy women's clothes?"

"By de color, sur."

"Color, nothin', bonehead! Size I mean. How tall is Miss Johnson?"

"Vimmen's buy dress by ze chest. round ze chests—bust inches."

"An old man like you should quit lyin'. My compliments to Miss Johnson. Ask the correct size."

The steward returned, wiping his hands on his greasy apron. "Thirty-four, sir. A black dress she vants, an' says dank you."

"All right, I'll get her a black frock. Here's a dollar for yourself. Don't go boozin' now."

Half an hour later the third mate dodged inside the cabin and called the steward out of the pantry.

"Say, that stowaway girl—what does she need most?"

"Stowaway—stowaway, sur. Oh, Miss Yohnson?"

"Yes, Miss Johnson."

"Oh, she needs shoes."

"What size?"

"I don't know, sur."

"Go ask her."

He returned breathless. "Four and de black color, sur."

At night the fourth mate hurried into the mess room, late for dinner. "Been buying something for the stowaway, Miss Johnson. Manicure set, some candy and flowers. Old Melchisedick, the steward, wouldn't let me see her. I—"

The fourth mate stood in the doorway with a paper in his hand, grinning. "Me and the other mates," he said, "Thought we might give that poor girl a lift. Tomorrow the skipper'll take her ashore and put her on the train for Chicago. He subscribed twenty dollars. The mates have made it up to fifty."

The engineer volunteered to make up the even hundred.

"Good sports," complimented the mate.

Next morning as the engineers ate breakfast, a cocky sailor's voice drifted through the window. "Did ye 'ear it. The female stowaway bolted last night! Her room smells like a blinkin' barber's shop."

The engineers walked single file to her room. Wrapping paper, empty dress, shoe and candy boxes littered the bed.

"Bet the mates bought that junk," said the third engineer.

"Sure," agreed the chief. "Mates are fools about women."

The engineers were lingering near the door, like lovers near an old sweetheart's grave after the funeral when the steward ambled up. "Dat second engineer—he runn'd away, too."

Dillon had not run far. Ht was sitting in Battery park.

She'd just spoil his life, Isabella Johnson was telling him.

"Girlie, I'd stand the spoilin'."

"Now, I'm safely ashore, forget me, Bill," she pleaded. "God knows I love you, but its best. There's the suspicion I can't explain."

"Gee, Isabella, betcha I can. When I glimpsed you on deck, I tumbled. See, I got this from the Sandy Hook pilot when he came aboard."

He spread a crumpled Liverpool Mercury out and she read:

ANCHOR INN MURDER PARRY CONFESSES

"Oh, Bill," she gasped, clutching his arm,

"Yeah, ten minutes more an' the license man in the city hall will be doin' some business."

When Salt Pork Greased Paths to High Society

To social climbers of the 183s in Livingston county, all that was needed was a side of salt pork, and the snootiest of log cabin dwellers would welcome you to his home. Even more, he would unfailingly call upon you at yours, observes a writer in the Detroit Free Press.

But if all your larder boasted was wild turkey, venison, honey, game fish, and squab, the social heights were not for you.

This sidelight on the manner in which salt pork greased the ways to social prominence is given by a son of pioneer parents, in his record of their early struggles.

He writes that in 1837, when pork was quoted at $25 a barrel and the only way to obtain it at that price was by laborious travel to Detroit, the fortunate possessor of pork was certain to find himself unusually popular, with his neighbors casually dropping in at meal time.

Salt pork was regarded as a delicacy to tempt the most feeble appetites when anyone was ill.

But wild turkey was plebeian food. If you were too thrifty to waste time and ball and powder in hunting them, one could always be obtained for about two cents a pound or less. One sale is mentioned in which a quart of whisky, selling at 25 cents a gallon, was traded for a large gobbler.

Deer and fish could be had for the shooting or fishing. Honey trees were found frequently, and the pioneer who wanted pigeon, shot once into the nearest tree and then discarded the older birds.

Eggs of Other Nations

A favorite article on the menu of Peruvians is the egg of the cormorant, a bird which inhabits the islands off the coast of Peru. In Nicaragua the natives dig in the sands for alligator eggs which contain large yolks and are said to taste like duck eggs. Sea bird eggs form a delicacy for the Eskimos. Apparently the taste of man varies with different countries for in Mexico the eggs of certain species of flies are used in making a kind of food paste considered by the Mexicans as a great treat.—Pathfinder Magazine.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"BROTHER CHARLEY"

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT had been elected President. His good friend, Theodore Roosevelt, who had picked the secretary of war for his successor, made certain his nomination and helped steer him safely through the campaign, was naturally very much pleased. Naturally, also, he expected a word of thanks.

He got it, but it was in this form: "I owe a great deal to you, Theodore, and I want to take this opportunity of saying so." Then, disregarding T. R.'s modest disclaimer, the President-elect continued "Yes, in thinking over the whole campaign, I am bound to say that I owe my election more to you than to anybody else, except my brother Charley."

Have you ever had cold water dashed unexpectedly in your face? Then you know how Theodore Roosevelt felt in that instant. In a flash he saw forward through the next four years—to the influence of "Brother Charley" and other conservative Republicans over the new President, his departure from liberal Roosevelt ideas and his shelving of Roosevelt friends.

So Theodore Roosevelt took a sore and foreboding heart with him when he went to Africa to hunt lions. That brief conversation in the White House had been the first rift in a famous friendship. Affairs turned out just as Roosevelt had expected them to.

When he came back from the jungles he announced his support of Governor Hughes for the Republican nomination for President. Taft was surprised and hurt and grieved. The rift became a gulf between the two men. It resulted in the formation of the Progressive party, the defeat of Taft for re-election and a Democratic President in the White House for the next eight years.

IT'S just a little piece of colored paper, less than an inch square, and gummed on the back. It may cost its first purchaser only a few cents but if it happens to be the only one of its kind in existence it's worth $10,000 or more.

Back in 1846, Postmaster Worcester Webster of Boscawen, N. H., needed stamps. He decided he would make some of his own. In those days, postmasters did. The United States government didn't begin to exercise its monopoly on the business until a year later.

So Postmaster Webster had printed on little, oblong, pale-blue-colored pieces of paper the words "Paid 5 cents." One of them was bought by a Boscawen citizen and pasted on an envelope addressed to "Miss Achsah P. French, care of Theodore French, Esq., Concord, N. H." That envelope, bearing the postmaster's notation, "Boscawen, N. H. Dec. 13." was sold a few years ago for $10,137.13. It is now owned by Arthur Hind, the Utica (N. Y.) multimillionaire stamp collector, and is valued at $25,000.

The rarest stamp in the world, which Mr. Hind also owns, is the one-cent British Guiana stamp issued in that South American English colony in 1856. It is printed on dark magenta-hued paper and bears a wood-cut of a ship, taken from the head of the shipping column of the colony's "Official Gazette." The man who found it, while searching through some old family letters, sold it for several dollars to a friend, who held it for ten years before a London stamp dealer gave him $125 for it, Mr. Hind bought it from a French stamp collector for $32,500. It is now valued at $50,000.

DIXIE

BACK in the early days of the republic when a host of steamboats plied the Mississippi, the boatmen, when in New Orleans, did most of their banking at the Banque des Citoyens. This institution issued bank notes printed in English on one side and in French on the other.

Its ten-dollar note bore the word "DIX" (ten) printed in large letters. So the boatmen spoke of it colloquially as a "dix," and New Orleans became the town where they got the "dixes" or "dixies." They carried the use of the word north with them and soon the entire South came to be known as the "dixie country."

Then in 1859 Daniel Decatur Emmett, an actor and originator of "negro minstrel performances," wrote a song about "de land ob cotton—Dixieland." It was first sung by Bryant's minstrels at Mechanic's hall in New York city, but the South, the real "Dixieland," immediately took it up as its own.

Two years later, to its rollicking strains, men in gray rode forth to "live and die for Dixie." It helped inspire them to such feats of valor as the world had never seen before and it buoyed them up in those dark days when the "Lost Cause" was slowly but surely being borne down by the sheer weight of superior numbers.

Today that tune still has the power to thrill the hearts of a reunited nation as no other tune has—this song which takes its name from the Mississippi steamboat men's familiar term for a piece of money!

POULTRY

CLEANLINESS BEST FOR CHICKEN YARD

Five-Point Program Is Outlined by an Expert.

By W. C. Monahan, Extension Poultryman, Massachusetts State College.—WNU Service.

A five-point program of cleanliness followed by successful poultrymen include clean chicks, clean brooders, clean land, clean feeding and watering, and clean management.

"Clean" chicks are chicks which are free from pullorum disease and are hatched from healthy, vigorous, well bred stock.

Brooder houses should be thoroughly cleaned and disinfected before chicks are ever put in them, and they should be kept clean by frequent changes of litter on the floor.

Summer range for growing birds should be land which has not been used for this purpose for at least two years. The range should not be overcrowded with birds.

Feeding the birds from hoppers is more sanitary and also more economical than any other method of feeding. On the range, hoppers and watering places should be moved frequently, to keep any one spot from becoming contaminated.

Eliminating runty, unthrifty chickens is helpful in preventing the spread of disease. Keeping chicks away from old stock also is advisable. Preventing visitors walking through the houses and over the range is another precaution taken by most men, as a means of keeping out possible infection.

New Breed of Hens Lay Eggs That Mark Chicks

Canada has contributed materially to the making of what is claimed as a new hen which has been evolved by agricultural scientists at Cambridge university, England. The bird, at the moment, is the object of considerable attention in the old country; concerning it the Spectator says:

Few successes of greater interest and practical possibilities have been won in the field of agricultural biology than the making of the new Cambridge hen. Her chicks declare their sex at birth, because the males and the females are differently marked. This is a great advantage to the poultry industry, since chicks travel safely, and well only during the first two days of their life. The new breed, known as a "Cambar," was developed at Cambridge, England, by the application of Mendelian principles. By the use of the Canadian Bared Rock, supplied by the University of British Columbia to Cambridge university, both silver and golden Cambars have been evolved. They are prolific layers of large colored eggs, whilst still possessing the virtue of sex-linked chicks. These chicks mark an epoch in the scientific breeding of poultry.

Bronze Birds Need Greens

More vitamin A is required by the bronze variety of turkeys than by White Leghorn chickens, studies conducted at the University of California disclose. It has been shown that turkeys require an 8 per cent level of the entire ration of high quality alfalfa leaf meal to promote normal growth to 30 weeks of age and to prevent symptoms of A-vitaminosis, a vitamin A deficiency disease. White Leghorn chickens grow normally and show no symptoms of the disease on a 4 per cent level of the alfalfa meal, according to experiments made at the university.—Montreal Herald.

Ducks Grow Rapidly

Poultrymen who raise ducks have noted one thing—that they eat lots of feed and grow rapidly. Generally speaking there is profit in feeding good breeds of ducks for market so long as they are growing. Where the profit disappears is after they have reached maturity and keep on eating voraciously. To come out on the right side of the ledger with ducks it is, therefore, necessary to market them as soon as they are full grown and this points out the advisability of hatching them late if one plans to sell them on the holiday markets.

Meat Spots in Eggs

Meat spots in eggs which later may develop into rots, are something over which the poultryman has little, if any, control. It is simply the rupture of a blood vessel somewhere from the time the egg leaves the ovary until it comes down the oviduct. It does not necessarily mean that the hen which laid them will repeat the laying of eggs with meat, or blood spots, and the only method of controlling the output is to have eggs candled before sending them to market.

Telling Sex of Goslings

This is one of the difficult problems for the inexperienced goose raiser. Ganders have longer necks, coarser heads and slightly higher pitched voices. However there is but one absolute test, not so easy to make. This is in examination of the vent which will disclose the sexual organs—a little experience will teach this art which one may master with patience. Goslings are now sexed at a day old same as chicks, observes a writer in the Rural New-Yorker.

SYLVIA had heard of it before, but this was her first indulgence. She set about the thing quite blithely and quite without misgiving. For a young actress who wished to get ahead without paying the usual fee, writing fan letters to oneself was a good old Hollywood custom.

She dashed off a couple of short ones—changing ink, paper and handwriting for each, of course—and then let herself really go on the last. Fervor she gave it and imaginative scope. Indeed, when the four pages were done and she read them aloud, Sylvia was genuinely moved. This, she admitted without false modesty, had a real thump to it.

The problem of a name, though, stumped her a brief while. Obviously, just any old moniker wouldn't do here. After a few moments' fruitless cogitation she reached for the telephone directory, flipped it open at random and found herself among the Ws. Sylvia began to scan the list.

Three from the bottom on the second page she found it; Werrenrath, Franz E. The syllables intrigued her; conjured a picture of blond, broad-shouldered six feet. She gave her pen its boldest stroke and signed Franz Werrenrath to the missive which told of impassioned admiration and implored a meeting. . . .

The maid stamped that letter and put it in the post box with others at twenty past eight next morning. Sylvia reached the studio a little after ten. At exactly one-thirty two men wearing black hats and grim faces came up to where she was waiting for camera call on the "Tantalizing Tillie" set.

"Miss Sylvia Lynne, ain't'tcha?" growled the one with his hat over his left eye. She affirmed it and he said: "We're from headquarters an' we got some things to astcha. Come on in Fiberg's office."

The producer, looking weighty, was pacing his inner sanctum.

"Hello, leetle lady," he greeted; "now dun't vorry. Dese boys is jost needink your halp. Tell her, boys."

"Well, you got a mash note today," said the one whose derby rode his neck, "from a guy we been wantin' to get the goods on for three years. But he's slippery, see?—slickest forger west of Chi, an' he never leaves a trail. We ain't even got his pitcher."

"What," queried Sylvia, in a smaller voice than she'd intended; "what is his name?"

"Franz Eric Werrenrath—an' he don't bother with no aliases. But listen: he says in this letter he's dyin' to meetcha. All right; so you invite him out an' talk like you knew all about his game. We'll be listenin' but outa sight, an' prob'ly he'll spill somethin' hot. Get the idea?"

Sylvia did and it rattled her rather badly. "I won't do it!" he cried. "It's—it's unfair!"

"He's a menace t' society," said Stetson-on-the-eye. "It's y' civic dooty t' help catch him."

Fiberg and the other officer seconded it. Arguments hummed about Sylvia like a swarm of hornets. Before she could collect herself, a telephone was thrust in her hand with the urge: "There's his number; go ahead."

Hesitatingly she put receiver to ear and spoke a weak hello. The man on the other end spoke with a servant's measured accents. Relieved, Sylvia gave the invitation:" . . . and ask Mr. Werrenrath if he will do me the honor of calling at eight o'clock this evening."

It was acknowledged and she hung up. The policemen nodded and sauntered toward the door.

"Okay," said the derby-balancer; "we'll be at your place by ha' past seven. So long." . . .

They walked in at twenty-six after. With them was a dark and intense looking young man who gave the impression of never having smiled. He crossed to Sylvia where she stood by the fireplace and presented a card. She read some words and saw some seals and signatures which told that here was one Roger Dale, private detective.

"He's been tailin' Werrenrath for a client," explained one of the headquarters men. "Had the phone wires tapped an' heard your call today. Thought he'd like to come along. Where can we all hide?"

She disposed of them in closets, then spent an hour and a half that was first expectant, next dull and finally acutely boring. At last the officers flung out into the room again disgustedly.

"Aw, he ain't gonna show up," said one. "Either he smelled a trap or else he didn't care as much about comin' here as—"; he broke off glancing half-guiltily at Sylvia and added: "Anyhow, we might as well scram."

The girl turned her back on them and stood gazing into the flames. Disappointment over the outcome of this was deeper than she cared to admit. There came a numbled series of good nights; she didn't bother to respond or look around. The door clicked shut. Silence. Then a step behind her and Sylvia, startled, spun around. The dark young man was there looking at her fixedly and tearing some papers into scraps. She glanced down, saw what they were and exclaimed:

"Your credentials! Why—why are you doing that?"

His smile was surprising and pleasantly bland.

"Because," he replied, "I probably shan't need them again, and if I do, it'll be better to make out new ones. A man has to keep in practice, you know."

Christian gave a most interesting program on "Better Homes and Gardens", and concluded with many helpful hints for the homemaker and gardener. A tempting ice course with cake was served to the members, Mesdames S. E. Chandler, A. N. Bird, W. S. Blackburn, W. L. Christian, L. D. Cole, J. H. Crawford, J. M. Lawson, J. W. Stone, H. J. Walton, W. H. Whitaker, T. K. Roberts, and a visitor, Mrs. Earl Wood. The next meeting will be with Mrs. S. E. Chandler, Friday afternoon, May 24.

We should like to pause right here long enough to acknowledge a lovely bouquet of roses from our neighbor and friend, Mrs. Hine. Flowers hold a peculiar fascination for me and create an atmosphere of beauty I wish it were possible to always maintain. Nothing can help my drooping spirits like FLOWERS—especially is this true when thoughtful neighbors and friends remember me. Working in a little "print shop"—grinding out the happenings of your little "old Main Street and Miine"—takes far more time than most people think for, and leaves me with very little time for social calls—However, right here and now let me state, no one appreciates friends, and their thoughtful consideration more than just—ME. I am GRATEFUL, even if I have a very poor way of expressing it.

Thanks again for giving me a ring regarding your visitors this week—This too, is a thoughtfulness we in the newspaper game, appreciate. The phone number is 9! Call us when we can serve you. We shall happily say HELLO—and if you are not "blessing us out about something", we shall regretfully say—"GOODBYE"—until next Thursday—AU REVOIR!

Farmers Harvest Large Oat Crop

Indications are that Alabama farmers will this year harvest about 2,500,000 bushels of oats, nearly 500,000 bushels more than last year when 2,090,000 bushels were produced.

F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician, reports that on May 1st the oat crop was 80 per cent of normal. indicating a production of about 20 bushels per acre.

Work Begun At New Park Projects

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Preliminary work by advance personnel was begun at three new State Park locations on Thursday, May 16, according to the Alabama Commission of Forestry. These projects are as follows: Chewacla Park, near Auburn in Lee County, designated as Camp SP-12; Chattahoochee Park, near Crosby in Houston County, known as Camp SP-13; and Chickasaw Park, near Linden in Marengo County, Camp SP-14, at which locations complete CCC units will be established about July 1 or soon thereafter.

The first steps to be taken by these advance parties include working up a base plan for the developments to be undertaken and the preparation of detailed designs for roads, trails, bridges and other improvements proposed to be built on the park areas. By obtaining prior approval from the Washington office, construction plans will be at a stage of development that will permit the work to be started immediately after establishment of the camps, thus avoiding delay and fully utilizing the services of the enrolled force.

Heart Drifts

THE LIVING DEAD.

Pitiful things are these;
Men who outlive their times,
Birds in denuded trees,
Bards who outlive their rimes.

Babes in the earth's cool grave,
Pity them not, kind stars;
Pity the fools who wave
Flags that outlive their wars.

These are the saddest things;
Worlds where a dead moon nods,
Blooms that survive their springs,
Creeds that survive their gods.

ADIOS.

Perhaps you go because you fear to stay
And face the sneers of those who knew you cared?
Perhaps you gobecause you would be spared
The memories of the old familiar way?
But will new paths, new faces help allay
The ache within your soul for love you shared
With one who has forgotten—one who snared
Your heart, and left you weeping by the way?

But smile again. Can youth not soon forget?
Be gay today. Tomorrow you may die.
Drink, dine and dance; and waste not your regret—
One so unworthy merits not sugh.
Give life a smile; but do not say you CARED,
For broken hearts—like toys, are soon repaired.

MYSTERY.

One came today,
And smiled,
And leaving took,
My kiss—
And treasure book.

And afterwards,
My heart
Loved all the hours,
Saw music,
And heard flowers.

—(McKinney)

I WOULD NOT SING.

I would not sing unless I heard
About my dream words music-filled,
Like those that chant when a spring bird
Flies to the woods its nest to build,

I would not sing
Unless the joy caged in my song,
Could lift its wings, and try and soar
To other hearts, and then—though strong
My hand—I would untie the door,

I would not sing
Unless I knew that in some place
Where Time and Toil had troubled men,
My song had gone, with cheerful face,
And would go, when I sang again.

—(McKinney)

CEASING TO CARE.

If ceasing to care is to want you,
Each moment that we're apart
If it's longing to hold and caress you
With every throb of my heart;
If ceasing to care is remembering
And breathing your name in each prayer,
If it's dreaming of you,
Night and day through,
Then dear—I'm ceasing to care.

I KNOW HOW THE WATER LOOKS

I know how the water looks
From tall ships at night;
How a city's windows shine
From a mountain height.

I know how bewildered trails
Ramble thru the South
And the jumbled ecstacy
Of a gipsy mouth.

I know motifs of new love
Practicing its scales,
I know all the ways to end
Modern fairy tales.

But this thing I do not know
Just how long it takes
Till a heart stops being brave,
Trembles once, and breaks.

CRESCENDO.

YOU, for whom music more than anything
Meant breath of life itself, chalice and food—
Who, like the Seraph Israfel, could sing
Paean or thenody, to match your mood—
Whose yearning bow upon the violin
One's soul to doors of Paradise might win,

What do you know? In the celestial spheres
Does music still live on? If so, maybe
Schubert has written for your ravished ears
His ending of the unfinished Symphony?

I look up to stars, and know that where
Souls of musicians meet, you must be there!

4-H Boys And Girls Given Trips To Camp

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama will be represented at the National 4-H club camp in Washington, June 13 to 19, by four 4-H club boys and girls who have been awarded free trips because of their outstanding achievements in club work.

Two boys and two girls will make the trip. As announced by T. A. Sims and Miss Elizabeth DeLony, directors of 4-H club work in the state, they are Virgil DeLony, Ozark, Rt. 4, Dale County; Winfred Barton, Cordova, Rt. 1, Walker County; Clora Ella Paulk, Ramer, Montgomery County; and Violet Whatley, Opelika, Rt. 2, Lee County. Mr. Sims anl Miss DeLony will accompany the group to Washington.

The Alabama boys and girls will join with two 4-H club boys and two 4-H club girls from each of the other states in the Union in enjoying a week of camp life.

Likes Alabama's Low Electric Rates

John C. Hamm, Demopolis, Gratified With Recent Reductions

"There is an old saying," declares Mr. John C. Hamm of Demopolis, Ala., "that 'the exception proves the rule'. During the past year or so the cost of all commodities which go into the usual family budget has been steadily rising, with one exception. That exception is the cost of your residential electric service. This service has been reduced from time to time and I now understand that a further reduction has gone into effect.

"Naturally, any reduction in the cost of living is very pleasing, and this new low rate will make it possible for your customers to make a still wider use of this reliable, economical service, that contributes so much to the comfort and convenience of the modern home. I certainly appreciate your efforts to render such service at such low cost."—Adv. Alabama Power Company.

THE LUCKY LAWRENCES

By Kathleen Norris

A Delightful Love Story of Two Sisters

Read this new story from the pen of one of America's best-loved woman writers—Kathleen Norris. She tells a lively and moving story of the fortunes of an interesting family.

"THE LUCKY LAWRENCES" will appear serially in this paper. Do not miss the opening installments.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

Mrs. Lida Wool, at the request of Miss Mildred Meroney, efficient Director of Economics of Shelby County High School, addressed the various classes on the Better Housing program now being successfully carried out in Shelby County. Mrs. Wood is the Columbiana Chairman and will be delighted to answer any question you may have to propound regarding information you desire in order to take advantage of Uncle Sam's generous offer to help you modernize your homes. Drop in and talk over your proposition with this well informed worker. She will be delighted to assist you in working out your Better Housing problems.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats paid a royal tribute to one of their most enthusiastic members on May 17th, when they gave Wales W. Wallace, Jr., a surprise "shower" honoring his 16th birthday anniversary. Topping and climaxing this happy occasion, the prettiest girl in Columbiana, to Personal Mention's own idea of beauty, namely Miss Lanice Curlee, walked in and presented the young gentleman with a huge Birthday Cake. The congratulations and happy wishes from class mates will long linger in the heart of this young fellow who was just about "speechless" with gratitude for such thoughtful recognition.

When Dr. V. J. Gragg, of Clanton, decides to come to Columbiana, he hops in his Monoplane and presto, is there, in less time than it is taking me to tell you about it. Last week this prominent physician, sometimes politician, and all the time public spirited gentleman, flew over and made a perfect landing at the Columbiana Airport. Dr. Gragg stated he had heard so much about the progress Columbiana had made under Mayor Gordon's reign, that he decided to come over and verify hear-say "facts and figures". He was delighted with the plans for further civic improvements in the future for Columbiana and extended congratulations to the "powers that be" who will be responsible for their completion.

Messrs Jones and Jackson, of the State Examining Department in Montgomery, are checking the official records in the Courthouse in the Tax Collector's office. They will probably be assigned further work in the Courthouse when this office is completed.

Lee Smith, Judge of Probate of Chilton County; J. C. Atchison, J. P. Bean, Charlie Duke, H. R. Oden, Chilton County Commissioners; J. W. Allen, Dr. V. J. Gragg, and Leo Thompson, all of Clanton, were dinner guests of Mayor Gordon on Friday, May 15th, at Curlee's Cafe.

These gentlemen were here to inspect the work now under construction at the Airport, and other City projects the Town of Columbiana is sponsoring. They enthusiastically praised the progressive spirit manifested by Alabama's most "up to the minute" Mayor, and were delighted with the advanced program now being carried out in this community.

Dr. Vaughn, of Alabama College, was a distinguished visitor in Columbiana on last Saturday.

Columbiana second team in baseball defeated Boothton's secondary aggregation by a score of 4 to 3, on Saturday morning, May 18th. The game ws exciting to the nth degree, as the 8th inning showed a score of 1 to 0. Both teams were well matched and the fans who witnessed the game declared it the best entertainment offered during the present season.

The many friends of Sydney Norris in Columbiana, Wilton, and Montevallo, are delighted to learn of his steady improvement following an emergency operation for appendicitis while visiting relatives in Tuscaloosa two weeks ago. Mr. Norris is expected home within the next few days.

Judge Lamar Field, of Anniston, opened the Criminal week of Circuit Court in Columbiana on Monday morning. Judge W. W. Wallace continues to hold Court in Talladega County during this week.

A. L. Horton, one of the best Principals of High Schools in the State of Alabama, now occupying this responsible position in Vincent, was a welcomed visitor to Columbiana on Friday, and while in town paid a thoughtful courtesy call to the Democrat office.

Miss Mary Peters, popular English Instructor of Shelby County High School for the past ten years, has returned from Peabody College where she completed her credits for an A. B. degree. Miss Peters will resume her work in Shelby County High School next season.

Mr. and Mrs. Gary Luttrell, June and Doris Luttrell, of Atlanta, were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul O. Luck in Columbiana.

Bill Young, Manager of W. B. R. C., Ila De Marks (The Humming Bird) and Musical Director of W. B. R. C., and Jimmy Brooks, prominent young business man of Birmingham, were dinner-dance guests of Judge and Mrs. Wales W. Wallace in Columbiana on Saturday night.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats played to a large and appreciative coterie of dancers at the Columbiana Airport on Saturday night. Among the visitors noted were George Scott and Billie Hill, of Siluria; Monk Morrell and Jimmy Gorman, of Vincent; Chester Wingard, of Clanton, and others. These dances are growing in popularity and the next dance will be held on May 31st.

A. A. Lauderdale, of Columbiana; F. A. Gorman and Solon E. McGraw, of Vincent, have returned from a recent meeting of the AAA held in Washington, D. C. Personal reports are most interesting from a business and pleasure standpoint.

Dr. H. T. Donovan, Miss Beth Wallace and L. G. Fulton spent Sunday in Marion, the guests of Dr. Donovans p'arents. Mingled regrets with congratulations are being showered on Dr. Donovan as he opens his professional offices in Clanton, Alabama, and severs his connection with the Shelby County Health Department. Dr. Donovan has made many friends in Shelby County and has most successfully handled the County Health problems since succeeding Dr. J. M. Kimmey one year ago. His successor has not been named. The good wishes for future progress in his chosen profession will attend him as he enters his new field of personal endeavor in the medical world.

We heartily endorse the petition recently submitted to Gov. Graves, by interested members of the student body in Alabama College, advocating the appointment of Dean Napier to succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael as President of Alabama College. No higher type gentleman, nor one more worthy of promotion to this responsible position, could be found than Dean Napier. It is to be sincerely hoped, for once, the "powers that be" will allow EDUCATION to supersede POLITICS and will place in the hands of Dean Napier the keys with which he can capably unlock the doors for further, better and higher Education in this Southern Institution in which we all feel such a distinct pride. He already holds the keys to the hearts of thousands of people in Alabama who have known and loved him and who appreciate him, not only for his keen ability and fitness for the position, but for his true friendship and devotion to the best interests of those entrusted to his care since he has so worthily served as Dean of Alabama College.

Eddie Watson, Manager of the Strand Theatre in Montevallo, is offering excellent entertainment on Thursday and Friday nights for those of you who like good musical comedy. Naughty Marietta, played and sung by Nelson Eddy and Jeannette McDonald, will bring to you the immortal melodies of Victor Herbert. Nelson Eddy, is my humble estimation, will be the nation's sensation as far as Baritones go. Lawrence Tibbett will now have to look for his "misplaced" laurel wreath. The duet, "Ah Sweet Mystery of Life", sung by these two artists is more than worth the price of admission.

Dame Rumor is circulating that YAMAKITA will soon be open for swimming, dancing and other recreational diversions. Here's hoping. No more beautiful spot, naturally, has ever been even thought about. It will be an ideal place to spend the hectic summer nights-to-be.

Go to T. R. Walton's today and buy a pair of STRUTWEAR HOSE! Latest shades just received. See them before buying elsewhere. We know they will prove satisfactory.

Manager Glass, of the Yellow Front, states he is expecting a new shipment of dresses—one of a kind, this week in time for commencement. Go by and give them the once over.

Want to go-a-fishin'? Stop by the Columbiana Hardware Company, and look at the attractive "bait" on display. Just the kind to inveigle a—FISH.

Miss Mary Sparks, who has been teaching in Birmingham, is spending her vacation in Columbiana with her mother, Mrs. Theo Sparks.

The Columbiana Leader is remodeling and repainting their store and have a large shipment of goods due there this week. The lacy voiles you have been requesting are "on their way". A full and complete line of silk and wash dresses are also on display. Call for "ANNE", she will tell you all about them, and "FIT" you too.

Bill Sims and his attractive way of "Blabbing" about Columbiana and her inmates is going over in a big way with the younger set as well as the only contingent on the Democrat list. Watch this young fellow. He has a "certain" way about him—and a "certain" unique method of expressing his lingo which is "distinctive"—and thats what we want—Different, Distinctive, Interesting and Informative.

Guess you have heard about the NUDIST CAMP near Dunnavant. Yes-sir-ree! Airing their views right on! If you do not believe me, ask the popular and affable Bun White, Chief Deputy in the Sheriff's office. This is one trip Mr. White had no trouble in getting some one to take with him. In fact, there was a standing line of applicants. Between NUDIST CAMPS and AIRSHIPS, Columbiana did not lack for excitement on last Sunday. Just what will be done regarding the NUDIST week-enders from Birmingham, has not been decided—but a prominent attorney is "looking into the law". Whether he has seen the "evidence" or not, I could not find out.

Heard in the Shop—"I don't suppose you don't know of noboly who don't want to hire nobody to do nothing, don't you"?——

"Yes, I don't"—(Contagious?)

A little boy walked in the shop last week and popped this question to his Dad—"Who was EVE?". His Dad—"The first chicken that ever ruined a man's garden".

Dr. and Mrs. D. S. Lightcap had

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Author of "The Lucky Lawrences"

Kathleen Norris, whose new story, "The Lucky Lawrences," will be published in this paper as a serial, was born, educated and married in San Francisco. She has a remarkable record of success in the field of popular fiction. She has attained this success not only because she is typical of her time and section, but because she throws a strong light on ultra-modern conditions, social currents and undercurrents. Reading her books gives one somewhat the impression of being an eavesdropper on domestic scenes and a listener to private confidences, although the revelations are more innocent than otherwise. When she employs the dark side of a theme or of human nature it is to furnish a necessary contrast and present a moral.

Mrs. Norris began writing stories in 1910 and has contributed to the leading magazines of the country. Her serials have appeared also in many outstanding newspapers, such as the Boston Globe, Philadelphia Bulletin, Chicago Daily News, Kansas City Star, Detroit News, Washington Star, Cleveland Plain Dealer, etc. Among her best known novels are "Barberry Bush," "The Story of Julia Page," "The Foolish Virgin," "Second-hand Wife" and "Walls of Gold."

It is a pleasure to announce that a new story by Kathleen Norris is to appear in these columns. We know that you will enjoy it.

THIS WEEK

The First One Goes
Looks Like War
Don't Stumble
400 Men, 400 Mice

The death of Marshal Pilsudski, ruling power of Poland, takes from that country a great man and an able patriot. Remaining in the background, exercising power without display, Marshal Pilsudski was an absolute dictator, and his death is first among the dictators developed by the great war.

Arthur Brisbane

The world may learn from his going what to expect when other dictators depart, one by one. What will be the destiny of Poland, with her strongest man gone? What, at a later time, will happen in Italy, Germany, Russia, Turkey, as each loses the dictator that now takes the place of self-government and independent public thought?

Italy calls out her "fourth class" fighting reserves and has 950,000 men ready to crush the king of Ethiopia, if crushing becomes "necessary." Note Mussolini warns other countries not to meddle and not to help Ethiopia. That looks a little like war.

Warning to politicians and others: Don't stumble.

In California, Herman Zeigler was putting 18 tame lions through their paces. He cracked the whip; they obeyed, jumping up on stools, sitting up on their hind legs. "Mind over matter" was beautifully demonstrated. The lions acknowledged their master.

Then, unfortunately, the lion tamer, careless, stumbled over a stool, fell; instantly the lions were upon him, forgetting their fear of him. He had stumbled and fallen—that was enough.

There are among us today, on and off the radio, some lion tamers, making the American people sit up and jump through hoops. Let them take care not to stumble.

In China, a subterranean river flooded the Szechwan coal mine. Four hundred miners were drowned.

Old-fashioned Chinese used to forbid, and still abhor, any mine digging, "because it disturbs the earth dragon." They will think the old earth dragon flooded the mine, ordered the unseen river to enter.

This drowning news is less exciting to the average American than it would be to have the cook announce: "There were 400 mice drowned in the sink."

The sink is near home, China is far off.

Seventy-five fighting game cocks and 35 men were seized by state troopers in a barn 15 miles out of Hammonton, N. J. Brutality in men dies slowly, but sinks to lower levels with time.

Kings of England once sat delighted around the "cockpit," betting on their favorites, reveling in the extraordinary courage of the game birds. Now cock-fighters are driven to hiding in barns, police arrest them, magistrates fine them.

Perhaps some day civilization will feel about man-fights, on the battlefield, as it does now about cock-fights.

Hitler continues his program on the "If you do not like it, lump it," plan.

Washington protested feebly against Germany's discrimination in debt payments against this country. Germany tells us to take what is given and be grateful, or make trade arrangements to suit Hitler. He hopes to counteract that boycott against German goods established here.

The former kaiser, reported seriously ill, is confined to his bed, ordered to avoid all effort; a hard order for the "all highest."

How such names as Hitler, Stalin, Mussolini must grate on the nerves of the aging Hohenzollern! He can sympathize with England's Henry II, who, after defeat, turned his face to the wall, muttering "Shame on a beaten king," and died.

Mr. Morgenthau, secretary of the treasury, assures you that your American dollar is sound, which is comforting. Mr. Morgenthau knows a good deal about money.

The British do not agree with him, and some British experts consider the dollar worth about 50 cents now and expect it to go lower.

They will probably be disappointed. John D. Rockefeller's I. O. U. is as good as gold, and this country is the John D. Rockefeller among nations.

A New England gathering approves birth control and sterilization of the hopelessly insane and habitually criminal, with full dissemination of birth control information. The action was not taken by any "radicals," or other queer fauna but "by the New England Conference of Methodist Churches." That makes it news. The idea is gaining ground that the woman should have something to say about "another baby."

Picturesque for Afternoon Wear

PATTERN 9311

A little bit demure, a little bit picturesque, and a very pleasing fashion is this afternoon dress. The wide drop-shoulder yoke continues in a panel to the hem—and gives youth in doing so. The soft gathers and the tiny tucks at the waist add to the feminine, wearable quality of this gown which will grace all afternoon occasions. For wear right now it is new and right—make it in one of the melodious, color-harmony prints that will enhance your own natural coloring—when coatless days arrive choose a cape-line or bonnet brim hat—stunning!

Pattern 9311 may be ordered only in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 requires 3⅞ yards 39 inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Address your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

SWEET REMEMBRANCES

An explorer was speaking at a dinner given on his behalf before he left on a long journey into the heart of Africa.

In concluding his remarks he said: "I thank you for your kind wishes regarding my welfare on my dangerous journey, and want you to know that when I am far away, surrounded by savages, I shall certainly think of you!"—Ashore and Afloat.

Formalities

"How is Crimson Gulch getting on with its fight on crime?"

"Fine," said Cactus Joe. "We're all for the orderly life. Everybody is on the police force. When anyone gets shot it's bound to be in the name of the law."

Thumbing Her Way

I can't catch up with my social obligations."

"What's wrong now?"

"Yesterday I went out and made ten calls, you know. And while I was gone, fourteen calls were made on me."

Shirtwaist Wedding Gown Is Chic

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

NEWS, thrilling news! Spring and summer brides-to-be will please take notice. It's about the white satin shirtwaist dress which is the very newest thing in wedding gowns. See this perfectly charming new fashion as worn by the lovely bride standing to the right in the picture.

More news! You would never guess unless you were told, namely, the shirtwaist and train are built in one and worn over a sleeveless evening gown of the identical satin. Which we think is a decidedly practical two-in-one costume proposition of which every style-seeking bride ought to know. As to looks, isn't it adorable?

After the nuptial day when the happy newlywed is invited to parties and formals she just leaves the white satin shirtwaist en train with the tulle veil en masse done up in their wrappings of tissue and sachet while she dons the sleeveless dress which served as the foundation of her wedding gown.

The captivating simplicity of this exquisite shirtwaist bridal gown is its big appeal. The trim row of neat little satin-covered buttons and the girlish wide turnover collar with its pleatings of satin about it and at the wrists are beguilingly youthful in aspect. From a coronet of pleated tulle falls a halo and short cape supplemented with yards and yards of tulle trailing out over the conventional long satin train.

The other bride in the picture yields to the lure of lace which is what most everybody in fashion's realm is doing this season. This lovely gown is most enchanting—an aristocrat among wedding gowns. The coronet of pearls and tulle pleatings is attached to one of the very new and smart long-back and short-front wedding veils.

We have been hearing a lot of late in regard to personality fashions. In other words the spirit of the times is to dress to type. This feeling for modes tuned to the individual is particularly evidenced in bridal array. So much so, designers are displaying a daring in originating wedding party ensembles.

We have in mind an away-from-tradition wedding group that goes in for color even to the bride's gown and veil. Her dress is fashioned of chiffon in a most delicate tint of blue and her tulle veil is in the same subtle blue. Her bouquet of pale bluish, almost white orchids together with lilies-of-the-valley is framed with a pleated ruffle of the pale blue tulle.

The four bridesmaids' costumes are of the same blue chiffon as the bride's dress. The high waistlines are accented with pink velvet ribbons such as also tie the pleated capes and trim the blue straw hats.

The maid-of-honor wears pink chiffon trimmed with blue velvet ribbon and her bouquet of pink butterfly roses and blue lace flowers is repeated in a wreath on her hat. The matron of honor wears a tunic dress of sapphire blue lace with a matching straw hat.

FOR TOWN WEAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This brown and white printed jacket dress is smart for town wear. The dress has an interesting stitched-down scarf. The buttons on the tailored jacket alternate brown and white. The belt in brown and the brown and white boutonniere tune in with the color scheme.

Waistline Takes Lower Trend in Latest Styles

The latest trend to watch is the lower waistline favored by LeLong. This designer has skirts shirred four inches below the waist in back of evening gowns and wraps. Lanvin's most glamorous gowns also have low waists and low fullness. Many of her blouses of silk or cotton are worn over skirts and belted at the normal waistline.

Schiaparelli introduces new double belts twisted in back and fastened by large metal-studded plaques.

SOME HIGHLIGHTS IN STYLE PARADE

A word to the wise in the country where summers are hot and long, against the heavy man-tailored suit with its accompanying tweed topcoat. The casual lighter weight dressmaker type with or without a long coat will give better and longer service.

Don't forget that spring means new costume jewelry, and keep an eye out for necklaces.

Hats are with and without brims, up and down, out in front, and something less than nothing flat in the back.

For colors, blue seems to be in the lead, but gray, brown, yellow and the dusty pinks and zinnia tones are important.

Never in years have dainty feminine lingerie touches been more important.

Smart women are carefully studying their types and dressing them. Even the strictly tailored clothes must have a feminine touch.

Velvet is carrying on into summer. With lace daytime and evening clothes, wear little velvet capes, jackets and scarfs. They make the richest, the smartest and the most attractive combination.

Metal Lace Extensively Used in Spring Jewelry

Bracelets, earbobs and clips of metal lace are among the new feminine decorative jewelry notes for spring.

Very clever and something different are those do-dads in which lace designs, both in edging and insertion, have been impressed into metal in bright colors—pink, light blue, green, yellow and in brown, black and navy.

Some of the bracelets are an inch wide, others two inches. The clips resemble a cluster of lace and one design that is fan-shaped is especially clever. The earbobs took their inspiration from rosettes.

"Snow Top" Fur

The high spot in fur is a cape of "snow top fox," a new dye which "snows" the surface and leaves the fur dark underneath.

Rustling Silks to Please

Rustling silks and flattering furs will be worn by ladies to please their sirs.

Lesson for May 26

THE LORD'S SUPPER

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 26:17-30; I Corinthians 11: 23-29.

GOLDEN TEXT—This do in remembrance of me.—I Corinthians 11:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Supper Jesus Gave His Friends.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Why We Have the Lord's Supper.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Observe the Lord's Supper?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Meaning of the Lord's Supper.

I. It Was Instituted by Christ (Matt. 26:7-30).

1. The time of (I Cor. 11:23). It was on the night of the betrayal of Jesus, just after the betrayer had been announced.

2. The circumstances of (Matt, 26: 26). It was in connection with the eating of the Passover. At the command of Jesus the disciples had made ready the Passover, and while they were eating he took bread and blessed it and gave to the disciples.

3. The elements used (v. 26). Bread, doubtless common bread of the Passover feast, and the cup which was the fruit of the vine.

II. The Significance of the Lord's Supper (I Cor. 11:24-26; cf. Matt 26: 26-28).

Jesus took natural and literal elements and made them to be symbols of his own body and blood. Just as our bread and drink are transformed into brain and brawn, becoming integral parts of our bodies, so by means of these symbols the communicant partakes of Christ. We are in him and he is in us.

1. It is a memorial of the Lord (Luke 22:19). When he left the world he left the bread and the cup by which the disciples would remember him. Every true disciple will gladly avail himself of the opportunity thus to remember his Lord.

2. To show the Lord's sacrificial death (v. 26). Jesus Christ did not die as a hero or as an example of unselfish devotion, but as a substitutionary ransom. On the cross he made expiation for sin.

3. It is a guarantee that our sins are forgiven (Rom. 4:25).

"It was the signet of the Son of God attached to redemption."

4. It symbolizes the believer's reception of Christ (I Cor. 10:16). The communicant thereby participates in the body and blood of Christ, becoming a member of his body.

5. It is a forward look to a completed redempton (I Cor. 11:26). When faith is exercised in Christ, redemption begins and its completion will take place at the coming of Jesus Christ (I Thess. 4:16, 17). The bread and the cup constitute the keepsake of the Lord until he returns. These elements possess not only a spiritual, but a tremendous psychological value, both as a memorial and as a prospect.

III. Qualifications for Participation in the Lord's Supper (I Cor. 11:27-29).

1. A proper apprehension of its meaning (v. 27). Eating and drinking unworthily primarily refers not to the demerit of the communicant, but the failure to grasp the meaning and importance of the ordinance. To engage thoughtlessly in this service is to do it unworthily. Only a regenerated person can discern the Lord's body. Faith in the integrity of Christ's person and work is essential. Anyone who does not believe in the absolute deity of Christ and his vicarious atonement is an unworthy communicant.

2. Church membership (I Cor. 11: 18-22). Christ's body is the Church, which is composed of regenerated men and women united to him as head and to each other as members of that body by the Holy Spirit.

3. Orderly walk. Conduct which disqualifies for participation in the Lord's supper is

a. Immoral conduct (I Cor. 5:1-13). It is most perilous for one who is guilty of immorality to approach the Lord's table (I Cor. 11:36). Sickness and death are often visited upon such. This explains why some are mysteriously taken away in death.

b. Heresy (Tit. 3:16; I John 4:23). The one who does not believe in the deity and incarnation of Christ is a heretic. Such should be excluded from the Lord's table.

c. The one who stirs up party strife (Rom. 16:17). Those who cause divisions in the Church should also be excluded from the Lord's table.

Freedom and Triumph

To be gripped by an iron-handed necessity from without is slavery; to be borne along the path of duty by an inward force, which we would not resist if we could, is freedom, peace, triumph.

SEED THOUGHTS

Often it takes some tide of grief to lift us to our best.

Find Overturns Idea of Antiquity of Pump

The town of Aquincum, once the capital of the Roman province of Pannonnia, now a village in the suburbs of Budapest, Hungary, had a fire brigade just like the Eternal City itself. All traces of the latter's fire brigade have long since disappeared, but a relic of Aquincum's recently came to light, says the New York Times.

It is a pump used to throw water on fires, and it is the oldest fire pump in existence. Not only this, but because it is a suction, or displacement pump, it shows that the history of pumps is all wrong by placing the first use of the displacement pump in the Sixteenth century, for the Aquincum pump has a bronze plate attached which states the apparatus was the gift of G. Jul. Viatorinus, prefect of the Collegium Centonarium, that is, head of the fire brigade, in 228 A. D.

VINCENT HIGH SCHOOL WINS COUNTY CHAMPIONSHIP

By defeating Shelby County High in the last game of the season by a score of 2 to 0, Vincent High School proved its right to the championship in the Shelby County High School baseball league. Vincent lost only one game during the entire season and that was to Montevallo. The champions won five games.

There were no real stars on this year's team, as the boys worked together to accomplish the desired results. Vincent was blest with two fairly good pitchers who allowed only a few hits in each game, each pitching at least one "no hit" game.

Practically the same team will be back next year and the school is for another successful team.

DR. A. F. HARMAN NAMED PRESIDENT OF ALA. COLLEGE

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—Dr. A. F. Harman, former state superintendent of education, last Friday, May 24, was named president of Alabama College to succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael.

The action was taken at the annual meeting of the board of trustees.

Dr. T. H. Napier, dean of the Alabama College faculty, and who had been prominently mentioned with Dr. Harman as a possible successor to Dr. Carmichael, was appointed dean of the college by trustees.

Vote of the board on election of the new president was not announced.

Dr. Harman will become president of Alabama College September 1st, when Dr. Carmichael leaves the institution to become dean of the graduate school of Vanderbilt University.

All members of the board of trustees, with the exception of Representative W. B. Oliver, were present at the meeting, including Governor Bibb Graves, ex-officio chairman.

Dr. Napier had been widely endorsed by students and alumnae organizations of the college to succeed Dr. Carmichael.

Dr. Harman was state superintendent of education in the past state administration and prior to that time had spent a quarter of a century in various school and educational capacities in the state.

A native of South Carolina, Dr. Harman received his first collegiate education in Peabody College. Nashville. Later he attended Teachers College of Columbia University, of which he is also a graduate.

The new Alabama College president began his first teaching experience in the state as assistant principal and teacher of English and Latin in the high school department of the Brewton schools. Later he was principal of the Centerville public school.

Following his tenure at Centerville, Dr. Harman served as superintendent of schools at Decatur and Florence and in 1920 became county superintendent of education in Montgomery County. During his service in Montgomery County, that county's school system attracted national attention on account of its complete and effective system of transportation and consolidation.

Dr. Harman also has served as president of the Alabama Education Association and in 1925-26 he was president of the department of rural education of the National Education Association.

After leaving his position as superintendent of Montgomery County schools, Dr. Harman served as director of divisional education until he took over the office of state superintendent of education in 1929.

Dr. Harman is an elder in the Presbyterian Church, and the teacher of a men's Bible class in Montgomery where his home has been for the past 15 years. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, a Mason and a member of two honorary college societies.

The board of trustees was in session for three hours before announcing the appointment of Dr. Harman.

HARP CONVENTION TO BE HELD HERE, JUNE 8

The Shelby County Sacred Harp Singing Convention will be held at the Court House in Columbiana on Saturday and Sunday, June 8 and 9. Everybody is invited to attend. Come and bring your dinner.

BOARD SETS FINAL DATE FOR SIGNING TAX CERTIFICATES

AUBURN, Ala.—June 8th has been set as the final date for Alabama cotton producers to sign applications for tax-exemption certificates under the Bankhead Act.

In advising county agents of the final date, W. H. Robertson, member of the State Allotment Board, writes county agents urging them to rush the work "in order that producers will not be confronted with the same confusion and delay in receiving tax-exemption certificates as was the case in 1934 and in order that this office will have time to do the necessary work most economically, it is very necessary that every effort be made to expedite the preparation of the Bankhead applications for 1935."

AUBURN, Ala.—Four hundred and fifty Alabama 4-H club girls are here attending the 20th annual short course this week. They will leave Saturday at noon for their homes.

ALABAMA COLLEGE GRADUATES MANY WITH HIGH HONORS

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—On the closing day of the Alabama College Commencement exercises announcement was made by President O. C. Carmichael of the students graduating with special distinction in scholarship. Graduating with highest honors were Misses Ruby Lee Livings, Elaine Smith, Agnes Postell, Mary Alice Newsom, Autress Busby, Lena Clare Shackelford and Mary Lorenz. Graduating with honors were Misses Alice Stallworth, Mary Frances Merrill, Mildred Hall, Carolyn Reddoch, Marion Bozenhard, Fannie Ruth Pledger, Julia Barnes, Anne Fant, Katherine Savage, Christine Beasleym Elnora Gammage, Lucile Mixson, Ruth Stovall, Maude Davis, Aline Blair, Anita Smith, Elizabeth Creel, Viola Love, Virginia Addison and Nell Taylor. Miss Alice Stallworth was given a special award by the Debate Council for service in the forensics program.

The Baccalaureate speaker, Mary Emma Woolley, president of Mount Holyoke College, was an addition to the list of distinguished women who have appeared at college programs here. Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, gave that address last year, while on other occasions Judge Florence Allen, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Ruth Bryan Owen and Jeanette Rankin have spoken here.

The Commencement sermon was delivered Sunday morning by Dr. George Stoves, pastor of the First Methodist Church at Memphis, and the Y. W. C. A. Vesper Service address was given Sunday evening by Miss Zoe Dobbs, Dean of Women at Auburn.

SUNDAY IS OPENING DAY AT YAMAKITA

For devotees of swimming, the news that Yamakita Swimming Pool, and the beautiful grounds surrounding will be thrown open to the public on next Sunday, will be welcomed. J. R. McMillan, owner, has selected C. A. Robinson, of Columbiana, as Manager of the pool, and Mr. Robinson states that all will be in readiness for the opening on next Sunday, when a large crowd is expected to be present. Cold drinks and candies will be sold, and wholesome recreation offered the patrons of this most beautiful spot, naturally, in Alabama.

A cordial welcome awaits you from Messrs McMillan and Robinson. Arrange to meet your friends and spend Sunday afternoon at Yamakita.

Saturday, June 15, Set Aside By Mayor As Better Housing Day

A PROCLAMATION

By The Mayor of Columbiana, Ala.

WHEREAS, the home is of supreme importance as the basis of our community life, constituting, as it does, an essential factor in the health and happiness of both present and future generations; and

WHEREAS, the Alabama Better Housing Program is helping our citizens to build new homes and to modernize homes which they now own, thus putting men back to work, and contributing in a concrete way to industrial and business recovery.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Harry Gordon, Mayor of Columbiana, Alabama, do set aside and appoint Saturday, the fifteenth day of June, 1935, to be known as Columbiana Better Housing Day; and I call upon all our citizens to join with citizens of other communities throughout the land in marking the day with appropriate observances, in order that the benefits of the Better Housing Program may be brought to a still greater number of people.

(Signed)
HARRY GORDON,
Mayor of Columbiana.

JUDGE E. S. LYMAN CALLED BY DEATH, WED., MAY 29, 1935

Just as we go to press, Shelby County citizens are grieved to learn of the passing of Judge E. S. Lyman, one of the most prominent men in the State of Alabama. Judge Lyman was a life long resident of Montevallo and practiced law for a number of years in Shelby County with the law firm of Peters, Wilson and Lyman. For a number of years, Judge Lyman served Shelby County as Judge of the County Court, and later was elected Judge of the 18th Judicial Circuit.

On last Friday, this beloved Judge suffered from an infection which resulted in blood poison, and was rushed to South Highlands Infirmary in Birmingham, where he passed away Wednesday morning, at the age of 79 years.

Surviving Judge Lyman, are his widow, May Lyman; four daughters; and two sons, E. S. Lyman, Jr., and Willis Lyman, both of Montevallo.

The Democrat extends sincere sympathy to the bereaved loved ones.

HUGE BOND ISSUE IS OFFERED COUNTRY BY U. S. TREASURY

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The government asked the country for a $100,000,000 loan last Sunday in a security offering which invoked the seldom-used privilege of selling bonds to "highest bidders."

Secretary Morgenthau announced the new borrowing, designed to build up a shrinking treasury cash balance. He offered for sale $100,000,000 in 3 per cent bonds of 1946-48, to supplement and bear the same date as $825,000,000 of this issue sold January 15, 1934.

But since these bonds now are quoted on financial markets, at more than $103, Morgenthau said that all bids for the additional issue will be thrown out if they fall below the par value of the securities.

The treasury declined to discuss officially its reasons for selling the bonds on a bid basis, but other quarters said it was an obvious desire to take advantage of the premium which the 3 per cent issue now was bringing on public markets.

It was recalled that the treasury, during World War days, had offered bonds to the highest bidders, a policy since employed in sales of Home Owners Loan Corporation and Farm Credit Administration securities.

The new offering, officials said, would not interfere with the regular quarterly financing due on June 15. At that time $416,000,000 in 3 per cent notes matures in addition to unrefunded portions of the called First Liberty 3 1-2s, which will require an additional cash outlay of about $320,000,000.

The treasury announced also that $1,608,000,000 of the outstanding First Liberties called for June 15th have been turned in for lower interest bearing securities. Of the total, $864,000,000 was exchanged for five-year 1 5-8 per cent notes. and the remainder for 20-25-year bonds which pay 2 7-8 per cent.

This conversion offering was announced last week. The new bonds can be obtained only through payment in Home Owners Loan Corporation 4 per cent bonds called for redemption on July 1, 1935.

Rental Checks Being Sent State Farmers

AUBURN, Ala.—Cotton rental checks amounting to over $4,000,000 will be paid Alabama farmers within the next few weeks.

This is announced by Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the State Extension Service, who reports that farmers in a few Alabama counties have already received their cotton checks for reducing their cotton acreage.

Farmers who signed reduction in 1934 will be the first to receive checks and then the ones who signed new contracts this year will receive their checks.

The rental payment is made in two installments, one of which is being made now, and the other to be made in the fall after compliance with the contracts has been approved.

Roosevelt's Veto of Bonus Bill Overridden by House, Upheld by Senate—Ford Boosts Wages—Hitler's Peace Program.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SETTING a new precedent, President Roosevelt "acted as his own messenger" and personally returned to Speaker Byrne the Patman bonus measure with his disapproval. Before a joint session of the house and senate and crowded galleries the Chief Executive read his veto message, an able and well ordered document in which he set forth his conviction that "the welfare of the nation as well as the future welfare of the veterans wholly justifies my disapproval of this measure." Asserting that an able-bodied citizen, even though he wore a uniform, should not be accorded treatment different from that of other citizens, he said:

President Roosevelt

"The veteran who is disabled owes his condition to the war. The healthy veteran who is unemployed owes his troubles to the depression. Any attempt to mingle the two problems is to confuse our efforts."

Mr. Roosevelt's stern warning against the dangers of inflation inherent in the measure was listened to in silence, though there was mild applause at other times. All his argument was in vain so far as the house was concerned, for as he left the chamber there were quick demands for a vote and by the time he had reached the White House the representatives had overridden his veto and again passed the bill by a vote of 322 to 98. In the affirmative were 248 Democrats, 64 Republicans, 7 Progressives and 3 Farmer-Laborites. Those voting to sustain the veto were 60 Democrats and 38 Republicans.

The re-passed bill was laid before the senate by Vice President Garner, and Senator Thomas insisted on the reading of the veto message in that body. Action was postponed for one day because a lot of the senators wanted to make speeches.

The debate in the senate was long and perfervid, and quite unnecessary because the result of the vote had been a certainty for several days. Fifty-four senators voted to override the veto; but 40 supported the President, and only 32 were needed to kill the measure. Three members had switched over from their stand when the bill was first passed. They were Pittman of Nevada, Pope of Idaho and Coolidge of Massachusetts, all Democrats. The only absentee was Norbeck of South Dakota. Dennis Chavez, the new senator from New Mexico, caused a surprise by voting to uphold the veto.

BONUS advocates and inflationists were prepared for further action in various ways. One plan was the introduction of a bill to draw $2,000,000,000 to pay the bonus from the work-relief appropriation, out of which the President has already approved the allocation of about $1,000,000,000 for immediate work projects. Other measures, as riders to navy or legislative appropriation bills, were being drafted. So there was a prospect of a great tangle in the administration's legislative program.

IN ITS annual statement the Ford Motor company discloses that it made a gain of $3,759,311 in 1934 over the previous year, to a total of $580,276,391. Just before these figures were made public, the company announced that the minimum daily wage of its employees would be raised from $5 a day to $6, adding $2,000,000 a month to the pay roll. The Ford and Lincoln plants in Detroit and all other cities share in this revision of the wage scale.

Henry Ford began boosting the wage scale back in 1914, and in answer to adverse criticism of economists, he made the pay increases a policy of his company. He put the minimum wage at $6 in 1919 and ten years later raised it to $7, where it remained until the end of 1931. With the depression it fell back to $4, but in March, 1934, a raise to $5 was made. The company's announcement says:

"The Ford Motor company has paid its workmen a total of $623,000,000 over and above what the company need to have paid had it followed the general wage scale."

MISS JANE ADDAMS, "first citizen of Chicago," internationaly famed as a social worker and peace advocate, has gone to her reward, and her passing is deeply mourned by the many thousands of poor and unfortunate persons for whom she had made life more endurable. She started her real life work in 1889 among the Italians and other foreigners on Chicago's West side, founding Hull House, which grew into the most famous social settlement in America. Later her activities were extended to the amelioration of sweatshop conditions, the child labor problem, and then to the matter of international peace. During the war she was made president of the women's international peace conference at The Hague, and she interviewed the officials of virtually every one of the belligerent nations. Three times she presided at the sessions of the International Congress of Women, and she was prominent in many humanitarian movements. But it is as the head of Hull House and the tireless friend of the poor and underprivileged that her memory will live longest.

GOV. MARTIN L. DAVEY of Ohio withdrew the warrant charging Federal Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins with criminal libel, so the administrator was able to visit Cleveland and make a speech without being arrested. The governor said that "all the objectives which were sought have been accomplished and no good purpose can be served by carrying on guerilla warfare."

FIRST of the list of projects to be undertaken under the works relief program is the Passamaquoddy tidal power scheme, and there is a lot of grumbling because it was placed at the head of the line by the President himself. This project was once turned down as uneconomic by Secretary Ickes, the assertion being that it would cost too much in comparison with the returns that might be expected, would take too long for completion and was in a region where so much work relief was not needed. But Mr. Roosevelt, whose Campobello summer cottage is near the location of the proposed dam site, is said to be personally interested in the project, believing it will bring new industries to the area.

Major Fleming

Anyhow, this big Maine project is to go ahead, and Maj. Philip B. Fleming of the army engineers corps has been chosen to take charge of the construction. Major Fleming has been serving in the PWA for some time but has been released for this Eastport work.

IN ADDITION to the Passamaquoddy project, calling for $10,000,000, about a billion dollars in work-relief allotments were given verbal approval by the President, these having been favorably passed by on by the allotment board. Included in this program are extensive rivers and harbor works throughout the country, and a $100,000,000 integrated works program for Wisconsin. The latter was planned by Senator La Follette and his brother, Governor La Follette, and approved by the administration.

These initial allotments will put a lot of men to work in a short time, for the plans for many of the projects already are complete. Mr. Roosevelt pointed out that 25 to 50 per cent of the work-relief funds to be spent in the various states would go out through mandatory allotments to such units as the CCC, highway construction and grade-crossing elimination. Funds for these expenditures were earmarked in the bill.

IN AN executive order the President established pay rates under the $4,880,000,000 work-relief measure, dividing the country into four sections in setting regional wages. Pay will range from $19 a month for unskilled laborers in the South to $94 a month for professional and technical workers in the East. The wages will be from 20 to 30 per cent below the prevailing wage rate structure throughout the country.

REICHSFUEHRER HITLER, appearing before the reichstag, outlined a 13 point program for disarmament and the improvement of international relations, and did it so well it cannot well be ignored by the other nations of Europe. He again rejected the resolution of the League of Nations council condemning him for the rearming of Germany, but said Germany might return to the league if that body divorced itself from the principles of the Versailles treaty and from the "psychology of victors and vanquished" and "after Germany is granted full equality rights, extending to all functions and privileges in international life."

To the great satisfaction of Great Britain, Hitler promised to respect the territorial clauses of the Versailles treaty, which, he said, could not be modified by unilateral action. He declared Germany was willing to sign non-aggression pacts with all her neighbors except Lithuania, and to agree to an arms embargo if others would do the same. Also the reich is ready to sign an air convention supplementing the Locarno pact.

Maj. Gen. Walter von Reichenau, director of the ministry of defense, announced that under the new conscription decrees the classes of 1914 and 1915—Germany's "war babies"—would be called up for medical examinations starting June 1. The able men of the class of 1914 will be called to the colors November 1 for the army and air force. The class of 1915 is to be conscripted for the labor service at the same time.

ETHIOPIA, in a note to the League of Nations council, defied the Italian war preparations and gave warning that she "would yield neither to intimidation nor to violence." Capt. Anthony Eden and Pierre Laval tried in vain to persuade Baron Aloisi, Italian delegate, to accept a gift of exclusive economic privileges in Ethiopia in exchange for saving the league's face and keeping a united front in Europe. The statesmen in Geneva began to believe there was no way of stopping Mussolini's African adventure. The Rome government is decidedly exasperated against Great Britain, charging that the British are promoting the shipment of war materials to Ethiopia through British Somaliland. Emperor Haile Selassie has just bought a large fleet of bombing planes from Turkey, some of which were sold to the Turks by British firms.

MANEUVERS of the Pacific fleet were marred by another fatal airplane accident. A seaplane plunged into the ocean 40 miles south of Midway island and the six members of its crew were lost. The victims were: Lieut. Harry Brandenburger, Lieut. Charles J. Kelly, Aviation Chief Machinist's Mate P. C. Litts, Chief Radioman C. M. Derry, First Machinist's Mate P. J. Proteau and Third Machinist's Mate Q. A. Sharpe.

SENATOR WAGNER of New York and Representative Crosser of Ohio offered in the senate and house identical railroad labor pension bills drafted in a way to meet the objections of the Supreme court to the law it declared unconstitutional.

WHEN Dennis Chavez was brought into the senate to be sworn in as successor to the late Bronson Cutting of New Mexico, six "liberal" members silently walked out of the chamber in protest against the efforts that had been made to unseat Mr. Cutting. Those who participated in this unprecedented action were: Senators Hiram Johnson, California; William E. Borah, Idaho; George Norris, Nebraska; and Gerald P. Nye, North Dakota, Republican Independents; and Robert M. LaFollette, Wisconsin Progressive; and Henrik Shipstead, Minnesota Farmer-Laborite.

RUSSIA'S immense airplane, the Maxim Gorky, largest land plane in the world, was destroyed when it collided with a small training plane over a Moscow suburb, collapsed at a height of 2,000 feet and fell in ruins. All on board, 48 in number, were killed, as was the pilot of the small plane. The victims were mostly engineers and workers of the Central Aerodynamic institute and members of their families who were being taken for a pleasure ride.

SECRET hearings were opened by the house military affairs committee to investigate charges that the Tennessee Valley authority already has squandered $1,000,000 of government money in questionable awards of contracts for dynamite and powder and through other irregularities. Arthur E. Morgan, head of the TVA, and his two fellow directors, David Lilienthal and Harcourt A. Morgan, were summoned before the committee.

A. E. Morgan

The charges are contained in an audit of the TVA made by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl. Some of the irregularities he claims to have uncovered are:

The awarding without competitive bidding of a contract which obligated the government for an indefinite sum of money, estimated at $615,000.

Overpayments of an original contract by as much as 120 per cent.

Awarding of contracts, in contravention of law, to firms which were not the low bidders, with one contract going to a bidder who was seventh from low.

Failure to require one large contractor to post performance bond and at the same time the payment of fees to this contractor in advance, despite a legal prohibition against advance payments.

Solicitation of bids by telephone or circulars among a certain group of private business houses, or in other irregular ways.

The TVA directors were said to be prepared to disprove the worst of the charges, and to be ready to make some disclosures of their own.

The inquiry came as the administration was trying to get the house committee to report favorably the bill, recently passed by the senate, providing more money for the TVA and enlarging its scope of operations.

HOUSE leaders were hurrying toward passage the administration's amendments to the AAA act, enlarging the powers of that organization, the demand of opponents for long debate being denied. It was certain this measure would arouse controversy in the senate. Jobbers and retailers of foodstuffs, of whom there are about 911,000 in the country, are much disturbed by these proposed amendments for the measure extends to them the processing taxes now imposed on food manufacturers, makes them subject to regulations not yet specified and requires that each one be licensed by the AAA.

CROWN Prince Frederik of Denmark and Princess Ingrid of Sweden were married in Stockholm in the presence of a brilliant assemblage. A week of activities preceded the ceremony, attracting great throngs to the Swedish capital.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—In Paris a new Ford sedan costs, delivered, just about $1,700. Or about $1,000 more than it does in most American cities. Or about two and one half times the American price.

Which is of the essence when it comes to the problem of removing international trade barriers, as that problem is now being attacked, from two widely different angles and with much animosity between the advocates of the two plans, by Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Foreign Trade Adviser to the President, George N. Peek.

The amazing point about this price for Fords in Paris is that the French duty on automobiles has nothing to do with it! The Ford cars sold in Paris are not made in the United States, but in Strasbourg. Nor is the main element of this astonishing difference in cost due to high duties on the parts. It is almost exclusively due to the difference in cost of manufacture.

This difference in manufacturing costs results from the fact that the factory at Strasbourg, while as modern as Ford engineers can make it, does not have the quantity production element which makes most of the popular small cars so cheap in America. That one element, the writer is informed, accounts for about $900 of the $1,000 difference in price here and in Paris.

Wages are an inconsequential phase, or would be, if mass production could be utilized in Strasbourg. It is perfectly true that the labor cost of constructing a car in France is much higher than in America, but the workers are paid less than those in Dearborn. The difference is comparable to that of a man plowing with a tractor and one plowing with one horse. The man with the horse may be just as good a farmer, but he takes many times as long to plow an acre.

The same point applies to the difference between turning out twenty cars and turning out a thousand or two thousand a day.

Dealer's Profits

Even if there were no tariff—or far more important—no quota—in France against importation of American automobiles, of course, they could not be sold as cheaply in France as they are in the United States. The chief additional cost would be in dealers' profits. French dealers could not expect to sell as many, and therefore would have to make more on each car than dealers in American cities.

The element of freight would be very small. As evidenced by the fact that $100 is just about the top price for hauling a car from any American Atlantic port to any European port. This is the price charged by the deluxe Italian liners from New York to Naples. It is much less on slower boats to the North sea ports.

Actually, adding about $20 for freight would be liberal.

The point of the whole case is that if international trade barriers could be removed, the people of the various countries of the world could enjoy a much higher standard of living than is at present the case. Yet fear on every hand is that instead of tending toward lowering these barriers the whole trend in the world is for raising them.

As for example, the sharp limitation on imports of American automobiles, machinery, and other items, by Italy and Poland. Just last month!

German visitors to Washington in the last few weeks have talked gloomily about the prospects of each nation becoming self-contained.

"It means black bread for our people," one of them said, "but we can do it. What makes us despondent is that it seems so unnecessary."

Teeth Extracted

A back-stairs compromise has been reached on the public utility holding company bill, which has so modified its original drastic provisions that in all probability the White House will apply pressure in order to "put the teeth back in." Present prospects are that this effort, which is expected from President Roosevelt and the New Dealers, will fail. There is no discounting the flood of protests from utility stockholders which has poured in on individual senators and members of the house. It has turned the tide, not to the point where the national legislators would openly defy the White House, but to a status where they are not willing to jump through hoops at the executive command.

One of the important phases of the new compromise is that it will exempt from its provision all holding companies whose interests are confined to operating companies inside one state. This does not sound important, but it lets a lot of rather big fish through the net.

Another modification is even more important. It exempts from the provisions of the proposed law holding companies whose operations are chiefly in one state, but extend for short distances beyond its borders. This would affect such important holding companies as Consolidated Gas of New York, Public Service of New Jersey, and People's Gas of Chicago.

Still another compromise provision would exempt holding companies that are interested exclusively in operating companies outside the United States. Such as American and Foreign Power. So that first and last a considerable number of big holding companies, with—far more important politically—a considerable army of stockholders will be let out. Which of course pacifies their stockholders, thus reducing the amount of opposition that the final form of the bill might bring down on the devoted heads of senators and members of the house who vote its final passage.

"May" and "Shall"

In the under-cover negotiations which led to this compromise some of the gentlemen interested in saving as many utility holding companies as possible nearly lost their battle after they thought they had it won. The first draft of text that emerged stated these exemptions in language which used the word "may." That is, it gave the securities commission the right to exempt these companies if in its discretion it saw fit to do so. One of those most concerned hit the ceiling when he read that "may." He got very busy indeed, and the draft now reads "shall." Meaning that such companies "shall" be exempted instead of "may" be exempted.

Still another modification does leave discretion with the securities commission. This is to extend from five years to seven years the length of time in which companies still retained under the death sentence may be allowed in which to wind up their affairs and liquidate.

Which in a way is the most interesting of all the changes. For the argument used to give this additional discretion would not be appreciated at the White House at all. It was that enough leeway should be provided in the holding company act to permit a reversal of policy by the administration "following the Roosevelt second term!" Just in the event that things did not work out as expected.

And the fact that the argument got somewhere—that it has been accepted by some very important senators and members of the house—would seem to indicate that some perfectly good Democrats are no longer taking all the proposed brain trust legislation as having been divinely inspired.

More Taxes Certain

More taxes are certain, despite all the propaganda by the administration one way, and by the bonus advocates the other. The taxes would be needed even if there were no bonus legislation at all. But there is going to be bonus legislation. Arguments by bonus lobbyists that to override the veto means the soldiers will get nothing are just so much drivel. If the bonus veto is sustained in the senate, as is now generally expected, some bonus measure will be passed later, which President Roosevelt can and will sign.

This will probably be something not very far from the Harrison compromise, though the President has always hoped that the eventual cost to the treasury could be held to $1,200,000,000 which the Harrison plan exceeds by at least $100,000,000.

Every one agrees that the present so-called nuisance taxes, which expire in June, must be continued. The only one allowed to drop was that of 2 cents on each check, which expired last January.

Probability is that the most certain of all proposed new taxes to be adopted before adjournment of the present session of congress is an increase in the inheritance taxes.

These fit in with the New Deal philosophy. It must be remembered that the Roosevelt ideal contemplates a nation of little fellows—no outstanding giants. Every man with enough to buy an automobile. But none with enough to buy a yacht—unless it's a sailboat.

This is revealed in the intense desire to hold down profits—to hold down bigness—to protect the little fellow against the big. Which is true despite the frequent allegation that NRA was in the interest of the big fellows, and against the little man.

Fly in Ointment

Another phase of New Deal policy right down this same alley was the securities act—and the stock exchange regulation bill. The idea was not only to hold profits on ordinary business down to a low percentage, but to prevent speculative profits of any kind.

Analyzed critically, it is easy to see that this would tend to prevent anyone not now rich from becoming so. But there was one fly in the ointment. Strict supervision of new security issues and curtailment of speculation, all tended in the direction of preserving existing fortunes.

They could snipe at them with heavy taxation, particularly on incomes, and on the corporation from which the income was derived. But a fortune invested in government bonds, for example, would be impervious to both.

Hence the popularity with New Dealers of inheritance taxes. Cynics comment that most of the New Dealers are young, and not worried about death duties. But the undeniable fact is that the New Dealers do want to do something about some of the very large fortunes now in existence. They regard them as a menace—a constant threat not only to the success of the New Deal politically, but to the actual working of New Deal ideals.

The New Dealers are helped in this aspiration to chisel away at the big fortunes by death duties by the fact that politically there is less danger to the average senator and member of the house in voting heavier inheritance taxes than almost any other variety of levy.

And when some of the other taxes under consideration are examined, it will be found that most of them have very important possible political repercussions. Such as the tax on life insurance premiums, for instance, despite the fact that it would be paid by the life insurance companies. And the tax on cheap movie admissions!

GERMAN PURCHASES ZULU MAIDEN FOR 7 HEAD OF CATTLE

Africa Stirred by One of Most Unusual Marriages in History.

New York.—A neat cottage, shuttered against the hot and dusty winds which almost constantly blow across the rolling plains of Natal, in the Union of South Africa, was the locale for one of the most unusual marriages in modern history.

The legal mating of a white man and a tall and powerful Zulu maiden! A black bride born and reared in the kraal of one of Africa's most warlike nations. A girl embarking on a monogamous marriage when her brothers and sisters and fellow countrymen from time immemorial practiced polygamy.

Brief Message.

In Dundee, British settlement of Natal, Willie Frederick Leonhard Hedder has established his household in the corrugated, iron-roofed cottage. But only after one of the most difficult and expensive marriages in the records of the Union.

New York scientists learned with great interest of the strange marriage, news of which came out of Africa in a brief cable message. The cable revealed it was only the second such mixed marriage in all of Africa since the World war.

Hedder, a European of German parentage, is twenty-eight. He fell in love with the Zulu maiden, but found many difficulties beset his path, mixed marriages were permissible, but not encouraged.

Cattle Buys Bride.

He knew that his white friends and neighbors would frown on the union, but he was determined to go through with it. Hedder was proud of the Zulu maiden for she came of one of the proudest of African races. A race powerful in war, expert cattle-raisers and a race subdued by the British, but never conquered.

He was convinced she would make a good housewife and a fitting mother for his children.

The first and most difficult problem Hedder overcame was that of complying with the elaborate system of laws regulating inheritances and marriage existant among the Zulus.

This consisted chiefly of paying the bride-to-be's brother seven head of Afrikaander cattle.

Child Is Saved From Bad Accident by Quick Wit

New Britain, Conn.—Quick thinking on the part of a mother, and the interest of a child in the telephone, prevented recently what might have been a serious accident here.

The mother was in her back yard when she looked up, and to her dismay, saw her child making an effort to get out of an open second-story window. Remembering the child's interest in the telephone and fearing to see her tumble to the ground at any moment, the mother called, "Will you answer the telephone for mother?" Anxiously she watched, and as she watched, her anxiety was relieved, for the child accepted the mother's suggestion, got down from the window and ran to the telephone. Meanwhile, the mother rushed upstairs.

Previously, the child had shown an interest in the telephone and occasionally had attempted to answer it. All the family thought it was a cute trick when the mother taught the child the proper procedure. It turned out to be a useful accomplishment, since it probably saved the child's life.

Lard Can Hiding Place for Baby Bond Money

Muncy, Pa.—A local resident walked up to the clerk in the post office and said:

"I want to buy one of these baby bonds—a $500 one."

"That will me $375," the clerk told him.

"Here's your money," the man replied as he lifted up a lard can, appearing to be heavy, and placed it on the counter.

In the can were 750 half dollars. He said he had been saving them over a period of years.

Pets Stolen and Held for Ransom in Serbia

Belgrade.—Wealthy people of Zagreb are suffering from a wave of kidnaping—the objects of which are their pet cats and dogs. The criminals mark down spoiled pets of the richest people, and each day one or more of them vanishes and the bereaved owner receives a curt request for a large sum of money as ransom. Animals, valuable in themselves, sometimes are sold again. If the police are informed of the loss, the animals are usually killed and never seen again.

"Sins of Youth" Given as Course in College

Boston.—A new course in the "sins of youth" will be available next year at Boston university.

The course, called "Institute of Character Adjustment," will train those who deal with adolescent delinquents and be included in the university's school of religious and social work.

With only college graduates eligible, the program is based on the results during the past two years at the school in techniques of psychological adjustments.

The Lucky Lawrences

CHAPTER I

The Lawrence family, although in the best sense of the word pioneers, had not come to the Golden West by means of covered wagons. They had left their Boston moorings, like the gentlefolk of means and leisure that they were, in the year of our Lord 1849, and had sailed elegantly for Rio, for Buenos Aires, and around the Horn. They had loitered in Valparaiso and in Lima for some weeks, taking things easily, in a leisurely day, and had in due time come up the stormy coast of California, and had dropped anchor in the opalescent harbor of peaceful Yerba Buena.

For San Francisco had been still familiarly known as Yerba Buena, then, and the blue waters of the bay had lapped the strand at Montgomery street. The globe trotters, magnificent Philip Lawrence and his frail, Indian-shawled, pretty wife, had remained on the ship for a few days, for the settlement on shore promised small comfort for tourists.

Early in their second week, however, they had been obliged to seek lodging ashore. This was for two reasons, one important, one ridiculous. The important reason was that an heir to the Lawrences was about to be born. The absurd reason was that some preposterous person had discovered gold, or had pretended to, at a place called Sutter Creek, and that everyone in Yerba Buena had promptly lost his senses.

Philip and Abigail Lawrence naturally did not lose their senses. They were rich anyway; they were above this undignified scramble for lucre. Philip had an income of three thousand a year, and Abigail's father owned five sailing vessels, including this very Abby Baldwin in which they had made their wonderful honeymoon trip.

But the sailors, and indeed the officials of the Abby Baldwin, had felt differently. They were not above acquiring fortunes, and they had instantly deserted the ship and made for the gold region. The rumor of gold, spreading like prairie fire between breakfast and the noon dinner, had found the ship emptied by sunset. Philip and Abigail had signaled a Chinese crab catcher, and in his little shallop with stained brown sails he had rowed them and their carpet bags ashore.

They had gone to "the Frenchwoman's," a quaint-looking adobe house on a hill, with an upper balcony and shutters. There were no windows, but there were tents of mosquito netting over the bed, and the bare floors were clean. Downstairs was merely a level of dim arcades, earthen-floored and smelling of spilled wine, where men lounged on benches, and where the Frenchwoman herself tended the bar. But the upstairs room had been comfortable enough and Abigail had eaten a shore meal of fish stew, dumplings, fresh soft black figs, sour bread, and thin wine, with some appetite.

This would do for the present, she had said. But one could not live quite like a savage, after all, and immediately after breakfast tomorrow Philip must find a really nice place, and a nurse. If not, then they would have to go back to the ship.

So much for Philip's benefit. But when he had gone out after supper Abigail had felt very low-spirited indeed. They had been eleven months getting so far, and the baby was due in a few weeks' time. Perhaps it would be weeks before they could get a crew on the Abby Baldwin.

Philip had returned flushed, distressed, and annoyed from his search the next morning; he had returned flushed, distressed, and increasingly annoyed from the searches of the following days. The Frenchwoman's was not only the best, it appeared to be the only possible place for Abigail to stay, and to contemplate a confinement there, with the noise and drinking and the smell of wine below stairs, and with nobody but whiskered old Madame Bouvier to attend her, was madness. Desperate, Philip had rented a spanking team and a loose-wheeled buggy and had begun to drive about the adjoining country looking for shelter.

For it had become obvious now that the crew was not going to return to the Abby Baldwin. The ship swung rotting at her anchor, in a dismal company of other deserted vessels, and the sun beat down upon their empty decks week in and week out, while the hides, coffee, and rope packed beneath slowly decayed.

Abigail had covered passionate pages with the story of their adventures, and had put the letters into the canvas flap of her trunk, under the pasted picture of the little girl with the rope of roses. Some day they would get home again, Philip, she, and the baby, and what a story they would have to tell!

Meanwhile, fifty miles southeast of foggy Yerba Buena, they had found refuge on a rancho. It was managed by a widow, one Senora Castellazo, who lived farther south in another hacienda, and was willing to rent this one to the strangers. It had contained no furnishings whatsoever when the Lawrences had moved in.

But many trips to the Abby Baldwin had pretty well transformed the dismal place. Philip, breathlessly grateful that somehow, with the aid of a Mormon doctor from Benicia and the care of two stolid, wall-eyed Mexican women, Abigail had actually brought forth a first-born daughter, had made no complaints. He had had carted down wagon loads of chairs, carpets, china, bed linen, books—all the personal possessions of himself and his bride.

A bride! Poor Abigail had laughed forlornly on the first anniversary of her wedding day. It had found her weak and weary, stretched on a mattress on the floor of one of the cool rooms, with a burning August day hammering away at the spread level acres of the rancho outside. Beside her had been Annie Sarah.

They had brought her in hot dusky grapes, and hot dusty figs, and warm wine, and finally goat's milk, to solace her in her ordeal. Except for that, neither Mexican woman had volunteered anything. They had watched the frightened, doubtful, breathless struggle apathetically, until their oily brown hands had actually grasped Annie Sarah. After that they had seemed capable enough.

Anyway, it had been gotten over, somehow, and Abigail had been free to cry a little, thinking of her room at home in an orderly, shaded Massachusetts village, with Ma's lavender-scented linen on the smooth bed, roses in a green glass vase on the bureau, and the lace curtains blowing softly in and out of the opened upstairs windows. Lilacs, trembling grass, and Grandpa's grave in the graveyard, and doughnuts and currant jelly—oh, dear!

As soon as the baby and the mother were well upon the road to normal living, Philip and Abigail had seriously discussed going home.

Then old Senora Castellazo had died, and her sons had wished to dispose of the Santa Clara hacienda. Four hundred acres for nine hundred dollars. Philip had considered it a wise investment. There was fruit—some fruit—there already, there were sheep and cattle included in the sale price. If figs and grapes would grow there, why not other fruits—peaches and pears?

He would take his wife and daughter back to New England, he promised, on the first suitable ship; it would be a long hard trip for a woman with a baby, but the journey across the plains would be worse, and there was no further hope of the Abby Baldwin.

No, upon consideration it had seemed to Philip that this sunshiny, sheltered flat region, well inland, was the coming district, and that by holding onto this property ten years, fifteen years, he and Abigail could not fail to be among the prosperous pioneers of the new world. Philip was one of the men who had shot dead the gold craze with an epigram: "a flash in the pan."

Meanwhile Fanny Lucy had been born.

"Look here, young lady, aren't there any boys where you came from?" Philip had said, half serious, half teasing, as he held his second daughter in his arms. Abigail had looked at him anxiously. But he had not been really angry.

Only it had been rather trying that a fine ship had left for South America and eastern ports on the very next day. She had delayed so long in San Francisco harbor that Philip and Abigail had really hoped to be able to sail on her. But Fanny Lucy had delayed, too, and had unconsciously affected her parents' destinies thereby.

For letters had gone to Boston on that ship, and letters, four months later, somehow had struggled overland in answer. The respective families of Abigail and Philip had been perfectly delighted at their venture, and wrote that they were certainly envious of the dwellers in a country where there was no snow, no thunderstorms, and no poverty.

Abigail wrote glowing accounts of her new life to the family at home. She and Philip were going to build a really nice frame house, with bay windows, a bathroom, and a cupola. Everything they touched prospered; people called them "the Lucky Lawrences."

And Abigail had eight daughters and one son, and the girls all married, during the late Sixties and early Seventies, in a land in which women were still rare and prized.

San Francisco grew like a mushroom, and Philip might have opened a thousand doors to great wealth, had he been a man to see. But he closed one after the other with his own hand, and went blindly on in an infatuation of satisfaction with his rolling acres, his miles of fruit trees, the growing family over which he ruled supreme.

Some of the girls went east when they married, some lived in San Francisco or Stockton, some died. It was not a salubrious day for pioneer women, with one out of every seven dying in childbirth. Some were poor, opening boarding houses, scrimping in lonely crossroad villages.

But no one of them ever forgot that she was a Lucky Lawrence, and belonged to a distinguished New England family. They talked incessantly of the significant fact that the Lawrences had not come to California as pioneers—oh, dear no! Mother Lawrence had come to San Francisco harbor on her wedding trip, on one of Grandfather Baldwin's own trading ships.

The one son, Patterson Lawrence, duly married, too, and lived in the house with which his parents had replaced the old adobe hacienda.

Abigail, and after her her daughter-in-law, in their fervor to encourage shade in that hot, dry country, planted everything upon which they could put their hands, close to the house. They did not foresee that the pampas grass and the verbena trees, the peppers and roses and evergreens, would grow closer, thicker, darker every year. Eventually the pretentious old frame building, with its scallops of mill work and its bay windows, its cupola and balustraded roof, was caught tightly in dusty heavy leafage, and the garden filled with mossy, slippery patches where even in summer no light crept in on the sickly grass.

For thirty years the House of Lawrence had been in eclipse, and the garden showed it. Acre by acre old Philip Lawrence and his son Patterson had watched their fortunes decline; the old pioneer of the Yerba Buena days lived to see the end of the century, and the end of his own prosperity, and died, leaving what remained in hands even less capable than his own.

For Patterson Lawrence was a poet, who lived merely to gather worthless old books about him, to dream over the painstaking penning of insignificant essays, which were rarely printed and for which he was never paid.

At forty he married a poet's daughter, who had been precariously existing for all her sixteen years upon bread, water, and the "Sonnets from the Portuguese," in a shanty on Rincon hill. Editha, before her early death, brought to the House of Lawrence two sons and three daughters. Sixteen when she married, ten years later, when Ariel was born, she quietly, happily expired, to music, as it were.

For Patterson had been reading poetry to her, the four older children, by some miracle, quiet and occupied down by the creek, and Ariel in her mother's arms taking a fourth-day view of life, when death came.

"She looks as if she were listening, Pat! She's going to be a great poet, and make all our fortunes!" Editha had said. And one minute later she had slipped away, leaving the prophecy to gild little Ariel's childhood.

Many Kinds of Sausages

While the number of kinds of sausages in common use in the United States may not be more than 50, at a fair in Germany a few years ago there were 1,785 distinct varieties entered.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A COSTLY WEEK-END

LORD GEORGE GERMAIN, British secretary of state for the American colonies during the War of the Revolution, was ready to leave London for a pleasant week-end at Stoneland in Sussex. The duties of his office had tired him and he looked forward to the quiet of the English countryside.

On his way from his chambers he stopped at his office to sign some official papers. One of them, directed to Lord William Howe, British commander in New York city, ordered him to co-operate with Gen. John Burgoyne by moving north up the Hudson to join forces with Burgoyne who would start south from Canada. Between them they would smash the rebel army.

But the letter to Howe hadn't been "fair copied" and wasn't ready for the signature of the secretary of state. "So!" exclaimed my Lord Germain. "My poor horses must wait and I must lose time because of this!" Then a clerk named D'Oyly said that he would make the "fair copy and would write from himself to Howe, enclosing the instructions to General Burgoyne which would tell him all that he would need with this and made ready to "keep his time, for he could never bear delay or disappointment."

So the "poor horses" of Lord Germain weren't kept standing in the street and he was able to hasten to his country estate for a pleasant week-end. But the five or ten minutes that he did not want to wait were costly ones for England.

D'Oyly forgot to write the letter to Howe and when his Lordship returned to his office from his week-end in Sussex, he also forgot to ask about the matter. Howe stayed in New York instead of marching north along the Hudson. The result was that the unlucky "Gentleman Johnny" Burgoyne blundered south through the wilderness to the inglorious end of his expedition at Saratoga. And Saratoga was the turning point of the Revolution.

ICE-JAM

OF COURSE, an ice-jam isn't such a trifle, but the one which choked the entrance to Chesapeake bay in the winter of 1784 was insignificant—if you compare its size to the broad expanse of the blue Atlantic. However, it was big enough and thick enough so that a ship from London was held up for two months before she could dock at Baltimore.

One of her passengers was a young German named Jacob Astor who was going to make his fortune, beginning by the sale of seven flutes he was bringing with him. During the long days the ship was held in the ice-jam, young Jacob Astor had many long talks with another young fellow, also a German. He was returning to America to resume his fur-trading operations in which he foresaw possibilities for great wealth because the Indians, he said, were only too glad to exchange valuable furs for the most inexpensive toys and other baubles. Astor listened but was not particularly impressed.

At last the ship reached Baltimore and young Astor hastened on to the metropolis of New York city. But his venture in flutes was a failure. Then he remembered the enthusiasm of his fellow-German over the fur trade. He guessed he'd try it.

He did. And within a few years it had made him a fortune of more than $2,000,000. Today the name of Astor is a symbol for great wealth—all because an ice-jam held up the ship which was bringing a young German immigrant to the shores of the New world.

GLITTER OF GOLD

THIS is a story with some highly important "ifs" in it.

If James Wilson Marshall had chosen to build a sawmill on Capt. John Sutter's lands instead of going to "the beautiful vale" of Coloma, forty miles away to do it. . . .

If a mid-January flood hadn't nearly swept away the mill-frame and brush dam, making it necessary to widen and deepen the dry channel he had selected for his tail-race. . . .

Well, the course of American history might have been entirely different!

But the fact is that Marshall did locate the sawmill on a little stream in the tiny California valley of Coloma and there was a downpour of rain in the first month of the year 1848. At dawn on Monday, January 24, Marshall went out to see if the channel was satisfactory.

Glancing idly at some of the earth, excavated from the channel and now washed down by the recent downpour, he noticed some gleaming particles. He looked at them more closely, then sent back to camp for a tin plate. He "panned" out some of the dirt in the plate and soon had about a half-ounce of the yellow flakes.

Eventually those yellow flakes reduced John Sutter, "king" of New Helvetia, and James Marshall to poverty. But before doing that, they set a whole nation mad with an ancient lust, played an important part in the slavery dispute that led to the Civil war and gave to the world the "gold standard" of money.

POULTRY

PEN ROOSTER WHEN NEEDED NO LONGER

Poultrymen Should Consider Breeding Stock.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head Poultry Department, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

When the hatching season is over, the flock is changed from a breeding flock to a laying flock and only fresh, infertile eggs are desired by the trade.

This means that the male birds should be moved to separate quarters. In doing this, however, the poultryman will consider his prospects for breeding work next season. All those male birds which do not measure up to the owner's standard for type, color and breeding ability should be discarded. If the birds are below standard they will be a dead expense during the period they are producing no returns to the owner. Sometimes, it is necessary to remove the males because in-breeding has begun. In such a case new blood will be needed.

If the owner does have some desirable roosters, however, and no adequate place to keep them, it might be well to build summer range houses. These are constructed at low cost and will answer the purpose very well.

In removing the male birds, it is well to keep in mind that eggs from some of the hens will be fertile 21 days after the male bird has been removed. A fertile egg will start incubation at a temperature of 70 degrees and in a few days the embryo chick will begin development. Such eggs are objectionable.

Another economy measure to put into practice after the hatching season is over, is that of culling. Every economy is needed to make the flock pay in summer.

Turkeys, Like Chickens, Good and Poor Producers

People often ask how many eggs a turkey hen will lay, and it is the general impression among those inexperienced with turkeys that they lay very few eggs, 20 or so during the spring, after which they go broody and from then on they loaf. This is a fallacy, states a writer in the Missouri Farmer. The egg production of turkey hens is comparable to the production of chicken hens in that there is a variation in number of eggs among the individuals and, if not allowed to go broody, some of them lay all summer and fall and they have made production records in excess of 150 eggs per year. Some of them lay every day for a week, then pause. Others lay every day for a month and more without a pause. Generally speaking, turkey hens, not having had the broodiness bred out of them, will lay 20 or 30 eggs and go broody. If broken up, they will soon resume laying until 18 or 20 eggs are laid and go broody again and if repeatedly broken up will continue laying throughout the summer if they are good producers.

Feather-Producing Geese

As feather producers all breeds of geese are good, though the lordly Africans are much harder to pluck either alive or dead. As for eggs, the various breeds stand about in the following order: White Chinese, Toulouse, African and Embden. These four breeds are the ones largely kept in this country for various purposes and all of them are excellent and serve their purpose well. There is a great difference in the strains of geese kept, and some of the Africans now seem to hold all leads in egg production; though as with all others it is more of a matter concerning the man who carries the feed pail than it is in breed alone.—Rural New-Yorker.

Shade for Young Pullets

Shade is of prime importance for all poultry, especially during the summer months. Where houses are crowded and shade is not available on the range there will be a high mortality. A cheap and adequate shelter may be constructed by driving 2 by 4 supports in the ground and thatching these over with bagging or green branches. These shelters, however, should be cleaned of droppings at regular intervals.

Poultry Jottings

A cap about 3 or 4 inches above the brooder stove pipe prevents back drafts.

After the first ten or twelve weeks, both mash and grain should be available at all times to pullets.

* * *

Chicks have no teeth; they have a gizzard instead, but the gizzard cannot grind feed if it has no grit in it to grind with.

* * *

Mites are a common pest. They are tiny and infest all joints, nail holes and crevices in the droppings boards, in the perches, side walls, and under boards nailed to the floor to brace roosts.

On the average, about 40 out of every 100 eggs set fail to hatch.

Since lice increase in warm weather, and reduce both egg production and flesh, treatment for destroying them is essential to the highest returns from the flock.

The paper fans will miss his breezy chatter in this issue, as this young fellow gets the news and puts it across in his own inimitable way, with a Vocabulary that is to be envied. Hurry on home, Bill, we personally miss you.

A congenial fishing crew composed of Mayor Harry Gordon, Harris Miltonton Gordon and A. D. Gordon, Miss Ruth Luck and Mr. and Mrs. Homer J. Walton, spent the week-end in Panama City, Fla. We understand the "catch" was more than satisfactory. The merry party came home Sunday.

Far removed from the turbulent, seething, boiling cauldron of politics, Huey Long, Father Coughlin, Sinclair, Talmadge and other disturbing factors, dust storms, air ship record flights, tornados, kidnapings, appropriations, prohibition, referendum, local option, bonus veto, etc., life goes quietly on in the private hospital in Canada where the famous Quintuplets celebrated their first birthday anniversary on Tuesday. Their well ordered lives are not affected by antagonistic forces of the world out side. The daily routine of "sleep, bath and bottle" goes right on. Fifty little fingers and fifty little toes wave and wiggle happily through the day and the kind old Sand Man takes command of the Dream Train which leaves promptly at 6 P. M. each day. Their tiny, chubby arms encircle the world. Their big, brown eyes have looked at you from every page in every daily for the past year. The entire world sent birthday greetings and good wishes to bless their tiny lives. May 28th, 1935, marked their first appearance over radio. Fame and fortune are already assured. May HAPPINESS also be in store for these universally beloved—Babettes.

4000 Dirt Farmers Endorse Program

AUBURN, Ala. — Four thousand farmers from 25 states, 250 being from Alabama, met in Washington the past week and passed a resolution urging the continuation of the agricultural aljustment act.

"Be it resolved by the delegates assembled," the resolution says. "that we respectfully request our congressmen and senators to give their unqualified support to the continuation of the agricultural adjustment act, including the processing tax and the amendments to the act now pending before congress, and

"Be it further resolved, that we endorse the legislation enacted by the national congress and the sympathetic administration thereof in restoring the agricultural credit of the nation."

Mopping Cotton For Weevils Beneficial

AUBURN, Ala.—Where boll weevils appear before cotton begins forming squares, pre-square poisoning with a mixture of 1 pound calcium arsenate, 1 gallon of water and 1 gallon of syrup, is recommended by Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"The poison should be applied with a small cloth mop on the end of a stick two or three feet long." he says. "One pound of calcium arsenate will make enough of the mixture to cover two acres of cotton. The cost of mopping is approximately 25 cents per acre. Mopping is of no value after the cotton begins to square."

DECORATION DAY FORMALLY OPENS DRIVING SEASON

Drivers Who Don't Want Tire Trouble Will Look To Their Equipment Now, Calera Dealer Says

Just as it inaugurates formal opening of beaches, parks, amusement resorts and the vacation season, Memorial Day also formally opens the summer driving season.

"Our experience in the tire business indicates that most people really begin to think about the great amount of driving they are going to do during the summer along about Memorial Day," declared R. E. Bowdon, Jr., Calera dealer for The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. "Generally we have a lot of drivers come into our place of business around Memorial Day to have their tires inspected, and to have other checks made on their cars.

"These drivers—the ones who come in to have their tires inspected—are the wise members of that great fraternity of men and women who find pleasure in exploring the open road. Frequently such a check reveals a tire that cannot last much longer, and the car owner is warned in time to avoid tiresome, irritating delays and possible serious accident.

"Others may believe there are 'plenty of miles left' in their tires, only to be stranded at the side of a busy highway in mid-day changing tires while the wise motorists who checked up beforehand go whizzing by.

"Another thing most motorists don't take into consideration is the fact that tires wear down faster in summer than in winter, as heat is a natural enemy of tire life. Terrific heat is generated in a tire as it pounds over the hot highways—and if the tire is a 'weak sister' to begin with, trouble may result. A check-up for summer and replacement of smooth, worn tires with new ones means that the driver won't be bothered with roadside delay or possible accident during holiday or week-end trips that should be care-free and enjoyable," Mr. Bowdon advises.

WILTON NEWS

Misses Adelle Martin and Thelma Hines, of Alabama College, were Sunday guests of Miss Nell Sanders.

Mr. and Mrs. V. L. Hubbard and Mr. and Mrs. Lance Hubbard, attended graduation exercises at the University of Alabama, Tuesday. Leslie Hubbard finished the pre-med course at this institution and will attend medical college in St. Louis, Mo., this fall. We are proud of this young man and his promising career.

Wilton has her share of graduates this year, as Misses Nell Sanders, Margie Harrison and Mildred Cochran, all of Alabama College, finish their respective courses.

Miss Sanders has accepted a position with the Merchants & Planter's Bank in Montevallo, and we are happy to learn Misses Cochran and Harrison will teach next year.

Receiving their High School certificates today from Montevallo, are: Misses Katherine Milstead and Gladys Woolley; Messrs Francis Wells, Earl Lindsey. Congratulations to these happy young people.

A very impressive Scout Service was rendered at the Baptist Church, Sunday morning by Scout Master, Haye Splawn, and twenty-five of his Scouts. These boys are doing fine work under the capable leadership of their Master. Another organization of the many that Wilton is proud to claim. These boys attended a Scout Rally in Piper, Saturday.

Mrs. Sam Vest and Mr. and Mrs. Dan Berg, motored to Birmingham, Saturday.

Mrs. Mae Moreland, Natalie and Harold Moreland, visited in Piper, Saturday. Miss Frances Gentry returned with them for a visit.

Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Davis and children, visited relatives in Buford, Ga., over the week-end.

The Wilton School closes one of its most successful terms, Thursday under the supervision of Mrs. J. P. Logan, and Mrs. A. C. Heath. The closing exercises will be conducted Friday night in the form of a play given by the school children, and at its conclusion a "negro minstrel" will be given by the Ashby players. Admission will be 5 and 10 cents, proceeds for the benefit of the P.-T. A. and School.

The Wilton P.-T. A. is sponsoring a play, "Everybody's Getting Married", a three act comedy. This play will be given in the near future—and is it funny? Don't take our word—Let's see you there.

Rev. Clarence Clinkscales, of Howard College, delivered an inspiring sermon at the Baptist Church, Sunday night.

...ant Jean Canant, Misses Alice Nolen, Johnnie and Louise Sanders and Betty Milstead attended the Sunday School meeting in Columbiana, Sunday afternoon.

The W. M. S. held its monthly Missionary Program meeting with Mrs. Lewis Woolley, Monday afternoon, May 27th. The subject of the program was "Lifting the Banner Through the Ministry of Healing." The devotional was conducted by Mrs. J. W. Ward. Miss Alice Nolen was leader of the program. Those taking part on the program were: Mesdames Lewis Woolley, Ed Sellers, B. B. Curry, O. C. Ambrose, A. B. Canant, Ada Pruitt and M. R. Hogan. Many facts were learned about the work our Southern Baptists are doing in the Homeland and afar.

Mrs. E. S. Ambrose, O. C. Ambrose and Miss Lavada Ambrose attended graduation exercises in Centerville last Thursday. Mrs. E. S. Ambrose's granddaughter, Doris Ambrose, finished grammar school, the eighth grade this time.

R. F. COX, JR., MADE PAN-AM MANAGER

R. F. Cox, Jr., promising young business man of Columbiana, has been receiving congratulations from his many friends throughout Shelby County, upon his recent promotion in being made Manager for Shelby County of the Pan-American Petroleum Company, Inc. Mr. Cox has keen business ability, and enjoys the confidence of the entire community to which he has been assigned. His success is assured, and the promotion with this Company is deserved.

Luther Curlee and Yeager Horn, of Columbiana, have been placed in charge of the local station. The wholesale distributing plant of which Mr. Cox is Manager, is located near the Southern Depot.

The Democrat extends congratulations to Mr. Cox and best wishes for future success in his newly elected position.

ISBELL-LYON

An impressive and quiet ceremony marked the wedding of Miss Pollye Isbell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Isbell, to Tony Lyon, of Columbiana, on Saturday morning, May 25, 1935, at the home of the bride's parents.

Before an improvised altar of southern smilax and ferns, in the presence of a few close friends and the immediate families of the contracting partie,s, the wedding vows were spoken, the Rev. D. Z. Woolley, officiating. Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Lyon left for a short wedding trip.

Mrs. Lyon (Pollye Isbell) is one of the most efficient young business women of the town, having been City Clerk for the past three years, and also capably handling the secretarial position with the Gordon & White Real Estate & Insurance Company. She is a graduate of the Shelby County High School and has legions of friends throughout the County where she is so well and favorably known.

Mr. Lyon is a promising young man of Columbiana, and the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Lyon are delighted to know that they will make their future home in this city.

17-Year Locust To Appear In South

AUBURN, Ala.—The song of the 17-year locust will drone through wooded areas in some parts of the South this summer; however, it is believed that very few, if any, will appear in Alabama.

J. A. Hyslop of the United States Department of Agriculture reports Brood IX of the insect will this year turn up in its usual range—Southern West Virginia, Western Virginia, and extreme North-western North Carolina. It is also expected, in small numbers, in the rest of West Virginia, eastward into northehrn Virginia and Maryland.

Grubs which have been living under the ground since 1918 will crawl up onto trees this year to shed their skins and emerge as winged insects. The insects do very little damage. They make their presence known by an ear-splitting and never-ceasing uproar.

Derris Harmless To Plants and Persons

AUBURN, Ala.—Without injury to the plants and without danger of poisoning the persons eating the vegetables, Alabama farmers can control chewing insects, including bean and potato beetles and cabbage worms, by using a mixture of one pound Derris and 7 pounds of sulphur.

Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, emphasizes also that the sulphur in the mixture repels the sucking insects and controls the red spider.

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Author of "The Lucky Lawrences"

Kathleen Norris, whose new story, "The Lucky Lawrences," will be published in this paper as a serial, was born, educated and married in San Francisco. She has a remarkable record of success in the field of popular fiction. She has attained this success not only because she is typical of her time and section, but because she throws a strong light on ultra-modern conditions, social currents and undercurrents. Reading her books gives one somewhat the impression of being an eavesdropper on domestic scenes and a listener to private confidences, although the revelations are more innocent than otherwise. When she employs the dark side of a theme or of human nature it is to furnish a necessary contrast and present a moral.

Mrs. Norris began writing stories in 1910 and has contributed to the leading magazines of the country. Her serials have appeared also in many outstanding newspapers, such as the Boston Globe, Philadelphia Bulletin, Chicago Daily News, Kansas City Star, Detroit News, Washington Star, Cleveland Plain Dealer, etc. Among her best known novels are "Barberry Bush," "The Story of Julia Page," "The Foolish Virgin," "Second-hand Wife" and "Walls of Gold."

The first installment of her New Love Story can be found on Page Three of this issue.

Wallace Advises Farmers To Fight

"Get up on your hind legs and fight for what you know is simple justice," Secretary Wallace advises farmers, declaring that "your united stand for the cause of agriculture was never more necessary than at the present moment."

He also states that as long as farmers stand firm with President Roosevelt they "need have no cause to fear the future."

"The next few weeks will be crucial," warns Mr. Wallace. "If the ranks of agriculture hold firm we have some chance to improve the agricultural adjustment act and come closer to winning for agriculture its fair share of the national income; but if the ranks of agriculture are divided, it is almost a certainty that what farmers have battled for for 15 years will be lost."

Kudzu Should Be Grazed Carefully

AUBURN, Ala.—Kudzu should not be grazed too closely or mowed too frequently, else the stand may be destroyed, says J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist.

"Allow kudzu to grow at least two full seasons before mowing and three seasons if the land is poor," he advises. "No more than two mowings each season seems to be the safest on soils of only fair fertility."

Many farmers have found that kudzu furnishes valuable grazing, particularly during the periods of drouth, by shifting the livestock from the grass pasture to the kudzu for a part of each day.

12-CENT COTTON LOANS EXTENDED

AUBURN, Ala.—Twelve cent cotton loans on the 1934 cotton have been extended for six months, from July 31, 1935, to February 1, 1936, announces the commodity credit corporation.

The corporation also announces that 12 cent loans will be available to producers until July 31, 1935.

Extension of the maturity date of these loans means that producers who have obtained 12 cent cotton loans may make repayment, obtain the release of their pledged cotton warehouse receipts, and secure the advantage of any market rises between now and February 1st, 1936. It also means that no cotton pledged as security for 12 cent loans will be taken over or sold by the Commodity Credit Corporation prior to February 1, 1936, except as provided under the terms of the loan agreement. One of these provisions is that middling 7-8 inch spot cotton must reach 15 cents a pound on the New Orleans market before it can be liquidated by the Commodity Credit Corporation prior to the extended maturity date of the loans.

Allotment Blanks Ready For Farmers

AUBURN, Ala.—All forms and blanks for Alabama farmers to fill out in making application for allotments under the Bankhead Cotton Control Act have been mailed to the county agents in each of the 67 counties of the state, reports W. H. Robertson, member of the State Allotment Board, Auburn.

As soon as the work has been completed on the cotton acreage reduction contracts, county agents and cotton committeemen will immediately turn their attention to the applications for gin certificates under the Bankhead law.

Spring Potatoes May Be Planted In Fall

AUBURN, Ala.—By properly storing their spring crop of Irish potatoes in a cool, moist place, Alabama farmers can use them in planting their fall crop, says L. M. Ware, head of the horticulture and forestry department here.

"If the larger part of the spring crop is stored under fairly cool, dry conditions they will keep satisfactorily for eating purposes until November or December," he advises.

A discussion of planting fall potatoes is given in Alabama Leaflet No. 11, copy of which may be obtained from the county agent or by writing the Alabama Experiment Station at Auburn, Alabama.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

MY GARDEN.

"I would plant rows of lovely thoughts
As pansies, set along the walks;
The cheer of tulips and heartsease,
Low, flowering shrubs and friendly trees,
Hyacinths, roses, and jasmine sweet,
Giving perfume to all they meet;
And bowing welcome in pink frocks,
Long lines of gracious holly-hocks.

At morn, syringa, with fragrance rare
Sweet clover scenting the noon-tide air,
Bouquet of mint, with daisies blue,
When four o'clocks serve tea to you;
Dahlias tinged by the sunset west,
Bird songs at dusk from a thrush's nest,
White lily pools where moons hang late,
With lilacs by the garden gate.
And down—just where the gate unlocks,
A cluster of For-Get-Me-Nots".

And we open the Personal Mention section today with thoughts from "My Garden"—probably prompted by the lovely flowers which have this week brightened an other wise drab office. Were it not for your kind thoughtfulness and the message of continued loyalty and love the flowers bring, I doubt my being able to attempt another 16 column ramble this week.

Believe it or not, in this newspaper business and the limited territory in which we live and edit this weekly, I remind my self of the man who had hold of a pair of handles that were electrified by a battery: It is painful to hang on, but impossible to let go. Were it not for your consideration, I think I would just "give up", but since evidences lie all around us bespeaking your hearty cooperation and interest, we happily and hopefully begin a pilgrimage in the journalistic world for our fourth consecutive year. Will you follow through?

J. B. Turner and family have returned from an extended stay in Hot Springs, Ark., and no more cordial welcome has ever been extended a resident of Columbiana, than the one Mr. Turner's many friends greeted him with when he sauntered down Main Street with a nobby new walking cane—and the tan Dobbs at a new angle—marking him the attractive, dapper "Arkansas Traveller" that he is. He evidently located the Fountain of Youth all over again while he was away—although he did not mention having stopped by Ponce-deleon's Fount in Florida—but Men—Married Men, rarely ever recount all their actual ramblings—that is, all the little detours et cetera—You never can tell—At any rate, wherever he has been, he looks like a "cool million."

Saturday was POPPY DAY in Columbiana, and long before most of the inhabitants of this attractive little burg were up and at their various posts of duty, the Ladies from the Auxiliary of the American Legion were pinning "red poppies" on the lapels of business and professional men a sthey went to their desks. Gay and festive were the little symbols, and a bright note of color added much to the routine scheduled for the busy day. "SOLD OUT" by nine o'clock was the successful work of this energetic and patriotic group of matrons who sponsored this worth while achievement.

The artificial poppies were lovely—more beautiful when the spirit behind the bloom was considered, but none more beautiful than several dozen Japanese Poppies brought to me by a little friend in this town whom I think is as charming and gracious as a "sub-deb" ever gets to be. I refer to Hazel Ruth Swann, popular member of the Junior High School set, and one of the most thoughtfully considerate little persons I have ever had the good fortune to meet. Aside from her personal charm, she has been one of the three Junior Editors of the Kiddies Kolumn which appeared in the Democrat—and which, by the way, has been missed by several readers who have called my attention to its absence. Thanks Hazel, I deeply appreciate the flowers—You know how much I LOVE FLOWERS, and how very much I LOVE little Y-O-U.

Wonderful RELIEF

Here's good news for you people whose nerves are so jangled, you can't eat, sleep, or rest; who worry over trifles, start at sudden noises, have Nervous Indigestion, Nervous Headache.

DR. MILES NERVINE WILL RELIEVE YOU QUICKLY. It was originated by a Nerve Specialist especially for people in your condition. It has been making good for more than fifty years.

FAULTS.

The faults you find in other folks
Lie first in your own eyes;
Examine well yourself and thought
When you would criticise.
The evil you would find in them
Strikes too, a chord in you;
If you were altogether good
But good would come to view.

Now when you talk of other folk
Or advertise their sin,
You'll find that thereby you become
Like them, to them akin,
If them, instead, you see good
Your life will be good, too,
And, surely, seeing, finding good
Is something you can do.

Now, only one who's finished well,
Perfecting self, has time
To look for faults in other folks
Short in comings pantomine.
But he who's not at fault at heart
Who's reached perfection's goal
Thinks only truth, sees only good
Naught else is in his soul".

LITTLE THINGS.

It is not easy to forget
The gifts good fortune showers,
And willingly we pay what debt
Of gratitude is ours.

But oh, I would not set aside
Or count as nothing worth,
Treasures more truly sanctified
Than all the wealth of earth.

Laughter, some simple word, a book
Companionable and wise;
That patient, almost human look
In my dog's adoring eyes.

The silver arrows of the rain,
A daisy's lifted face—
Glories may pass, but these remain
To lend our living grace.

Bright pebbles in a grubby fist,
The peace that sunset brings—
He knows not thankfulness who's missed
The touch of little things.

—(Jennings)

FAME.

One toiled for fame
That never came,
His thick verse overlong;

Another name
Won far acclaim
Worth but a single song.

—(Bell)

NAVIGATION.

The sailor has no harder task,
To sail the stormy oceans,
Than I who steer my little soul,
Of strange and deep emotions.

—(R. J. R.)

ANOTHER DAY.

Current with my waking
There are thoughts of you,
Like keen daggers finding
Flesh—and stabbing through,

Like a silver sword blade
Cutting dreams away
Laying bare my being
To another day.

To a world of angles
Cruelly defined;
Fears that crush the spirit,
Facts that bruise the mind.

Only with my dreaming
Do you come to stay,
Can I tread Golgotha
Yet another day?

TO A POET.

"Ah, Jester in the Court of Love,
You juggle words with skillful art,
And vainly seek to banish pain,
Serving a king who broke your heart."

CONSOLATION.

With you so far, so many miles away,
I pause remembering that still we may
Be warmed and cheered by the same high sun,
Have the same star—wish when the day is done,
Marvel and wonder at the same full moon,
And both alike with the God of love commune.
These thoughts bring you so close to my heart
Mere miles never keep love-bound souls apart.

PERSONAL MENTION

Speaking of FLOWERS, have you seen the gorgeous colored varieties of Sweet Peas, Noland Barnett has for sale? Go by the Nelson Farm today and brighten "any little corner" with these dainty blossoms.

If you are in the market for a gift which will be deeply appreciated—Try a box of Myra Chandler's Candies made right here in Columbiana. You cannot find more delicious candies nor more varieties in anybody's Candy Shop. Call her today and place your order. Attractively boxed for $1.00 per pound.

When it comes to a "dream that came a walking—and a dream that came a talking" right into this little print shop, Personal nomination goes to Miss Mable Peters, of Deatsville, Alabama and Alabama College, who has been the feted house guest of Miss Charlie Verne Tinney in Columbiana for the past week. A "second" to the nomination, was quickly voiced by "George", and the entire staff of Democrat writers, from the "HEAD" man on down to "yours truly", agreed unanimously, that no prettier, nor more charming little visitor had ever so completely captivated all of us. In other words, we were, without a dissenting vote in rendering our verdict.

Mrs. J. R. Dunklin (Dean Scott), of Greenville, Alabama, attractive niece of Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, has been visiting in Columbiana for the past week, and was the much admired honoree at several bridge parties during her stay in oor city.

Air Ships continued to do a land office business on last Sunday. A commercial plane spent the day here taking citizens for a trip through the clouds. A prominent attorney and his handsome little son won their case—and collected for same on Sunday afternoon, while an "agitated" little mater looked on. They proved that "two HEADS are better than one"—and both occupants of the air ship declared they "had their way" in the air—and loved it. Personally speaking, we think we heard a sigh of relief as the "legal light" lit on terra firma again, but the "young hopeful" wanted to go up all over again—and "keep a going".

The Wadesonian Theatre in Calera offers as a special attraction tonight, the Tune Wranglers from WAPI. "A Dog of Flanders" is the cinema presentation, Friday and Saturday, the successful screen picture, "Let's Live Tonight", will be offered, with the Syncopaters, a 7 piece orchestra on the stage. The admission is only 10 and 15 cents.

Harris Milton Gordon, brilliant son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Gordon, continues to merit honors at the University of Alabama where he has been a student for the past two years. The latest signal honor to crown this years record is his election as Senior Manager of the University of Alabama Basket Ball Team. Mr. Gordon inherits an unusual amount of executive ability from his "famous Mayor-Dad", and combines it with a tactful and pleasing personality which makes him popular with his class mates, and warrants their confidence in selecting Mr. Gordon for this coveted position.

Southern Bell Telephone Representatives are in Columbiana locating and measuring lines for the DIAL SYSTEM which is soon to be installed in our town. Another feather in the cap of Mayor Harry Gordon—Another progressive step forward for the people whom he so faithfully serves.

The road to Chelsea is about to be an accomplished dream of C. R. Tinney's, who has been working with Mayor Harry Gordon on the project. When this road is completed, the Magic City will only be a thirty minute drive—and who knows, almost everybody we know will move out here and work in Birmingham. That IS the sensible thing to do!

John Culver, popular former Toll Collector at Morgan Bridge, spent Monday with his many friends in Columbiana, who are always delighted to welcome him.

Jimmy Bishop, of Louisville, Kentucky, and nephew of the Misses Bishop in whose home he has often visited in Columbiana and made many friends among the younger contingent, is receiving congratulations upon winning the third annual discussion contest of the Rotary Club at Reuben Post Halleck in Louisville. The subject of his address was, "Why We Should Teach Photoplay Appreciation in the High Schools."

Young Bishop's prize certificate was $50.00.

Many of the High School boys will remember "Jimmy", and his good sportsmanship while visiting here several summers ago. Good luck, young fellow, and hurry back to see us and allow us to congratulate you, personally.

John Curlee, Jr., marked off another year on his calendar of days on Sunday as he began his pilgrimage in his ninth year. Good wishes from his many friends and gifts appropriate to the "baseball age" were in evidence at Curlee's Cafe throughout the day.

The many friends of Paul O. Luck regret to learn that he was called to his home in Georgia on Sunday, on account of the serious illness of his father.

What Is Reality?
Ludendorff Said No
A Woodpecker Sermon

Miss Jane Addams "of Hull House" is dead. She set an admirable example before men and women. She devoted her life and her fortune, all of her time, effort and money, to the welfare of unfortunate women and children. She was one of those that make it difficult not to believe in heaven.

Arthur Brisbane

If there were no future rewards for such goodness the entire universe, with its relativities, quantums, electrons and light-years, would be one ghastly joke.

Learned Professor Einstein, with the also learned Professors B. Podolsky and N. Rosen, all of Princeton Institute for Advanced Study, makes a deep announcement that will interest those that can understand it.

This is it, condensed:

"A scientific theory can be devised which will completely describe reality."

It seems the present scientific theory, supposed to give a description of physical reality by the "quantum-mechanical" method, does not work out satisfactorily, and you are sorry you learned it.

It is pleasant to see scientists on the shore of the ocean of knowledge, playing with one or two little pebbles. Science is far from any "scientific theory that will completely describe reality," for science cannot tell what "reality" is.

In a universe without limits of time or space, made up of particles of electricity variously grouped, in electrons, atoms and molecules, no man-microbe can hope "completely to describe reality."

Chancellor Hitler of Germany conferred upon the fighting German General Ludendorff the title "field marshal general," highest rank in Germany's army. General Ludendorff, greatest, after Von Hindenburg, in the big war, declined with thanks, announced his retirement to a small hunting lodge in the Bavarian mountains. It is suggested that Germany's most distinguished living general did not feel that his glory could be increased by Chancellor Hitler, who was a corporal in the army of Austria.

"Sermons in stones, and good in everything."

There must be a sermon in the Chicago woodpecker that every morning woke his neighborhood drumming on a copper drainpipe.

The copper resisted, but the woodpecker drummed on until a boy with a slingshot stopped him forever. What is the sermon?

Does it deal with modern efforts to ignore the nature of man, stand old "Supply and Demand" on his head, and prove that super-intelligence can make the world over in ten minutes?

Professor Kemmerer, financial expert, of Princeton, worrying about inflation, "too much money in circulation," says the government is spending money twice as fast as it comes in. This, he says, is done by "pumping the banks full of artificial credit." Having done that, the government borrows its own money from the banks and pays them interest, which seems mildly amusing.

President Roosevelt may be right about professors. An eight-year-old girl missing in New York; all police detectives, plus 60 policemen, especially assigned, and troops of Boy Scouts searched the neighborhood vainly for 61 hours.

Prof. Taylor Putney, Jr., of New York university, said to the police: "I saw boys and girls digging a cave in the sand late on the day of the girl's disappearance; look there," and pointed. There at the foot of the concrete wall the girl was found, apparently smothered by sand that had caved in. There is much in knowing how to look for what you want to find.

In New York city racketeers collect $10,000,000 a year from poultry dealers, having, by way of persuasion, killed a few of them.

To discourage the racketeering, Police Commissioner Valentine tells merchants to "slug racketeers" at sight and offers to help them get revolvers for shooting.

An old poker player when he "raised" used to say: "The best way to discourage vice is to make it expensive."

Very old is the story of the fish in which was found a precious ring that the tyrant of Samos had dropped into the sea. And new is the story from Sydney about a captured shark that disgorged the tattooed arm of a man. The man had been murdered, his body dismembered, the parts thrown into the sea. The shark swallowed one arm, returned it as evidence and the murderer may hang. Invent something more improbable than that.

Ray Allen, Birmingham, was named state commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, at their annual encampment in Tuscaloosa.

Rabid dogs are appearing at such a rate in Alabama as to demand serious consideration by the Legislature, Dr. J. N. Baker, state health officer, said.

Eighteen alumnae groups of Alabama College have formally endorsed Dean T. H. Napier to succeed Dr. O. C. Carmichael as president of Alabama College.

A second dividend of 33 1-3 per cent is now available to the depositors who have proved their claims in the insolvent First National Bank in Bessemer.

Pleated Sleeve Gives Striking New Effect

PATTERN 2212

A pleated sleeve that forms an epaulet shoulder is new and creates a striking effect. (Note the back view, too.) Add to that, the center front buttoning that is so much the rage, soft gathers above the bust line, and a patch pocket, and you've a shirtmaker frock of unrivaled chic. It's a grand thing to jump into for that unexpected jaunt, and is smartly at home in practically any daytime environment. Make it in a new printed linen or cotton, or a cravat silk. It's stunning, too, in plaided or striped sports seersucker or cotton.

Pattern 2212 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 takes 3½ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

POLITE INCARCERATION

"Do you think you can keep that desperado in jail?"

"I don't know," answered Cactus Joe. "We're doin' our best. We have fired two cooks he didn't like, given him credit at the licker dispensary and subscribed for all the magazines. But somehow we don't seem able to keep him satisfied."

Power

"Why did that actress marry her press agent?"

"She wanted security," said Miss Cayenne. "She let him understand that if his compliments did not continue to please her, he'd lose his home and his job both at once."

Just Out of Sight

"What do you think of all this investigation?"

"It makes me kind o' nervous," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "Prosperity is just around the corner. But so's a policeman."

Musical Appreciation

"Do you enjoy music?"

"Sometimes," answered Senator Sorghum. "There's nothing I like more than a brass band at a political rally where I am being featured."

Chic Triple Sheer Print's the Thing

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE perfect costume for all-around practical daytime wear has arrived! See it pictured herewith. It's the dress with a jacket that is fashioned of the now-so-stylish triple sheer print. The smartest, the neatest, the most sensible and serviceable, the most attractive and best looking are befitting words when it comes to describing these jacket outfits.

There is not the slightest doubt about the wisdom of including one of the new ingeniously designed jacketed costumes in one's spring and summer wardrobe. It will prove an ever faithful standby ready for every daytime occasion. In the illustration we are showing three particularly good-looking models. They are types that women can live in from morning to night and always look well groomed.

These brand new jacket styles are in that famous fabric, triple sheer of bemberg, which is expensive in looks but not in cost. The material is pure dye, cool, washable, or dry-cleans perfectly, if you so prefer. Furthermore, it may be pressed with a hot iron without fear of pulling or slipping at the seams. And, oh, joy of joys, it is practically wrinkle proof and resistant to perspiration.

The extremely good-looking jacket suit to the right in the group is the sort that is ready to go places at a moment's notice. White pique spaghetti cordings and fastenings effectively trim the navy-with-white (other color combinations are available) sheer of bemberg material. Bandings of self-fabric are stitched row-and-row on a net foundation for the sleeves, the same also effectively used in the yoke of the dress. This treatment which has to do with appliques and stitched bandings and folds of the dress print on net backgrounds is one which is being played up by designers throughout current styling.

A flattering jacket costume in a new flower-patterned triple sheer with collar of organdie applique on a foundation of mousseline de soie is pictured to the left. Shirring accents shoulders, sleeves, and pockets. Shirring is very popular just now. It is the fashion to wear flowers, too, which is why this charming young woman has pinned a cluster of dainty posies at her throat.

What's more, fashion goes so far as to suggest "sets" of flowers. That is to say, a gardenia on one's hat is matched with a boutonniere of gardenias. More flower news is to the effect that the floral motif is to be changed to tune in with the mood and the color scheme of the costume. Pin violets on your hat today, wearing matching flowers on your coat lapel or on the bodice of your frock. Perhaps bright field flowers is choice for the day following, or if you would flaunt the favorite flower of the moment, it's the carnation.

As you can see, looking at the costume centered in the picture, a block print in triple sheer of bemberg has a heap o' swank about it. The brief jacket is styled in cape effect, and the yoke of the slim frock alternates narrow stripes of self-material spaced with the net foundation to which they are stitched. Her lovely summery chapeau has gone very feminine what with its flowers and ribbons and a big floppy brim.

GLAMOR OF LACE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Lace has been shown in beautiful creations at every Paris collection this season. This very choice formal is of salmon pink lace, the full transparent skirt showing the slim, color-matched slip beneath. The sash of velvet ribbon is also in the identical salmon pink. Three strands of graduated pearls, a rhinestone bracelet and a pearl bracelet are the complementing jewelry notes.

PLEATED SKIRTS IN CHIFFON NEW STYLE

The tidal wave that has brought in more width for skirts has also brought in pleats. This type of fuller skirt is available in daytime and evening fashions, although the evening skirt version is being seen more often at present. It is a fashion that may be said to have come out of the emphasis on floating chiffon skirts, for most of the pleated styles so far are done in chiffon.

There is a particular genre in chiffon and pleats that goes with sunburst pleats, entire skirts and bodices also pleated—very Grecian, and reminiscent of the sunburst evening skirts which Mainbocher and Louiseboulanger offered in evening frocks at their openings.

But there are other interpretations of the pleated idea, in front fullness or back fullness, in those concentrated panel godets that are used often for adding width this season.

Coarse Novelty Straws Take Lead in Millinery

It is the way of hats to be anything and everything but ordinary. One of the new lines—it's impossible to designate any one type as the newest—is the hat with a brim which projects forward. Beret types are draped that way.

Coarse novelty straws, some shiny, some rough, are everywhere, but so, too, are Milans. There are any number of stitched taffeta hats and unusual felts.

The long threatened return of trimming has come. Milliners have followed the lead of the couturiere and are trimming with flowers.

Formal Swagger Coat

The formal swagger coat is a piquant newcomer. Done in woolens that vary from black to palest blue, with full sleeves and soft collars, they flare and swing above the most elegant of afternoon dresses.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for June 2

OUR DAY OF WORSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Psalm 100; John 4:20-24; Colossians 3:15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Lord's Day.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Our Lord's Day.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Should We Do on Sunday?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What We Do When We Really Worship.

I. The Origin of the Sabbath (Gen. 2:2, 3).

When God had completed the heavens and the earth he desisted from creative action. Since his creative work was finished in six days, he ceased from action on the seventh day, which was, therefore, called the Sabbath or rest day. The Sabbath was not a Mosaic but an Edenic institution. It is older by centuries than the Sabbath given to Israel at Sinai.

II. The Sabbath Given to Israel (Exod. 20:8-11).

It was made a peculiar sign of covenant relation between the chosen people and God (Deut. 5:11-15). It enjoins a twofold obligation:

1. Work through six days (v. 9). Work was God's primary thought for man (Gen. 2:15). It expresses man's normal condition. The command to work six days is just as binding as the command to rest on the seventh day.

2. Rest on the seventh day (v. 10). There must be cessation from work on the Sabbath. Since God gave the example and then sanctified the day, it should be kept holy. It was not only to give relief to the body, but to be a time when man's thoughts would be turned to God. It was designed to keep fresh in man's mind the consciousness of God and his mercies. It was thus made for man's well-being (Mark 2:27).

III. The First Day of the Week (Acts 20:7).

The early Christians met on the first day of the week to break the bread of fellowship and to worship God. Paul used this assembly as an occasion to preach the gospel. Doubtless this became the day of rest and worship in honor of the Lord's resurrection.

IV. True Worship Taught (John 4:20-24).

1. True worship is not confined to a particular place (vv. 21, 22). The place is unimportant. The all-important thing is to have the right conception of God as revealed through the Jews. Since God is omnipresent, the true worshiper can hold intercourse with him anywhere and everywhere.

2. It must be spiritual (vv. 23, 24). God is Spirit. Therefore, only those who through regeneration have a spiritual nature can truly worship God.

V. A Psalm of Worship (Ps. 100).

1. Whom to worship (v. 1). Worship should be rendered to God, for he alone is worthy.

2. The spirit of worship (v. 2). Worship should be joyful. This joy should be manifest in the singing of praises to God.

3. Who should worship (v. 1). All the world should worship, not merely the Jews, but all nations. The peculiar mission of the Jews was to call all nations to the worship of the true God.

4. Reasons for worship (vv. 3-5). God should be worshiped because he is God. Being God, he is our Creator, Preserver, and Savior.

VI. The Soul Poise of the True Worshiper (Col. 3:15-17).

1. Peace rules the life (v. 15). The one joined to Christ by faith and resting in his finished work is at peace with God and should be at peace with all members of the body whose head is Christ.

2. Gives thanks to God (v. 15). In spite of all troubles which beset the Christian, they should all be drowned in his constant giving of thanks to God.

3. Christ's Word to dwell in the heart (v. 16). It is not enough to know the truth; the very words of Christ must be made real in experience. They must be made to dwell, that is, be at home in the heart.

4. The definite function of the Christian (v. 16). It is to teach and warn others. Christ's words dwelling in the believer will result in blessing to others. The Christian should always maintain a joyous attitude.

5. The supreme motive (v. 17). All that the Christian does and says should be for the glory of Christ. The enthronement of Christ as the Lord of life means that all the Christian's duties are performed with the consciousness of union with Christ. He knows that his life belongs to Christ, who died that he might live.

Be Cheerful

What do the flowers say, that nod at you from field and garden and lane? I think they say "Be cheerful; look as bright as you can. Leave off frowning, and cheer other people up; smiles cost nothing, but can often lift the shadows and bless the heart."

Friendship

Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go:

Lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul.—Prov. 22:24, 25

Life Span Depends Upon Occupation, Figures Show

How long people live depends largely on what kind of work they do. That conclusion has been drawn from statistics recently made public in England. Chances of long life are believed to be best among clergymen and farmers. Eighty-two per thousand of the clergy in England are still following useful careers after they have passed seventy, and 66 per thousand of English farmers go on working after reaching three score and ten. There are in England 1,300,000 people of seventy and over actively employed, thanks to greater knowledge of the art of living than their fathers possessed. One-third of the adults have the expectation of passing the seventieth milestone. Bank officials and insurance agents are particularly long-lived and so are established writers. Three out of every five of them live to be seventy and over. Grave-digging is another of the healthful occupations. The English insurance premium for workers' compensation has recently been substantially reduced among grave-diggers. In England the most "dangerous" of all professions is the theatrical. One actor out of every six dies before he is seventy and one out of 13 succumbs to heart trouble.

Stand Up and Type!

How old is the typewriter?

It was stated the other day that March was the diamond jubilee of the typewriter, whose inventor, C. L. Scholes, signed a contract with the Remington firm, of Ilion, U. S. A., in March, 1873. The first completed typewriters, however, were not put on the market until a year later.

But the centenary of the typewriter might also be celebrated this year. A patent for a writing machine was taken out by a Frenchman, Xavier Progin, in 1833, and altogether this was a crude affair, it embodied the principle of the present type-bar machines, of which it can claim to be the original.

Even the 1874 typewriters would look fierce enough to the modern typist. They had 4-foot-high cast-iron stands, and looked rather like the old-fashioned sewing machines, complete with treadle. The latter had to be pressed down with the operator's foot to lift the carriage at the end of a line. And the typist had to stand while he was using the machine.—London Answers.

BETTER HOME'S CLUB MEETS

The Better Home's Club met for its regular monthly meeting, Thursday evening, May 23, with Mrs. J. H. Cunningham and Mrs. E. D. Stokem acting as joint hostess at the home of Mrs. Cunningham. The meeting was opened by the club singing the song, "America", and repeating the club motto. Eighteen members answered roll call with household hints. After the business session the program was turned over to the program committee. Miss Mary Campbell read "The Garden that grows around our home". Mrs. Stokem conducted a flower contest in which Mrs. Ada Gorman won the prize. The club was invited to meet with Mrs. Davidson for its next meeting. Each member is requested to bring a small gift to exchange at that time. The hostesses served a delicious ice course.

Mr. Hugh Gorman, of Evansville, Ind., is visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Gorman.

Miss Margaret Davis, a member of the faculty of the Lanette High School, is home for her vacation.

Milk Cows Need Grain and Greens

AUBURN, Ala.—Cows producing over two gallons of milk per day should be fed grain in addition to pastures if high production is to be maintained, advises F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist.

"Three parts corn and cob meal, 1 part wheat bran, and 1 part cottonseed meal makes an excellent grain mixture to use where mio milk cows are on pasture," he says.

Millions Lost by Politically Operated Power System. Taxpayers Must Make Up Huge Losses

Ontario's politically operated power system, held up for years as a model of government ownership, now faces a grave crisis. Instead of a successful venture, the New York Sun reports that the tax free Ontario system has added hundreds of millions to Ontario's public debt. This deficit must be paid by Ontario taxpayers. Here is the story:

"The cause of public ownership of electrical utilities in the United States receives a genuine setback as the American public begins to understand what is happening to the blue-ribbon baby of public ownership, the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario. That is the largest municipal supply system in the world, often held up as an example of what governmental operation can accomplish in the utility field. But its record indisputably shows that political management and an unsound economic basis can get the strongest of such institutions into trouble.

"Theoretically the corporation exists for much the same purpose as that proposed for various 'yardstick' enterprises in the United States—that of furnishing electrical current at low rates to consumers through public management and control. Actually it has added hundreds of millions of dollars to the public debt of Ontario which, on a per capita basis, scarcely can be said to compare favorably with that of New York or Quebec (or Alabama) where private management is the rule.

"The commission has found itself with an unmarketable surplus on hand and has been compelled to face heavy annual deficits.

"Rather than risk unpopularity by raising rates the commission began to dig into its reserves. But this did not affect the mounting annual deficits.

"Meanwhile communities in Ontario using municipal power on which no tax is paid have found their burdens of debt steadily growing heavier. These would gladly use tax money from electrical services if they only could devise some means of collecting it.

"As one way to help the commission out of its difficulties the Hepburn government — declaring that Hydro has been a 'political tool' which was 'nearly ruined by mismanagement and inefficiency'—has resorted to the drastic expedient of repudiating contracts negotiated by an agency of the government. Our own repudiation of the gold clause in Federal bonds estops us on this side of the border from raising any question as to the morality of this procedure."—Adv. Alabama Power Co.

SHELBY COUNTY HI SCHOOL CLOSES; 25 RECEIVE DIPLOMA

The Senior Class of Shelby County High School held its graduation exercises Wednesday, May 29th, with twenty-five being awarded diplomas. The graduates are as follows: Beatrice Looney, Wilma Holcombe, Laura Smith, Katherine Rush, Kermit Pearson, Thelma McGiboney, Miriam McMillen, Kathleen Mooney, Pearson West, Vinnie Mae Lyon, Florence McGiboney, Maude Simmons, Sammie Pate, Mary Elizabeth McCarley, Marene Edmondson, Floyd Mooney, Leon Templin, Preston Wilder, Jeanette Niven, J. B. Turner, Ellen Ruth Isbell, Hugh Miller, Vertnor Barnett, Robert Bates and Quinlan Smith.

Bill Sims who was absent on account of illness will be awarded a diploma as soon as he returns and takes his examinations.

Doctor Edgar L. Morphet, of the State Department of Education, gave an interesting address challenging the members of the graduating slass in two ways—either to accept the world as a terrible place in which to live or to accept it as a place of varied opportunities.

One of the largest audiences ever to witness the awarding of the diplomas at Shelby County High, were present for this occasion.

This graduation exercise was a crowning fete of the crowning commencement program. The Senior Class play, "The Red-Headed Step Child", was efficiently directed by Miss Elizabeth Souders, Head of the English Department. The members of the cast proved their talent by the splendid work done on their various parts. The public sanctioned this performance as one of the best plays ever given at Shelby High.

Rev. J. Ivey Edwards, of Jacksonville, Alabama, preached the Baccalaureate sermon, Sunday, May 26.

Class night was presented Tuesday, May 28th, following a reception given by the Seniors for their mothers and fathers. This class night was a rather unique program which presented each individual and his accomplishments during his four years of high school.

This class was one of unusual talent and ability. From this group leaders were selected for the various activities of school life. As a memorial gift to Shelby County High School, the class of 1935 left a beautiful red velvet curtain for the stage.

On Thursday morning certificates were awarded to the Junior High and the sixth grade students who had completed all their work. The following junior high students were awarded certificates: Fannie Mae Collum, Louise Crowson, Nadeen Kirkland, Dorothy Miller, Doris Pearson, Ruth Smith, Alma Horne, Upton Baker, Robert Blackerby, Howard Connell, James Lee Crawford, J. D. Faulkner, Frank Martin, Frank McKnight, Billy Riddle, Leonard Talton, Charles Thornburg and Wales Wallace.

The following sixth grade students received certificates of graduation from the elementary school: Mildred Baker, Dora Butterworth, Miles Blair, David Crowe, Marie Cosper, Ruth Cooper, Louise Messer, Louise Smith, Grover Monroe, W. F. Payne, Jr., Frank Richards, Graham Walton, Houston Farr, Faye Nell Polk, Mildred Gibson, Christine Peeples, Lilly Moore, Bernice Sturdivant, Florine Wise, Oleta Wells, Annie Edna Walton, Billie Jean Young, Sula Mae Tucker, Margie Howard, Maxine Bradley, Juanita Glover, Sara Neil Stinson, Rose Lee Collins, Sam Lester, Helen Gardner, Howard Holcombe, Marjorie Templin, James Jancher, and Vivian Nolen.

Siluria Cotton Mill Buys Camp Okomo

Camp Okomo, located on Coosa River, has been purchased by the Buck Creek Cotton Mill Company, of Siluria, and will be used as an outing club for its employees.

Manager J. T. Phillips plans a modern and up-to-date club and extensive improvements are contemplated for the improvement of this property.

The Gordon & White Real Estate & Insurance Company, of Columbiana, handled the deal.

Cotton Rental Checks Being Issued Faster

AUBURN, Ala.—First cotton rental checks are moving out much faster this year than they did in 1934, report AAA officials in Washington. Through May 20th, 319,999 checks representing payments totaling $10,925,495 had been prepared for mailing compared with only 117,109 checks totaling $4,739,857 to the same date last year.

Officials Want Cotton Legislation Extended

AUBURN, Ala.—President Roosevelt and members of the senate and house agriculture committees have agreed that the Bankhead compulsory cotton production control bill should be continued for another year.

Senator Bankhead, author of the bill, expresses belief that "the administration will give another loan of 12 cents a pound on this year's crop" if the extension bill is passed.

E. H. CHILDS NAMED NEW COUNTY HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPAL

At a meeting of the Shelby County Board of Education on Friday, May 31st, Mr. E. H. Childs, of Piedmont, Alabama, was elected to succeed J. M. Lawson as Principal of the Shelby County High School in Columbiana.

Mr. Childs comes to Columbiana with high recommendations and with educational advantages which should qualify him to fill this position in a creditable manner. He was for four years Principal of Piedmont High School, after which he was elected City Superintendent of Schools. He is a graduate of Birmingham Southern College and of the University of Alabama.

Mr. and Mrs. Childs will move to Columbiana within the next few weeks.

Summer School At Shelby County High Will Open Next Monday

Summer School will open at the Shelby County High School next Monday morning at eight o'clock. Courses will be offered for senior high and junior high students. Arrangements will be made to take care of some elementary pupils who wish to make up work.

Those high school students who wish to attend are requested to report to the Principal's office Saturday, to check on their credits and subjects, if possible.

MRS. W. W. WYATT CALLED BY DEATH THURS., MAY 30TH

HARPERSVILLE, Ala. — Citizens of Shelby County, and life long friends of Mrs. W. W. Wyatt, of Harpersville, will regret to learn of her passing on Thursday afternoon, May 30th, 1935.

Funeral services were conducted from Harpersville Baptist Church on Saturday morning at 10:30 o'clock with the Rev. Franks and Dykes officiating. Interment at the Harpersville cemetery.

Surviving Mrs. Wyatt, are her husband; three sons, Adam, Frank and Leonard Wyatt.

The Democrat joins a host of friends in extending sympathy to the bereaved family.

IN MEMORY OF JUDGE E. S. LYMAN

Whereas God in His infinite wisdom has called from our midst our trusted friend and eminent fellow-citizen, Judge E. S. Lyman, and

Whereas we recognize the high type of Christian character which he possessed and the many invaluable services he has rendered to our town and community, and

Whereas we hold in high esteem Mr. Edward Lyman, son of the deceased, who is now Mayor of Montevallo.

Therefore, be it resolved by the Town Council of Montevallo,

1. That we shall miss the inspiring presence, the wise counsel, and the helpful leadership of our departed friend;

2. That we shall seek to emulate the noble qualities of character and the excellent principles of citizenship so well exemplified by Judge Lyman;

3. That we extend to Mrs. E. S. Lyman, widow of the deceased, to Mr. Edward Lyman, Mayor of Montevallo, to all members of the immediate family, and to all relatives and friends, the deepest sympathy of our hearts and the consolation of our sincere friendship.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the Shelby County Reporter, a copy to The Shelby County Democrat, a copy to The Montevallo Times, and a copy spread on the Minute Book of the Town Council of this Town.

(Signed) Members of the Town Council of the Town of Montevallo.

Wean Pigs When Eight Weeks Old

AUBURN, Ala.—Pigs should be weaned at 8 weeks of age, says F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist, who reports that "if they have been properly developed they should weigh approximately 40 pounds at this age."

Mr. Burns also advises that "plenty of shade and an abundance of fresh, clean water are as important as feed for livestock during the hot summer months."

Sulphur Dust Will Control Redbugs

AUBURN, Ala.—Redbugs (chiggers) may be controlled by dusting a small amount of sulphur in one's socks, stockings, or shoes before going into places, such as woods, infested with this insect, announces Prof. J. M. Robinson, entomologist of the Alabama Experiment Station. "Annoyance by these tiny mites will be reduced if this precaution is taken."

ALLEN-TURNER

Of wide and cordial interest to a large circle of friends in Shelby County, comes the announcement of the marriage of Miss Katherine Allen, of Cahaba Valley, and E. B. Turner, of Columbiana, which took place in Montevallo on Sunday afternoon, June 2nd, 1935.

Miss Allen is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Allen, a graduate of Alabama College, and one of Shelby County's most popular young women. Mr. Turner is prominently connected with the automobile industry of Shelby County and is a successful salesman with the Knox E. Woolley Motor Company.

After a short motor trip, Mr. and Mrs. Turner returned to Columbiana where they will make their future home.

June 15th Is Last Day For Girls To Try For Camp Scholarships

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The last date for applications for the scholarships offered to the Alabama College Camp for Girls is June 15th, according to Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, Director. An unprecedented number of inquiries have already been received by the camp officials and the largest enrollment in its history is expected. The dates of the camp are July 22nd to August 17th.

Three scholarships are offered for two full weeks at the camp, paying all but incidental fees and transportation.

The three counselors selected are Miss Jean Liston, an Alabama College graduate of 1931, head counselor; Miss Eleanor Rennie, a graduate in the Class of 1934, dramatic counselor; and Miss Lois Willoughby, who finished here this year, art counselor. Other counselors are to be appointed.

The camp is for girls from 10 to 18 years of age. It offers an added attraction in facilities through the availability of college dormitory, swimming pool, camp house, tennis courts, playing fields, gymnasium and recital halls.

An attractive booklet concerning the camp is being distributed to prospective campers by Dr. Steckel.

The following girls from Shelby County are considering attending the camp: Jean Letson, Columbiana; and Malleye Smith, Wilsonville.

BLANKS ARE READY FOR PUBLIC WORK LOANS IS REPORT

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Printed forms to apply for loans under the new set-up of the Public Works Administration are now available, H. S. Geismer, acting state Public Works Administration director, announced Wednesday, June 5th.

Three of the 15 members of the Washington PWA staff assigned to the state PWA organization arrived Tuesday, June 4th. They are Orville F. Rush, PWA attorney; his secretary, Miss Margaret Hall, and W. P. Roby, finance expert.

Mr. Geismer said he also has forms explaining the rules governing wages to be paid on projects carried on with funds in the $4,880,000,000 work-relief program.

Mills Trade Farmers Meal For Cotton Seed

Cotton oil mills throughout the state of Alabama are trading farmers more than a ton of cottonseed meal for a ton of cotton seed, R. J. Goode, State Commissioner of Agriculture, announces.

"In this connection," he writes Alabama farmers, "we wish to call your attention to the fact that Prof. J. C. Grimes, head of the Animal Industry Group, Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, has issued a pamphlet showing that money can be saved by feeding cottonseed meal to horses and mules in the proper and correct amount to maintain the desired condition and to provide for the necessary power demand during the different seasons of the year."

POPPY SALE IS GRAND SUCCESS

The Auxiliary of Shirley-Holloway Post No. 131, American Legion, wishes to thank the people of East Shelby County for their hearty cooperation in making Poppy Day an unqualified success.

We thank you for wearing the little red flower so patriotically; for the liberal donations you gave to such a noble cause; and especially do we wish to thank the young ladies who so kindly and enthusiastically aided us in the sale. (Signed)

COWS WIN EQUAL RIGHT WITH CARS TO ROAM ROADS

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The cow man has had greater influence than the motorist during this session of the legislature. Therefore, live stock will continue to have as much right on the public highway as a human being. The house agriculture committee has decided to indefinitely postpone action on the Hamner bill prohibiting live stock on the highways. This is a nice little dose of chloroform applied to a bill in which motorists felt great interest.

Hamner sought to protect human beings as they traveled the highways and contended that the running at large of live stock caused many accidents and a great loss of life in Alabama.

The motorists' association had urged passage of the bill. Live stock men who let their cattle roam the range made a bitter fight on the bill. They thought they would have a big demonstration against the measure at Cramton Bowl, but less than 300 attended the "demonstration". However, they didn't need any demonstration. They found the agriculture committee was with them.

The Alabama supreme court has ruled that under present laws a cow has as much right on the highway as a human being and until a law similar to that drawn by Hamner is enacted, it will continue to have that right.

ALABAMA COLLEGE SUMMER SCHOOL WILL OPEN JUNE 10

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—With an increased enrollment in prospect, according to Dean T. H. Napier, the twentieth Summer school at Alabama College will open June 10. This term will close July 22, while the second will close August 24.

Courses offered include work in art, bigology, chemistry, physics, education, English, history, home economics, mathematics, modern languages, music, physical education, psychology, typewriting, sociology and speech.

The Summer schedule of special meetings began last week with the annual Epworth League Assembly, which is to continue until June 5. During the first six weeks of the Summer session the Progressive Education Association will sponsor elementary and high school demonstration schools here. The association has assisted in such programs in various sections of the country for the past six years. General education board has provided a special grant in connection with the program at Alabama College.

The progressive education work at Alabama College has been well received during the three Summers. More than 200 teachers and supervisors have attended the full schedule in the past, while approximately 2,000 teachers, supervisors and superintendents have observed it. In addition, the Regional Conference on Progressive Education will again be held on the campus.

Dr. Willard W. Beatty, superintendent of schools at Bronxville, N. Y., will direct the high school program, while Dr. Alice V. Keliher, elementary supervisor of Hartford, Conn., will again have charge of the elementary program.

The Alabama Writers Conclave is scheduled for the week of June 17. The Progressive Educational Regional Conference will be held June 26-28. The Student Career Conference is listed for July 11-13. The School of Instruction for Vocational Home Economics Teachers has been announced for July 22-August 9, and the Alabama College Camp for Girls is planned for July 29-August 24.

Heavy Infestation of Boll Weevil Expected

AUBURN, Ala.—Climatic conditions during the past winter and this spring have been favorable to boll weevil development, says Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Experiment Station, in warning farmers that weevil infestations in Alabama may be heavy this year.

"If cloudy, rainy weather occurs frequently during the cotton growing season, weevils will be numerous," he said, in urging cotton growers to prepare now for controlling the weevil.

"When dusting is necessary, calcium arsenate should be applied with a dust gun at the rate of 5 or 6 pounds per acre," he continued. The only way to know whether or not boll weevils are numerous enough to warrant dusting is to make infestation counts of the squares." When ten or more out of each 100 squares counted are punctured the cotton should be dusted for weevils.

Debt Adjustment Committees Named

AUBURN, Ala.—To aid debt-burdened farmers in adjusting their debts to where they can pay them, local debt adjustment committees have been set up in every county in Alabama, reports J. Litt Edwards, chairman of the Alabama Farm Credits Council.

"The county committees are composed of three public-spirited citizens, serving without pay, who endeavor to bring about a voluntary and amicable composition of debts to the mutual benefits of both debtor and creditor", he said. "These committees consider and hold hearings on any individual farmer's debt problem at the request of either creditor or debtor.

Supreme Court Kills NRA and Farm Mortgage Moratorium Act—New Dealers, Congress and Business Uncertain About Future Action.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

THREE unanimous decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States shook the New Deal to its very foundations. In the first and most important, read by Chief Justice Hughes, the heart was cut out of the NRA, for the court ruled that the entire code structure of the act was invalid, the code making provisions being an unconstitutional delegation by congress of its authority to legislate to persons not connected with the government's legislative functions.

Chief Justice Hughes

By the ruling the exercise of congressional powers over commerce was definitely restricted to interstate commerce, or to such activities as have a provable direct connection with interstate commerce. The court held that no economic emergency could justify the breaking down of the limitations upon federal authority as prescribed by the Constitution or of those powers reserved to the state through the failure of the Constitution to place them elsewhere.

Next in importance was the decision read by Justice Brandeis, holding unconstitutional the Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage moratorium act. This law provided for a five year moratorium in the case of collapse of efforts to scale down a farmer's debts to a figure that would enable him to pay off his mortgage. The court held that under the Fifth amendment to the Constitution private property could not be taken without just compensation. There has been no previous instance, the court said, where a mortgage was forced to relinquish property to a mortgagor free of lien unless the debt was paid in full.

In the third decision President Roosevelt's dismissal of the late William E. Humphrey from the federal trade commission was held illegal because the President did not remove Mr. Humphrey for the statutory grounds of inefficiency, neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but, as the President stated, because their minds did not meet upon the policies or administration of the commission. The court held that trade commissioners' terms are fixed by law.

THERE was consternation and confusion among the administration forces in Washington, and no one could say immediately just how much the New Deal had been damaged or what could be done to repair the damage to its structure. Donald Richberg, chairman of the national industrial recovery board, after a White House conference, issued a statement saying that "all methods of compulsory enforcement of the codes will be immediately suspended."

The question of the constitutionality of the Wagner labor disputes bill, passed by the senate, was raised by the NRA decision. The opinion was widely expressed that collective bargaining now cannot be enforced in any business enterprise by federal statute.

In the senate demands were voiced to recommit to the committee on agriculture the amendments strengthening the AAA. Senator W. E. Borah said that the NRA decision clearly raises the question of the validity of much AAA procedure.

BUSINESS was as confused as congress and the administration after the killing of NRA. Heads of many large employing corporations intimated they would not make wage reductions or lengthen the work hours just because the way was open for such action, but always there was the qualifying statement, "It depends on what our competitors do." The big concerns would prefer to maintain the code hours and wages, but the smaller merchants and manufacturers, who were hardest hit by the code requirements, might depart from them enough to demoralize prices.

Among the dozens of national trade associations whose officers urged members to maintain wages and otherwise to continue the status quo are those of the automobile manufacturers, automobile dealers, chemical industry, retail dry goods dealers, cotton manufacturers, cement makers, oil industry, wholesale grocers, and grocery chain store distributors.

Harper Sibley, recently elected president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, called upon American industry and business men to preserve for the present wages and work hours established under the NRA.

Instead of cutting wages Standard Oil company of New Jersey and the Tide Water Oil company announced an increase of 5 per cent in salaries and wages, effective June 1.

The United Textile Workers, 350,000 in number, threaten to strike if any mills cut wages. And there is also a chance that 450,000 bituminous coal miners will go on strike because there is no wage agreement with the operators and a scale conference collapsed.

The liquor business was thrown wide open without any federal regulation except that exerted by the Treasury department in the collection of taxes. Officials of the federal alcohol control administration said that the Supreme court's NRA ruling took away from the FACA every iota of control it had over the distilling business.

ACTING with surprising suddenness, the senate passed the Copeland-Tugwell food, drug and cosmetic bill, which had been modified to meet the objections of Senators Clark, Bailey and Vandenberg. Dr. Copeland said he believed it would get through the house without difficulty. President Roosevelt favors the measure.

The bill greatly increases the scope of the 1906 food and drug act, in the definitions of adulterated or misbranded articles, and provides penalties of a year in jail or a $1,000 fine for violations.

It was designed originally to permit the secretary of agriculture to order wholesale seizures, which would permit the destruction of a business, if he deemed the articles in question adulterated. As amended, however, only a single article may be seized pending a court hearing. Exceptions may be made if there is "imminent danger" to public health.

Originally, also, the bill provided severe penalties for publishers and radio broadcasting companies, as well as advertisers, for violations of regulations to be laid down by the Department of Agriculture. This was changed so that no publisher, radio broadcasting company, advertising agency, or other medium for the dissemination of advertising may be deemed to have violated the "false advertising" provisions unless they refuse to furnish the name and address of the advertiser.

FRANK C. WALKER'S present job as head of the division of allotments and information in connection with the work-relief program is not so important as had been expected, and probably by the end of the year or earlier he will be able to delegate his duties to others. Then, according to current rumors, he will enter the President's cabinet as postmaster general, to succeed Jim Farley.

Frank C. Walker

Mr. Farley has definitely decided to retire from the cabinet—voluntarily, it is said—so that he can devote all his time and energy to directing the campaign of Mr. Roosevelt for renomination and re-election. He expects to remain not only as chairman of the national Democratic committee but also as chairman of the New York state committee. In order that he may have an income he plans to make a business connection with an important organization.

There has been a lot of talk about Mr. Farley's alleged ambition to be governor of New York. Melvin C. Eaton, Republican state chairman, dares him to run for that position.

ONLY nine states of the Central West will send delegates to the "Grass Roots" convention of the Republican party which opens June 10 in Springfield, Ill., but the meeting will nevertheless be rather national in scope, for it will be attended by unofficial delegates from other states and by national leaders of the party. It was believed that Harrison E. Spangler, national committeeman from Iowa, would be made temporary chairman and as such would deliver the keynote address. Others on the tentative program for speeches are Arthur M. Hyde, former governor of Missouri and secretary of agriculture in the Hoover cabinet, and Edward Hayes of Decatur, Ill., former national commander of the American Legion.

A. M. Hyde

The keynote address, according to reports, will take inventory of American affairs under the Roosevelt New Deal and indicate the trend of the party in opposition. Mr. Hyde is to talk on the Great Emancipator at the Lincoln tomb in Oak Ridge cemetery, and Hayes is expected to deal with the theories of the Republican party on constitutional government.

ADOLF HITLER has proposed that Germany, Great Britain, France, Italy and Belgium enter into a multilateral western European pact against aerial aggression. It follows the lines of the proposed Anglo-French air pact and would do for the nations named what the Locarno pact does with the land forces for France, Germany and Belgium.

KELLY PETILLO of California won the 500-mile auto race at the Indianapolis Speedway, setting a new record with an average speed of 108.24 miles an hour. Clay Weatherly of Cincinnati lost control of his car and was killed.

HAWAII was treated to a magnificent display of American naval power in the Pacific that continued through two days. First the forty planes that had taken part in the mid-Pacific maneuvers returned and the entire armada of 225 planes participated in an aerial review. Then the vessels of the fleet returned and moved to Pearl Harbor, the great naval base, which they all entered in a crucial test of the harbor's capacity as an anchorage. The navy's largest submarines were with the battleships and cruisers, and there were 700 marines on the target ship Utah.

Navy Memorial day in Japan, the thirtieth anniversary of Admiral Togo's destruction of the Russian fleet, brought forth a pamphlet from the navy's propaganda bureau which made significant allusions to the United States. It said:

"Then Russia was the rival and the danger. Today that is changed. We have had to face in another direction. We are confronting another great sea power which is increasing its navy with Japan as the target.

"We need a navy sufficient to protect our sea routes to the continent of Asia and to face the menace in the direction of the great ocean. That is why Japan demands parity with the greatest navies. If Japan's just and reasonable demands are rejected by the powers, causing failure of the efforts to reach a new naval agreement and leading to a naval construction race, the responsibility will not be ours. In such case the only thing for Japan to do is to resort to resolute measures for self-protection."

THOUGH the League of Nations council ended its session in Geneva with the hope that it had arranged matters so that war between Italy and Ethiopia would be averted, the prospects for such a settlement are not bright. Under pressure from Great Britain and France, Mussolini consented to recognize the league's jurisdiction over the quarrel and agreed to arbitration. But immediately thereafter Il Duce told the chamber of deputies in Rome he would not allow Germany to make of Ethiopia "a pistol perennially pointed at us in case of trouble in Europe" and asserted he was ready to take the supreme responsibility to sustain by every means Italy's position in east Africa. He alluded bitterly to Britain and France, and indicated that he believed that Ethiopia was perfecting its army with the help of European powers inimical to Italy.

Benito Mussolini

Following this address, Mussolini ordered the mobilization of thousands of officers and technical experts of the class of 1912.

SAN DIEGO'S beautiful world's fair, the California Pacific exposition, was thrown open to the public practically completed. Thousands of visitors moved along the ancient El Camino Real to Balboa park on the opening day and viewed with delight the handsome buildings and interesting exhibits. The climax of the opening ceremonies came in the evening when President Roosevelt addressed the throng by radio from his study in the White House.

JAPAN, ready to take control over more Chinese territory, delivered to the government at Nanking an ultimatum charging that Dictator Chiang Kai-shek, as well as Gen. Yu Hsueh-chung, chairman of Hopei province and commander of Chinese troops in north China, were directly responsible for a long list of alleged infractions of the Tangku truce signed May 31, 1933, marking the conclusion of the Sino-Japanese hostilities over Manchuria.

Dispatches from Tokyo said Japanese officials admitted plans had been made to include Peiping and Tientsin within the demilitarized zone, which at present lies north of the two cities. Threats were made to bomb and occupy both those cities.

FIGHTING desperately to save the franc and prevent inflation, Premier Flandin of France staked everything on a demand that he be given dictatorial financial powers until the end of the year, and lost. The chamber of deputies voted against him, 353 to 202, after a dramatic debate, and Flandin and his cabinet immediately resigned. M. Fernand Bouisson, who was committed to the support of the franc, was called on to form a new government.

DR. ALAN ROY DAFOE, Judge J. A. Valin and Minister of Welfare David Croll of Ontario, guardians under the king of the Dionne quintuplets, put on a party for those famous babies on their first birthday, and there was a great crowd of visitors in the little town of Callender. But Mr. and Mrs. Dionne, resentful because the infants have been removed from their charge and home to a special hospital across the street, refused to attend the festivities. The five little girls, who are in good health and growing rapidly, were displayed briefly and were permitted to crow or cry into the radio microphone.

CARLOS MENDIETA, president of Cuba, has announced that he will not be a candidate next winter to succeed himself. Therefore the race is expected to narrow down to Miguel Mariano Gomez, twice mayor of Havana, and Mario G. Menocal, former president of the island republic.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—The question of new taxes, often hinted, though never given much official notice, is right on top of the heap again as a result of the bonus situation.

Every one on the inside in Washington, providing his vision was not distorted by what he wanted, instead of what cold reason would demonstrate, has known for some time that some form of bonus legislation would pass and that its passage, unless the whole Roosevelt formula was to be set aside, would necessitate additional taxes.

In the President's mind, the bonus is on all fours with the cotton processing tax.

"Where would the money come from?" his question to New England and southern demands for repeal of the cotton tax, applies equally to the drain on the treasury that a bonus compromise would make.

The only change in the situation is that the probability now is the compromise will result in taking several hundred million dollars more out of the treasury than had been figured up to a few weeks ago. For example, it has been known for some time that, despite the President's views about the bonus, he would be glad to compromise for something like $1,200,000,000.

But the prospect today is that it will take at least $1,500,000,000 to turn the trick.

Incidentally, the President put a powerful lever in the hands of the bonus advocates in insisting on a larger amount when he discussed that idea of $750 invested now in a government bond amounting to $1,000 by 1945. If he had used the legal bank rate of interest, 6 per cent, in calculating the "present value" of the bonus certificates, he could have said $500. Actually a little less.

Low Interest Rates

It is the first time that the low interest rates the government has been moving heaven and earth to bring about have worked against the treasury instead of for it. Over a stretch of ten years a difference of 1 per cent in interest makes a great deal of difference. Especially if the interest is compounded, as it is in the illustration the President used. The sixth grade arithmetics used to tell us that money at 5 per cent doubles itself in 12 years, compounded.

It is not definitely known just what the administration will recommend in the way of new taxes. Congress leans heavily to heavy inheritance taxes. This fits in with the Roosevelt policy of whittling away at inherited fortunes. It is in tune with heavy income taxes, reduced interest on investments, smaller profits for business, etc.

In fact, it is almost a necessary part of New Deal philosophy. For granted that the Roosevelt program for small profits, etc., would work, the whole tendency would be to freeze existing conditions, preventing any new fortunes from being created, but, by the safety thrown around existing enterprises, tending also to preserve existing fortunes. Assuming they were big enough to stand losses in certain directions—utility earnings, for example.

So it appears likely that heavier inheritance taxes will be one of the surest factors in the new tax program.

Under consideration also, though with no formal blessing as yet from the White House, is the proposed tax on life insurance premiums. This would be 1 per cent, but would be paid by the companies direct. Policy holders of course would really pay it, for their dividends and policy reductions would naturally be less. There is plenty of political dynamite in this one.

Even more protests would be caused by another tax under consideration by the treasury experts. This would reduce the present exemption of 40 cent on movie admissions to 10 cents!

Real "Drive" Possible

If three thousand farmers just happen to decide to pay a visit to Washington, enjoy the sights, tell congress to pass the Agricultural Adjustment administration amendments, and listen to a speech by the President, with no organization to stir them up, no one to pay their expenses—the whole thing just out of a blue sky, so to speak—what may happen when there is really a "drive"?

Washington may see the answer.

For sooner or later there is going to be a serious move to reduce, or maybe eliminate, these benefit payments. Already there is a strong conviction—and those who hold it are getting reinforcements all the time—that the whole system of benefits is wrong. Wrong in that in the long run it is not a good thing for the farmers themselves.

Then there is another large group who want to curtail or eliminate the benefits for an entirely different reason. This group does not think the treasury can stand the strain indefinitely. Or, to put it another way, that the taxpayers (for the benefits are paid out of processing taxes) cannot stand the strain.

Put the two groups together and you have a pretty fair nucleus. It would not take much augmenting, say next year, to have a majority in congress for curtailment if not elimination.

Then there would be a real march on Washington by the embattled farmers.

Those who have considered the whole problem say that it is very unlikely prior to election. They say the President would never dare to attempt to cut off the farmers' payments until the re-election is safely achieved.

That, naturally, is just opinion. It is the ordinary mental process of a politician—one who knows that Franklin D. Roosevelt is also a politician, and who cannot conceive his doing anything so unpolitic as kicking a lot of perfectly good voters in the face just on the eve of their going to the polls.

Doubtful Logic

They may be right and they may be wrong. But it was the same sort of logic that led many allegedly astute political minds to assume that the President would not veto the bonus bill. Including Huey Long. Including Father Coughlin. Including many others. So that maybe this logic cannot be taken at its full face value.

It might be said that the two things are very different. That vetoing a bonus bill never yet has hurt a President. It certainly did not hurt Coolidge. There is grave doubt that it hurt Hoover, although difficult to prove. Most veterans who happen also to be politicians will tell you privately that Hoover was hurt a great deal more by his handling of the bonus marchers than by his veto of the bonus bill.

But the present situation presents the sort of thing that has seldom been tested. It is not a case of refusing to try a scheme about which there is violent difference of opinion, such as the equalization fee idea of the McNary-Haugen bill. It is a case of cutting off money payments, which were already being received by a large class. And that might be different!

Different Story

Lots of water has flowed downstream since the good old days when both house and senate rushed through the administration's security and stock exchange regulation bill. That measure, drafted by two of Felix Frankfurter's boys, Cohen and Landis, was put through in the early days—when President Roosevelt's wishes did not have to be expressed by the king himself to become law. The word of any of his ministers, or his lieutenants, was enough. And everybody knew that Frankfurter's boys were close to the throne.

But what a different story now! Which does not mean the bonus—that always was outside the ordinary orbit of administration progam material. Nor the World court. Nor the St. Lawrence seaway if and when it comes up.

No, the difference shows up on just the ordinary run of the mine, so to speak, legislation. And the answer is two fold.

First, the legislators on Capitol Hill, have discovered that the king's ministers may be very powerful for a time, but their time is apt to be short. Douglas is gone—lives in outer darkness. Not forgotten—far from it—but just out of the picture. Hugh Johnson is out, still praising the "Chief," but kicking the shins of the king's ministers vigorously. Though of course loyalty always had lain to the king, not the king's ministers. The most loyal subject could always deplore the folly of the king's advisers. That has been true since the dawn of history. It is not a development of the Roosevelt administration.

Now the most powerful minister in Washington is not very frightening to the bad boys on Capitol Hill if they think he is apt to be out of the picture say six months hence. That's the way politics is. There is no use trying to please anybody who won't be around to return the favor later on. Especially if pleasing this person in temporary authority means irritating folks back home who just may remember it on election day. The most imposing figure loses impressiveness if the pedestal is noticed to be wobbly. And the national legislators have come to the conclusion that there is not a single firm foundation under a single one of Roosevelt's present advisers.

May Still Be Around

This is probably a very jaundiced view—on their part. It may be that lots of them will be around, and powerful, a year hence. But the fact that so many have slipped prevents any one of them from speaking with the old note of authority, so far as Capitol Hill is concerned.

Congress abolished its lame ducks. After a senator or member of the house is defeated he no longer can either vote or debate. But there is a certain lame duck suspicion attached to all the brain trusters.

Then there is another reason. In the early days of the Roosevelt administration the jobs done in drafting legislation were very workmanlike indeed. As, for example, the aforementioned Cohen and Landis securities and stock exchange regulation bill. Whether one approved the ideas behind the measure or not, there was no discounting the skill with which the precise intent of the framers was spread on the statute boks.

But that day has passed. For example, take the social security measure—old age pensions and unemployment insurance—sent to Capitol Hill by Secretary Perkins. If there was anything right about it in its first form, it was a surprise. It was supposed to come up with the full White House blessing. But it was soon discovered that the figures did not add up. The calculations were weird. The astronomical figures were juggled until no two persons could agree within three of four billion dollars as of a day certain in the future.

Now this was never formally admitted. But the word got round. And there has been a shocking loss of confidence in the divine origin of administration measures ever since.

CHAUFFEUR PLANS TO CONTEST SUIT ON HEIRESS WIFE

"Upstairs" and "Backstairs" Fail to Get on Common Romantic Ground.

Washington.—George Staunton Scarlette, modern "Admirable Crichton," has disappeared, after announcing through attorneys that he would fight the suit of his heiress wife for annulment of their runaway marriage.

Thus ends another attempt of "upstairs" and "backstairs" to get on common romantic ground, in accordance with the theme which inspired Sir James M. Barrie's famous play, "The Admirable Crichton," the story of the millionaire's daughter who fell in love with a family servant.

Wealthy Howard de Walden Cooke of Chevy Chase, Maryland, Washington's most exclusive suburb, secured the services of George Staunton Scarlette as chauffeur. Scarlette is a handsome lad in his early twenties.

The Cooke girls, Jane, eighteen, and Anne, twenty-one, were educated at fashionable schools, but never were they permitted to have engagements with boys or young men.

Happy With Aunt.

Fun-loving and eager for more freedom, such as other girls enjoyed, the only time they secured it was upon visits to their mother's sister, Mrs. John Madigan, in Washington.

Then came an evening when it was discovered that Jane, Anne, young Scarlette, the girl's two dogs and Jane's car had disappeared, along with a quantity of wine, jewels and money.

Things indicated that the departure had been hastily made and the telephone wires were cut.

The police were immediately informed and a search was begun. A warrant for the arrest of George Scarlette was drawn. Then there arrived a wire from Charlotte, N. C., reading:

"Decided to go south. Everything is all right. Please do not worry. Love, Jane and Anne."

This cryptic message failed in its purpose to reassure the Cooke parents.

Meanwhile, Jane and George, after having been wed, were enjoying their honeymoon. They took the bridesmaid, Anne, and the two pups along for company.

Anne became tired of being the third party and left by train for Washington. Just two days later the bride and groom were picked up by the police in North Carolina and escorted home.

Love Cools.

Mrs. Cooke was in an unforgiving mood when they arrived, but Mrs. Madigan received Jane with open arms and the announcement that she would entertain the young couple until the time when her sister should relent.

Young George, faced with a warrant charging him with theft, was too busy with his lawyers in preparing his defense to accept the hospitable offer, but Jane did. Then it became apparent that the couple had experienced a change of heart and they were happier apart.

The theft case was thrown out of court for lack of evidence. Mrs. Scarlette then proceeded to file suit for annulment in the District of Columbia court, on the grounds that the marriage "was induced by fraud, coercion and duress upon her"—by George. She claimed that he had threatened to kill her if she refused him.

Mr. Scarlette retorted that Jane knew his circumstances, that he didn't threaten her, and that Jane made advances to him and told him that she loved him "would do anything in the world for him."

Buys Island and Spends 32 Years in Solitude

Plat, Jugoslavia.—Paul Tile, a German, has been living as a modern "Robinson Crusoe" on a small island near here for 32 years and enjoys it. He was discovered recently and now crowds are visiting the place. Even women, whom Tile dislikes, have "crashed" the island by wearing male apparel. The man planted orchards and vineyards, raised goats, kept bees, built a house, made fishing nets and tools, and wove cloth for his clothes. He even built concrete bridges across the narrow strip of water which separates his island from the mainland. He divorced his wife in 1912 and since then has always shunned the sight of a woman. He sold his hotel and bought the island, then disappeared on it.

Police Adonis Resigns and Buys 75 Room Hotel

New York.—The beauty rating of the New York police department dropped sharply as Commissioner Valentine announced the resignation of its Adonis, thrice-married George Sylvester Wandling.

The handsomest cop, who mailed his resignation, has become proprietor of a resort hotel at Brunet Station, Quebec. He bought it while on a ten-day leave, for $150,000.

Wandling's most recent marriage was to Mrs. Myrtle Stella, owner of $5,000,000 and the title of the "merry widow." He said his wife gave him the $150,000 and added:

"Say, this is a swell hotel. Seventy-five rooms. Moose all around. On a lake. Come up some time."

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California just as the beginning of the gold rush seems to have deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm and the old family home in Clippersville.

The widowed elderly father did the best he could for them all until his oldest son was nearly eighteen and Gail a capable, bustling house manager two years younger. Then the big guns began to boom across the water, the service flags flashed in answer upon many a quiet flag pole in Clippersville, and Patterson Lawrence, fifty-eight years old, put a copy of Keats in one pocket and a copy of Shelley in the other and hurried off to die of flu in overcrowded Washington, just as sure as his loyal children were sure that he was helping his country and doing the patriotic thing.

Then Phil and Gail had to shoulder the burden. Gail Lawrence was supremely the girl for the job. She was squarely built, womanly at sixteen, brimming with interests, activities, ambitions, and enthusiasms.

By this time the once lucky Lawrences had almost no money. Phil had all but finished high school, and all the friends, relatives, and neighbors said that certainly a bright fine boy like that ought to complete his course. But as Phil and Gail quite simply agreed, meals were more important than education. So Phil stopped his schooling and went to work at the Iron Works, and Gail, upon being offered a job in the public library, accepted it gratefully.

They scrambled along in the disreputable old house very happily; they were always laughing, singing, going on picnics; they were passionately devoted to each other, and everyone was sure that they would get along splendidly. Were they not the last of the Lucky Lawrences?

Surest of all was Gail, the resolute, undaunted, optimistic mother and sister, cook, nurse, and lawmaker in one. Life had been a story to Gail, for a few years, and she had turned a fresh page eagerly every day. She and Edith were going to marry delightful men, and Phil should marry, too. And Sammy should live in Edith's house and Ariel in Gail's, and Ariel should write wonderful poetry. There would be plenty of money for everything, as there always had been . . . soon.

But somehow it had not worked out that way. Gail had grown a little more sober, a little thinner, as the years had slipped by; they had all grown shabbier. Even to her, poverty began to seem a serious matter.

Phil, to her concern, had never quite seen the joke of being poor and being orphaned. He had always been brief, worried, and unresponsive when Gail had tried to drag him into her dreams. And Edith hated poverty, too; it hurt her pride. She had grown quieter, bookish, intellectual, something of a recluse.

Sammy had done nothing except slide through his shoes and get "D minus" marks in his studies. And Ariel was completely spoiled. They had all hailed her as a poet before she could fairly write. She did write poetry, and that was enough for Clippersville. Clippersville was not critical. The Challenge published everything Ariel wrote. And Ariel was discontented, proud, and unmanageable.

Altogether, the outlook was discouraging, and promised to grow more so. There were moments when even Gail could not quite believe in the luck of the Lawrences.

Her twenty-third birthday found her a quick-witted, eager, capable girl, secretly a little bit scared and doubtful, but outwardly gay, irresponsible, and pleasant to look at—like all the Lawrences. Even the boys never seemed to go through lumpy or spotty phases, but were clean-skinned and bright-eyed through boyhood as through babyhood. The older four had tawny thick hair, which had tumbled all over their heads as children, but which on occasions could be made to take more fitting positions.

Ariel was different: frail, pink-cheeked, and cream-skinned, with frightened big hazel eyes and a small mouth. Ariel's hair was corn-silk gold.

Phil worked in the Iron Works for eighty dollars a month, Gail was paid half that monthly for a seven-day week in the public library, Edith made thirty dollars a month as assistant in the book department of Muller's big store, Sammy was supplementing his school career at nineteen with eager labors as errand boy and general office help on the Challenge and Ariel was supposed to be in high school. Ariel was now a fairylike seventeen.

And Gail was twenty-three today. She had presents at the breakfast table in the good old Lawrence fashion. Nobody knew where they came from, or who paid for them, but the Lawrences always managed to give each other presents on anniversaries.

Then Gail and Edith rushed the breakfast paraphernalia into the sink. Ariel was off to school, Phil had disappeared; Sammy had gone first of all. The two girls scrambled through the necessary kitchen work with a speed born of long practice.

The big kitchen was shaded, was in order. The cold water faucet dribbled suddenly, audibly, in the silence, as Gail and Edith, breathless and hot, paused at the hall door. Edith crossed the splintery floor to turn off the tap.

Then Gail and Edith went upstairs, passing the open front door on their way. They hesitated a minute, looking into the jungle of garden. There was a hush of spring, green grass, contraband daisies, and a burst of untidy bridal wreath down by the old fence.

"Look at the pear tree, Gail!"

"Doesn't it just take your breath away?"

They shut the door and went upstairs, Gail saying of the unmade beds, "Let's flap 'em."

Edith's face clouded a little. She hated compromise and slovenliness; she hated the hard conditions of her life that made some truce with them necessary. The clock on the landing struck once, for the half hour after eight; she was due at the department store, and Gail at the library, at nine.

"We'll have to," she conceded briefly, sighing.

"I'll bet you they flap 'em in the most expensive hotels!" Gail stated dauntlessly.

"I shouldn't have worn my office dress to breakfast," the older sister observed, glancing at her cuffs. She got a bottle of some cleaning extract, and began to dabble at spots.

"Egg!" she said disgustedly. Her glance approved of Edith. "That looks better on you than it ever did on Mary Tevis," she observed.

Edith studied herself in the mirror dispassionately.

"I never would have gotten it," she said. "I don't like dots. But it certainly has come in usefully."

"The worst of Mary Tevis is, she'll give you a bunch of things one time, and then forget you for seven years!" Gail, having made herself comparatively presentable, said briskly, "Now, when I'm rich, I shall have a list of girls— D—n such a shoe lace!"

"Abigail, you ought not say that. You'll get Ariel saying it."

Gail mended her lace, looked up with a flushed face.

"Didn't you think Ariel was beautiful at breakfast, Ede?"

"Oh, yes, she really is."

"Do you think—this may all be my

"We Are Stuck in Clippersville—Nobody Knows We're Alive."

imagination—but do you think she's interested in boys, already?"

Their eyes flashed together consciously.

"Oh, yes, I know she is!" Edith answered unhesitatingly.

"She's only seventeen!"

"Well," said Edith, who combined a recluse's sensitiveness and temperament with an occasional flash of daring, "I was fond of the boys at sixteen."

Edith, pretty as she was, had never had a beau, and Gail knew it. But it was the unwritten law of sisterhood not to say so.

Gail merely said perfunctorily, "Oh, well, yes, so was I! But, Edith, there seems to be something—different, in the way Ariel is."

The younger sister's quick keen gaze was lifted; Edith's serious look met Gail's consciously.

"Secretive," she offered.

"Well! Well, yes," Gail answered on a nervous laugh.

"Ariel will get married before either one of us, because we happen to be a little more particular!" Edith pronounced, with her little air of old-maidish snobbery. When Edith said things like that it vaguely irritated Gail.

She left Edith at Montalvo boulevard, and turned up the Calle to the Plaza, where the library stood.

"Heavenly day!" Gail said to Francis Wilcox, the librarian.

"Fine what about those slips?" Mr. Wilcox answered without punctuation.

"They're here."

The day had begun. Gail unhasped the street door, and the usual waiting group of stragglers came in. Miss Foster clamped the newspapers into their holders; little Rose Cahill wheeled wire crates full of books to the different cases, and Gail took them from the barrows and filed them away in their places. The dim big rooms saw various noiseless activities afoot.

Gail thought of her youngest sister, as the dreamy dim hours in the library began to slip by. Ariel was less fitted than any of the other Lawrences for the struggle of life. She was only an innocent, bewildered child.

She wanted—in fact all of them wanted—leisure and beauty and luxury in life. Ariel seemed to want it more than the others, somehow, or in some indefinably different way. She seemed made for beautiful gardens, beautiful porches, spacious, luxurious rooms. She pined, she drooped, in the atmosphere of poverty, griminess, dullness.

Thinking of all this, Gail abstractedly stamped and scribbled, and tossed the books about. When the whistles droned noon, and a sudden responsive pang of hunger stabbed her, she put on her blue hat and walked up the street to Muller's, to meet Edith.

Edith, neat, cool, and clean, lifted an ecstatic look to Gail as she decorously finished the sale of seven novels to a passing motorist. The girls idolized and idealized each other, and were proud of their friendship. All the passion of the younger sister's rather cold nature was in the look; this was one of her awaited moments every day, when her flushed, adored, tousled Gail came in and they went to lunch together.

They went in at the side door to the home kitchen, and let up the shade, and began their preparations for lunch. The kettle was boiling over a bead of gas, for Ariel always came in promptly at twelve, and had her lunch and was gone before the older girls arrived.

Edith sat wearily, luxuriously, over rolls, honey, and tea, her eyes absent, her hand idly stirring the cup.

"Gail, I was thinking that we ought to learn some more poetry, as we do the beds. 'Member how we used to rattle it off, when we were little girls?"

"Oh, do I? 'The Lady of Shalott' and 'Grandmother's Story of Bunker Hill' and 'The Lost Leader' and James Whitcomb Riley—"

"We ought to do it again! It was lots of fun. I'd like to learn Noyes' 'Highwayman,' and some of Hodgson's poems, 'Eve' and 'The Old Bull.'"

"Ede, do you suppose things'll ever be any easier for us? Do you suppose we'll have clothes and a car, some day, and belong to a country club?"

Edith pondered it.

"I—don't really—know," she said at last hesitatingly.

"I mean," Gail fumbled along wistfully, "poor people—people who have a hard start—do."

"Yes. I know they do!"

"Edith, I could stand anything for myself. But it worries me—about Phil and Ariel."

"I don't think Phil minds being poor so much—not since he's been going with Lily Cass," Edith offered.

"Well, I think I want him to mind! I don't think Phil is ambitious," Gail countered, with an anxious little laugh.

"Maybe we're foolish ourselves," Edith said, suddenly gloomy. "Maybe our luck's changed."

"Fooling ourselves?"

"Yes. Do you think we are?"

"I don't think I quite understand you," Gail said uncomfortably.

"Oh, yes you do!" Edith answered with a laugh.

"You mean," Gail said soberly, after a space, "that we aren't getting anywhere?"

"Well, are we? We are stuck in Clippersville," Edith summarized it. "Nobody knows we're alive. We're not in debt, because the doctors and dentists won't send us bills—but we ought to be. We haven't any clothes, any social standing—"

"Oh, we have that, Ede!"

"Well, if we have, if we are the Lucky Lawrences, if we were one of the most important families in California, once, what are we now? Who's going to marry us? Who is there here for us to marry, anyway? What's to prevent our living on and on here, old maids, scraping along as best we can—Phil marrying that horrible Mrs. Cass, Sam getting a job somewhere and going away, Ariel—committing suicide, I suppose—"

"Oh, Edith, Edith!" Gail protested horrified. "Don't talk like that! You're blue. You're just tired today, or it's spring, or something! Why, darling, nobody knows where changes are coming from, or when. We're having our hard times now instead of later, that's all! We'll have dresses and country clubs and trips and—and fun, theaters, I mean, and everything, one of these days!"

Edith's grave, intellectual face was doubtful.

"You're twenty-three," she suggested significantly.

"I don't think I mind for myself; I mind for you," Edith said as they walked back to work. "You ought to be having good times. You ought to be dancing, and going to little restaurants, and—and everything."

"And so ought you!" Gail answered cheerfully, although she felt a knife in her heart.

"Oh, I—!" Edith dismissed herself lightly, and immediately fell into that silly strain for which Gail could find no better expression than "old maidy." "I have a feeling," Edith went on complacently, "that I will meet my husband and be married to him all in a very short time. You know that fortune teller that was at Mabel's—"

"I wish she wouldn't talk that way!" Gail thought, suddenly hot, irritable, and discouraged.

She felt more weary and discouraged as she went on her way. The long afternoon in the library dragged. She felt bored. A sense of injustice oppressed her. Twenty-three—and she might just as well have been fifty-three.

TO BE CONTINUED.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERROR

IN THE spring of 1898 a Swedish tailor in Berkeley, Calif., read an advertisement in a San Francisco paper that said "Tailors wanted for a whaling cruise in Alaskan waters." Some ancient memory of his Norse ancestors stirred in him. He applied for the job. A few days later he was aboard the whaler "Reliance" as she spread her canvas and headed north.

"Get aloft there and help unfurl them sails!" bellowed the first mate to Eric. "You go yump in the ocean," was Eric's calm reply. But before the mate's fist could crash into his face, the captain, Swedish-born and a kindly soul, interfered. To his demand for an explanation Eric produced a crumpled newspaper clipping and pointed to the "Help Wanted" advertisement.

"The newspaper made a mistake," said the captain with a laugh. "I wanted sailors, not tailors." But Eric didn't feel like laughing. In fact, he was very angry and only the captain's assurance that he could travel on the ship as a passenger until they put in at Port Clarence, calmed him.

When the "Reliance" stopped at the port to take on water and reindeer meat, Eric left the ship. In an Eskimo village he obtained a boat and started down the coast. At the mouth of the Sinrock river he met with three prospectors who had found a little gold there and they gave him a small nugget. A short time later Eric showed this to an Eskimo chief who pointed up toward the hills and exclaimed excitedly "Umalaktok, umalaktok emetna!" meaning "much more the same." The chief then took him up the river to where it forked and there by scratching in the gravel they were able to pick out large pieces of coarse gold.

At first this place was known as Snake river but later when a horde of frenzied fortune-seekers pitched their tents and built their shacks there it became Nome City. Thus a typographical error launched one of the greatest gold rushes in all history.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT COMMAS

A COMMA is only one of many punctuation marks and, except for the period, is about the smallest and most insignificant of them all. But put it in the wrong place and disastrous results may follow.

Once upon a time a misplaced comma cost the United States government the tidy sum of $2,000,000. The day might have been warm, the clerk who was marking the tariff free list might have had a headache, but whatever the details surrounding the incident, the comma got put in the wrong place. The clerk, instead of writing "All foreign fruit-plants are free from duty," wrote this, "All foreign fruit, plants are free from duty." Two million dollars worth of foreign fruit had come into the country and congress had to meet for the next session before this little comma could be removed.

Then there is the story about the Russian empress, Marie Feodorewna. Emperor Alexander III had imprisoned one of his political enemies. Then the empress accidentally caught sight of the following note, written by her husband on the margin of one of the death warrants: "Pardon impossible, to be sent to Siberia."

Marie had pled for the life of this subject. His wife was one of her childhood friends and she had done all she could to save the conspirator. Alexander could not, in duty bound, release the plotter, and the sentence stood until Marie transposed the comma so that it read, "Pardon, impossible to be sent to Siberia." The man was released, thanks to a woman's big heart and a litttle comma.

ACCIDENTS WILL HAPPEN

"ACCIDENT is the mother of invention, 99 times out of 100," said Louis Brennau, the torpedo inventor. One day he saw a frayed driving belt on a planing machine acting queerly. He got the idea that it was possible to make a machine travel forward by pulling it backward. He made use of that principle in inventing his engine of death.

Careless workmen in a paper mill forgot, one day, to add sizing to the pulp, and the whole vat had to be thrown away as waste. A short time later the proprietor came by. He saw the discarded rolls and tore off some strips to use for making notes. It absorbed the ink as fast as he wrote on it, so he called it "blotting paper." We've used it ever since.

In another plant a workman playfully tossed a piece of cheese into the plating bath solution, used for producing copper disks for stamping phonograph records. The disks from this particular bath were far superior to any others. The casein in the cheese was the one element that chemists had been looking for.

A French scientist, while experimenting in his laboratory, accidentally opened the wrong valve. Several drops of moisture settled in a glass tube. Horrified at his mistake, the scientist was about to throw the tube away when he realized that he had discovered liquid oxygen.

POULTRY

TOO MUCH HEAT IS FATAL TO CHICKS

Warmth of Brooder Should Be Closely Guarded.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Dead or unhealthy chicks always mean financial losses for the poultryman, but they mean greater losses when feed prices are high and the outlook for poultry raising is favorable.

One of the common causes of unhealthy chicks is the overheated brooder house. It often leads to death of chicks through cannibalism, and lowers the vigor and health of the birds. The effect of a hot, stuffy room will be reflected in unthrifty chicks with poor appetites and ruffled feathers.

A general hover temperature of between 90 and 100 degrees Fahrenheit is recommended. However, the room temperature outside the hover should be about 70 degrees. Crowding of the chicks near the stove indicates too low a temperature, while their hovering at some distance indicates too much heat.

Not only is it important to handle the chicks so that they will utilize high-priced feeds to the best advantage, but it is also necessary to protect the feed to prevent losses before feeding.

Dampness reduces the value of feeds and, in some cases, introduces sickness among the birds. A water-proof covering should be spread over the poultry feeds while they are being transported from one place to another in the rain, and they should be stored in a dry, clean room.

Poultry diseases are often spread by feed that has been stored in the chicken house or brooder. If no separate room is available for storage, large-sized garbage cans with close fitting covers make good storage bins.

Darkened Nests Advised to Fool the Egg Eaters

Egg eating is a habit usually brought on by a lack of something in the diet, particularly the lack of shell forming material, says an authority in the Montreal Herald. Egg shells should not be given to hens unless they are dried and broken up fine. They should not resemble an egg in any way, shape or form. To offset this before it becomes a habit, the only thing to do is to arrange that the hens should lay in darkened nests. This can be arranged by having the hens go in at the end of the nest, and entering the laying compartment from the back, if they cannot see the eggs they will be less inclined to eat them, and care should be taken to have the eggs gathered three or four times daily, or oftener if convenient, until such time as the trouble has passed away.

Producing Milk-Fed Broilers

Two pounds of either skimmilk or buttermilk should be added to each pound of the fattening ration and fed during a fattening period of seven to ten days, says an authority at the North Carolina State college. The milk and ration are mixed so as to make a sloppy feed that will pour readily from a bucket. During the first two days of the fattening period, feed only as much as the birds will consume in 15 minutes twice a day. After the second day give them all they will clean up in 20 to 30 minutes two or three times a day. Only enough water to quench the thirst should be given twice a day during the fattening period.

Litter Should Be Dry

The important thing about litter is to keep it clean and dry. Dirty litter is hardly as dangerous as wet litter, since germs harbor and develop quickly in wet litter when the brooder house is warm. A small distinction should therefore be made between changing dirty and wet litter: change the litter when it becomes dirty, but change the litter at once when it becomes damp or wet. It is recommended that poults be reared only on wire floors, since they are sure to consume the litter, which results in bowel compaction and serious losses.

Removing Retained Egg

When it is evident that the hen will be unable to lay an egg, smear the cleansed index finger with carbolized vaseline, pass it into the cloaca and egg duct and attempt to work the egg out of the passage. If that cannot be done without injuring the duct, advises a writer in Hoard's Dairyman, the egg may be broken and the contents and shell removed. Afterward give the hen a teaspoonful of olive oil or castor oil and feed a light laxative ration for a few days.

Time to Fight Lice

During warm weather one can easily rid the laying flock of lice by the use of sodium fluoride as a dip. The usual recommendation is to mix one ounce of sodium fluoride in one gallon of water. The dip should be lukewarm. The bird should be held in the solution until the water reaches the skin. Just before releasing the hen the head should be dipped. Allowing the bird to drain conserves the liquid. The solution should not remain in metal containers overnight.

New War Uniforms

To cut down expenses and aid the government concentrate imports and industrial production on the Chaco war, thousands of women in Bolivia are wearing war uniforms—simple cotton dresses.

Nobody Knows The Answer

Here is an observation that has not been made often enough—back in March, 1933, Mr. Roosevelt tackled a problem and a job that transcended the ability and capacity of any man or any government to handle. It is true he mapped a course that has brought grievous disappointment and disillusion and entailed staggering costs, which the people will have to pay, but this does not mean that any other course taken under any other leadership would not have ended in results just as disastrous.

Under our present economic set-up of laissez faire, where the bridle is off and every individual is invited to carve out his own fortune, in his own way, there will also always be riches and poverty, squalor and starvation on one hand and affluence and competence on the other. With the wide disparities in talent and ability and opportunity among human beings the ghastly paradox of poverty in plenty will never be escaped. The NRA went under the assumption that our economic system could be renovated and made to work more equitably for all, but that proved only a fond dream. The whole mechanism of capitalism is cluttered with insoluble contradictions.

It is true the magnetic personality of Mr. Roosevelt galvanized the country into new hope of adequate leadership, while people were desperately seeking their own way out. It is possible we shall find that the New Deal has rendered an immense service to the American people—it has taught us something about governmental control, about social planning, about a managed currency and about a better ordered collective society. It has made millions feel a more vital and sympathetic interest in the plight of uncounted numbers who have gone down under the lashings of a cruel fate. But in spite of its humanitarianism the New Deal had already been exposed as a sham in which confusion and futility had reached their climax. Only as billions have been poured out has life been kept in the system. The basic cause of our economic difficulties still remains unanswered. Unless the cause can be found and heroically treated our civilization will continue to move toward disintegration.—The Selma Times-Journal.

HARPERSVILLE

Mr. and Mrs. Neal Stone and daughter, Maryln, of Birmingham, spent the week-end with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stone.

Mrs. Annie Baker returned home last week from Oklahoma City where she has been visiting her nephew, Howard Green, for two months.

Miss Doris Abbott had as her guest last week, Miss Stella Throeatt, of Talladega.

Little Virginia Kidd is visiting her aunt, Mrs. Snow, in Helena.

Mr. and Mrs. Garvin Baker and son, Bobbie, were the week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Baker.

We are very glad to state that Mr. J. E. Darby, who underwent a serious operation in Birmingham, is at home again.

Miss May Darby, of Montgomery, visited her parents here, Saturday.

Miss Eva Ruth Brumbaugh is visiting in Birmingham.

Woodrow Elliott left Thursday to enter the State Teachers' College at Jacksonville, Alabama, where he will study during the summer.

Mrs. J. C. Brumbaugh entertained Saturday evening, June 1st, at her home complimenting her son, Jack, on his fourteenth birthday. The guests arrived about 7:30. Many interesting games were enjoyed thruout the evening. After the games, cream and cake was served to fifteen guests. All departed declaring the hostess a delightful evening.

Miss Helen Smith spent the week-end in Bessemer.

Mrs. Walter Wyatt died at home, Friday morning, May 31st. This sad event cast a gloom over our entire community. She had been ill for three weeks. The funeral service was held at the Baptist Church, Saturday morning. The service was conducted by Rev. Franks and Dykes. She was laid to rest in the Harpersville cemetery. We extend our deepest sympathy to the husband, daughter, sons, and the entire family in this their sad hour of bereavement. We feel assured that they do not sorrow as those who have no hope. She is not dead but sleepeth.

Better Housing Day will be observel on next Saturday. Several applicants are interested in being the first to qualify for the Model Home movement now going forward in Shelby County.

You're The Loser

WHEN you allow Headache, Neuralgia, Muscular, Rheumatic, Sciatic or Periodic Pains to keep you from work or pleasure.

You can't go places and do things when you are suffering—and the work or good times won't wait for you.

Why allow Pain to rob you of Health, Friends, Happiness, Money?

DR. MILES ANTI-PAIN PILLS have been used for the relief of pain for more than forty years. They taste good, act quickly, do not upset the stomach, nor cause constipation, leave no dull, depressed feeling.

Thousands have used them for twenty, thirty, forty years, and still find that nothing else relieves pain so promptly and effectively.

Why don't you try them? Once you know how pleasant they are to take, how quickly and effectively they relieve, you won't want to go back to disagreeable, slow acting medicines.

You too may find quick relief. Why wait forty minutes for relief when Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills will relieve you in ten to twenty minutes?

As a household remedy I have never found anything that equalled Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. Mrs. Silas D. Keller, Penfield, Pa.

I never found anything that was so good to stop pain as Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. I have told many about them and I find they are all using them. Mrs. Martha Lacy, Davenport, Iowa

I have been using Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills for years. I keep them on hand all the time. I can certainly recommend them for pain. Miss Audra Seybold, 2417 W. 2nd St., Dayton, Ohio

Your Anti-Pain Pills have been a wonderful help to me. I have used them for three years and always keep them on hand. Mrs. E. Pierce, Lapwai, Idaho

I have used quite a lot of Dr. Miles Anti-Pain Pills. They are fine pills to stop pain. Mrs. J. L. Kester, Shickshinny, Pa.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

"What is so rare as a day in June"—has long been a romantic and an intriguing question. The whole world seems to reflect the smile of greeting June brings. June-time! Wedding-time! An occasion for shaded lights, soft music, foamy, white trailing garments and low whispered PROMISES! Commencement! Sweet Girl Graduates! June Roses! A song poet even brought us June in January! Hope springs eternal with the return of each June. Memories of Moonlight on Magnolia blooms come thronging. A recent visit to old Man River on a warm June night brings to my mind the old Ferry Boat, and a silver sickle of a moon which lighted our way across. Firefires were twinkling in and out the friendly trees like miniature electric lights. It was a night I shall not soon forget. One I shall always like to remember. Of course there will be Pessimists, as one journalist reminds us, who will tnink of "chiggers", "mosquitos", "June bugs" and other unpleasant insects—but my personal advice to you is to "forget 'em"—Take a look around you at the beauty the month offers you. G. R. Young has the right idea expressed in his "Greeting to June".

Greeting to June

O, June, I reach my outstretched hands to you;
To your soft radiance, to your joyous hours;
To the deep stillness, of the sky's far blue;
To the warm fragrance of your bursting flowers.
In all your present loveliness I hear
The echoing voice of other Junes ring clear.

I love your glory, your rich lavishness;
The way red roses tumble down the wall;
The note of triumph in the thrush's call;
The early morning chorus of the birds,
Sweeter than any music framed for words.
I love the way the mock-orange bushes pour
Their honeyed perfume out beside my door.
And every June my heart is running still
To the white daisies on a distant hill
Where, in the warm June sunshine, I would lie
Watching the soft clouds cross the azure sky.

I never knew a June that did not stir
A hundred songs of gladness in my heart,
That did not start a caroling of praise
For the rich working of God's perfect ways;
That did not make me humbly glad that I
Could gain new gladness as the hours go by,
All that I hear is the same lilting tune—
That throbbing, pulsing measure that is—June!

WHY—all the above exuberance you ask? Perhaps it was caused by a thoughtful, timely letter from a fellow journalist in this State who has long travelled the newspaper route—and made a successful landing. I refer to E. C. Hall of The Alexander City Outlook—who, after reading last weeks issue of the Democrat wrote an encouraging message which merits an honest-to-goodness effort to warrant. Thanks, friend across the miles. If I had some of that HALL mental ability and ingenuity and vocabulary, and "Independent, Fearless and Free"—a la Grover C. Hall, Montgomery Advertiser—perhaps, I say, IF I had some of these requisites for a successful career—I could travel the "printers sea of ink" more gracefully—that is, sail the Good old Ship of Democracy, we launched three years ago in Shelby County on a less turbalent route—less stormy—less provocative—perhaps a less temperamental SKIPPER is necessary. However, suffice it to say, there is VARIETY in THIS newspaper office and plenty of it. There is no time for MONOTONY. Plenty of Business "ups and downs" incident to any line of endeavor—but ever and always INTERESTING. Gratefully do we acknowledge the letter, the friendly suggestions, the "profit by my experience" idea, and the kind and considerate spirit which prompted sending the message. The "poem" from Heart Drifts which appealed to Mr. Hall, I, unfortunately, cannot claim as my own effusion as he suggests, but am delighted to know he will reprint it in his excellent weekly.

Perhaps the day grew brighter on account of a lovely vase of Nasturtiums plucked and brought to me by my valued little friend, Louise Lovelady. What WOULD or COULD I do without the consideration of my little Junior friends. Thanks Louise, you brought the "sunshine and the flowers" on that rainy, Blue old MONDAY—and I am more than—grateful.

Perhaps it was caused by a friendly greeting card across the miles from Jackson, Tennessee, where our good friends, Mr. and Mrs. Mack Fancher of Selma, are on vacation. Perhaps the cloud's silver lining appeared when my good friend, and cheerful philospher, O. P. Head came up from his home in Montevallo, and spent an hour with us in a word ramble which left only a "keep-a-goin'" spirit in the ascendency. Many joyful little incidents happen to make JUNE even brighter than usual, and we happily greet this month with the longest day and shortest night.

Canada may proudly boast of Annette Dionne, but Columbiana is just as fortunate in claiming Baby Annette Thompson, who made her first visit to the Democrat office on Friday afternoon, and with her big blue eyes, rosy cheeks and radiant smile, won the hearts of all of us. Daily papers made capital of the fact that at 9 months, Annette Dionne had one little tooth. Well, OUR little Annette Thompson had two pearly white molars at the age of 3 months and 19 days. Beat that if you can! After a trip through the Democrat office, cooing an accompaniment with the Linotype, this little "Queen of Hearts" was taken over the Courthouse and introduced to the official family of Shelby County. They unanimously declared her the most interesting young lady who had invaded their solem ranks since they "moved into the marble Temple of Justice." Come back again "Annette"—You are "mighty lak a rose", and there is nothing sweeter.

Mrs. Jerry Bryan, (Elizabeth Farley) of Birmingham, spent the week in Columbiana visiting her aunt, Miss Lena Cox. Mrs. Bryan came over to be present during the commencement activities of Shelby County High School, of which she is an honor graduate.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats scored another hit with their music at the Airport on Saturday night when the regular bi-monthly dance was staged. Visitors from various parts of the State declared them the best amateur orchestra they had heard this season.

Notes among the visitors, were Dr. and Mrs. Sam H. Wallace, Misses Erin Wallace, Mamie Middleton; Messrs Joe, George, Wales and Sam H. Wallace, Jr., of Birmingham; R. Heaslet and Edwin Pitts, of Sylacauga; Harold Harlin, of Athens; Jimmy and Frank Gorman, Monk Morrell and Jimmy Sharbutt, Misses Monteen Embry and Sarah Elliott, of Vincent, and others.

Miss Ruth Luck will leave for the University of Alabama on Saturday to attend Summer school. She is making her plans to enter the Junior Class at Alabama in September.

Guests who enjoyed this happy occasion included, Mesdames Carl Grouby, Cecil Duke, Wales Carter, Wade Lawless, of Jasper, and Mrs. J. R. Dunklin, of Greenville, the popular house guest of Mrs. D. S. Lightcap.

Mrs. W. A. Davis, mother of popular and efficient Paul O. Davis, Relief Director of Shelby County, has been a distinguished visitor in Columbiana during the past week. Combining a Southern charming manner with a gracious personality, this little lady from Old Virginia won many friends during her stay in Columbiana.

Do not forget Better Housing Day next Saturday. Many interested new home makers are attempting to qualify for the Model Better Housing Program now being waged in Shelby County. See Mrs. Lida Wood for Columbiana applications; Mr. Terrell for Vincent; R. E. Bowdon, Sr. in Calera; or Mr. Crim and Fred Frost in Montevallo, local chairman for that community.

Chatting with lawyers and 'Judges' has long been a "habit" of mine—Here is a clipping one of them sends me which is amusing, as we receive "notices" plus many other interesting "requests for publication" each week. This one however, takes the spotlight for TRESPASS Notices.

Evidently this rustic citizen felt that the situation demanded sterner measurers than the "full extent of the law" guaranteed.

An enlightened and loyal spirit has permeated Atlanta business circles in the wake of the Supreme Court's decision on the NRA. The law itself has been pronounced invalid, but the spirit of fair dealing, helpful cooperation and social justice has been recognized and will be honorably binding to the city's commercial leaders who consider it essential to the return of prosperity. Hence the Retail Merchant's Association have adopted resolutions commending President Roosevelt on his efforts to improve conditions for the working people throughout the United States. Alabama may well take a lesson from Georgia on this patriotic civic movement.

Mrs. D. S. Lightcap has returned from a delightful visit to Birmingham where she was the feted guest of honor at a lovely dinner party given by Mrs. Fred Koenig (Myra Brown) former charming resident of Columbiana, who now lives in Birmingham, but who still loyally claims Columbiana, HOME.

Fred Allen, Principal of Calera Junior High School, has the right idea about more MUSIC for Shelby County. Music Appreciation will be one of his strongest Departments next year and will be conducted by Bess Rice, of Montevallo, who succeeds Elizabeth Hill. Miss Hill will teach in Birmingham, and has an enviable record with which to greet the Magic City devotees of the musical art. Shelby County, especially Calera Junior High School, will suffer a keen loss when she leaves.

Robert Holcombe, Member of the Board of Education, was seen ambling around the Courthouse with his characteristic non-challant stride, Tuesday, personally admitting, Daddy Time was creeping up on the old boy and he could not "step about" quite as swiftly as heretofore. However, we personally dare even Daddy Time to attempt to down that indomitable spirit which marks him the "good sport" he always has been and always will be, even if he gets "too old to DREAM".

Mrs. Z. T. McDanal honored Mrs. Leonard Crumpton, nee Mattie Archer, with a miscellaneous shower at her home Tuesday afternoon, May 28th. The home of Mrs. McDanal was beautifully decorated throughout with bowls and baskets of pink and blue larkspur, carrying out the color-scheme. The guests arrived at 2:30 and enjoyed games and contests, at the end of which the honoree was the winner, the prize being a complete surprise to her, which was a toy wagon decorated with pink and blue crepe paper, and drawn by Nora Sue McDanal, who was daintily dressed in pink and blue. The wagon was loaded with lovely gifts which were opened by the bride, and after being admired by the guests, a delicious ice course was served to the following guests: Mesdames Luda Church, C. T. Hughes, Tom Morris, Henry Johnson, L. M. Lyon, Bill Johnson, A. W. Crumpton, Robert Mooney, H. C. McDanal, Rosa McDanal, Ruth Baker, Barrett Archer and Z. T. McDanal, hostess, and Misses Ruth Nell Hughes, Margaret and Ruth Church, Mildred Mooney, Louise Crumpton, and the honoree, Mrs. Leonard Crumpton.

Well, folks—It's an old Southern Custom—A lazy old day—and it's got me—Shall we call it off until next Thursday.

Pleased With Policy of Passing Rate Cuts to Customers

Mrs. C. G. Hume Tells Why Additional Reductions to Mean Greater Use of Electrical Appliances

Writing recently to Alabama Power Company, Mrs. C. G. Hume, prominent Montgomery homemaker said:

"From news items recently carried in our local papers, I understand that you have passed on to your residential customers another substantial rate reduction.

"I have been a user of electric service from your good Company over a long period and naturally I have watched with much interest your well established policy of passing on to your customers periodical rate reductions whenever conditions appear to make such action possible.

"Of course I am much pleased whenever I am able to get an already satisfactory and reasonably priced service at a lesser cost, hence this letter of appreciation.

"It has long been my thought that your rates were reasonable and fair and now with this additional reduction it seems to me that every housewife able to purchase the appliances would insist on having the comfort and convenience of an electrically equipped home.

"In closing permit me to commend you for your courteous, dependable low cost service." Adv. Alabama Power Co.

Wind Out of Her Sails

BRISBANE
THIS WEEK

Goodby, NRA
Wall Street's Dormouse
Good Wages, Short Hours
Lottery Swindles

The Supreme court unanimously declares NRA unconstitutional.

Arthur Brisbane

High judges, whose decision nobody can veto, short of a constitutional amendment, say congress must do its work and cannot abdicate in favor of the Chief Executive.

The most important decision in many years, this probably makes further argument about extension of NRA unnecessary. You can't extend that which is dead. American business men may now resume business not led by the kindly light of professors and others.

Alice's puzzled Dormouse, at the Mad Hatter's tea party, could not understand his watch, that would not keep time, although the Dormouse did everything. He dipped the watch in his tea, put butter in the works. "It was the best butter," he said, "but nothing seems to please it."

The stock exchange is something like that watch—nothing seems to please it, either.

At first, stock broker gentlemen, whose "Kaaba stone" is the stock ticker, began a weird dance of joy when they heard that NRA was dead, and pushed up stock prices.

Then, suddenly, as the day wore on, one broker asked another, and every broker asked every other broker, "How do we know what is coming next?" And then they put the prices down.

It is announced, but not by Mr. Green, head of the American Federation of Labor, that a great strike will be called in protest against the Supreme court's NRA decision. Mr. Green is too wise to permit, if he can prevent it, a strike against the United States Supreme court. He may, should, and probably will, take a wiser course and work, as organized labor has worked successfully for generations, to improve working conditions.

Some union men know that wages, hours and other conditions improved in the old way are more durable than increased pay based on political fiat.

It is necessary for some one to provide as well as for some one to take it.

Peddlers of tickets in the Havana lottery send out "come-on" letters, trying to sell tickets to foolish Americans. On one such letter this is printed:

"Arthur Brisbane says large sums of money . . . are won by Americans buying foreign tickets."

What Arthur Brisbane has said, and now repeats, is that through foreign lottery schemes Americans are swindled out of large sums. He who invests in a lottery throws away his money, adding foolishness to incapacity. The Havana lottery is as much of a trap for fools as any other lottery.

Postmaster Farley's plan to hasten air mails allows a crowd of 10,000 to see a whirling autogiro drop down on the roof and deliver mail, another autogiro coming to get mail bags and carry them away.

Mr. Farley's plan is to have the autogiro fly between outlying flying fields, where high-power, fast planes land, and carry mail bags to the roofs of city post offices, saving time lost in slow street travel.

One branch of the Standard Oil company, the New Jersey branch, managed by Mr. Teagle, notifies 6,000 of a bonus of 5 per cent added to their pay envelopes to meet the higher cost of living.

With no sign of smoke, flame, crater—nothing to indicate an extinct volcano—a new and live volcano suddenly begins eruption in an out-of-the-way place in Iceland. A great hole appears in the earth, flames and red-hot lava rise. No overflowing of neighboring farms as yet.

What would natives have thought had this happened in earlier days, when everybody believed that hell, the devil and all his wickedness were just beneath our feet and heaven just over our heads?

Postmaster General Farley thinks of printing on all postage stamps, Sursum Corda, which means "Lift up your hearts." He sees a great summer ahead, "a summer of content."

"Car loadings," says the postmaster general, "are up," incomes reported by our taxpayers "are up," "more people are buying automobiles than before."

For some, the big news is that Little, the San Francisco golfer, has defeated Doctor Tweddell, the British challenger.

For others, more important news is the killing of 300 Chinese by Japanese troops. The 300 killed are said to have been professional bandits. The killing of 300 armed Chinese bandits cost the lives of only six Japanese, which sounds like efficiency.

Motorists touring Alabama will spend $37,500,000 in the state this year, or 50 per cent more than last year, George Nagel, tourist manager of the Alabama Motorists Assn., predicted.

The date on which increased emergency rates for intrastate traffic recently granted by the Alabama Public Service Commission will become effective has been set for June 8.

A $2,500,000 work-relief allotment for a low-cost housing project for Negroes in Birmingham has been requested by the housing division of the Public Works Administration.

Eight hundred carloads of Alabama strawbwerries will be shipped north before the end of the current strawberry season, Louisville & Nashville Railroad officials estimated.

The War Department has asked an allotment of $451,580 from the works program to be used for improvements at Fort McClellan, Anniston, and Maxwell Field, Montgomery.

Col. Alfred Moore Tunstall, 71, former speaker of the Alabama House of Representatives, died at his home in Greensboro after an illness of two weeks.

Huntsville merchants have gone on record as favoring continuance of the wage and hour scale of the NRA until further instructions from Washington.

Within a few weeks Alabama farmers will have received nearly $4,000,000 in rental payment checks for reducing their 1935 cotton acreage.

The town of LaFayette has retired $10,000 of water, light and sewerage bonds issued in 1911 and due in 1941.

Lieut. William A. Matheny, Maxwell Field officer, jumped to safety in his parachute near Tallassee when the engine of his pursuit plane quit.

Daylight saving time, which wreaked havoc with Capitol city time schedules since it was adopted two weeks ago, has been abandoned.

Work of clearing the Pickwick Dam reservoir area, extending from the site to the Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals, will begin Sept. 1.

Slenderizing Lines Characterize Frock

PATTERN 9321

Quite the neatest trick we've observed for a long time is this cleverly arranged, yet delightfully simple, home frock. Especially nice for those of us who gain and lose weight or who just naturally love a smart looking wrap-around for sheer comfort and convenience. And, of course, a boon to expectant mothers. Note how the belt slips through a slit and may be simply adjusted to fit the figure. Meanwhile, one has stepped right into it as into a coat. No petticoat needed. Nice shoulders and back, aren't they? Most attractive in solid color cotton broadcloth or printed or plaid cotton of any sort.

Pattern 9321 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, and 48. Size 36 requires 4⅜ yards 36 inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Address your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West 18th Street, New York, N. Y.

Flower-Adorned Gowns of Real Silk

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FASHION is recapturing the elegancies and enchantments which bespeak a truly feminine season. This message of a return to the exquisite, the aesthetic, the lovely and alluring in matter of dress is being told in countless beguiling trends.

A most happy evidence of increasing sentiment expressed for the sweetly feminine in dress, is the revival of that charming custom of wearing flowers, carrying flowers and trimming prettiest gowns with flowers. No need to tell you the fascinating things designers are doing with flowers, the illustration herewith speaks for itself.

Another evidence of the dawn of a new era of exquisitely feminine fashions is the re-enthronement of silk. real genuine "all-silk," mind you.

This call for real silk from those of discriminating taste is not a mere passing fancy but rather a sense of fabric identification which is developing among the fair sex. We are coming to know that such terms as crepe, satin, taffeta and the like, are not necessarily silk, and when they are, should be called silk crepe, silk satin, silk taffeta, and so on.

The duo theme of flowers and real silk sounds enticing—and is it? For answer, please refer to the trio of adorable evening creations in the accompanying picture. It adds a glamorous note to these distinguished and exquisite modes that they were selected for illustration from among a collection of costumes entered exclusively by society women shop owners in the metropolitan silk showing held recently in New York.

A deep lilac silk crepe (quality-kind pure silk) fashions the stately evening gown to the left, which bears out word from Paris that deep lilac and violet tones are outstanding this season. The wide bordering of silk violets which outlines the graceful cape speaks eloquently of the fascinating and ingenious play which designers are making with flowers.

The costume centered in the picture reflects a very ecstasy of beauty. This most alluring dinner ensemble is in gray (a very high-style color for evening) pure-silk taffeta. Its cunning jacket with quaint flowing-from-the-elbow sleeves is graced with a youthful collar faced with lilacs in delectable coloring. To complete the picture milady carries an intriguing muff done in lilacs to match.

Vaporous, elusively sheer and floating, muchly-draped and shirred chiffon is the idol of the hour for evening wear. The "darling of a gown" with "red riding hood" cape to the right in the group is of exquisite white silk chiffon. The evening hood is one of the outstanding features of the formal mode. Young girls adore them. As artful as fancy can picture is the shirring on this gown which occurs at shoulder cuffs and on the skirt. The very latest gesture in silhouettes is interpreted via the elaborate draping at the sides of the slender fitted skirt. Lilacs on the hood and worn as a corsage sing a song of springtime youth and beauty for this dream of a midsummer night chiffon ensemble.

SILK NET JACKET

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This exotic silk print evening gown is white with green florals widely spaced. The silk net "butcher boy" capelike jacket is in the same shade of green. Front, back and the sleeves are pleated. This very beautiful twosome is worn by Gladys Swarthout, the lovely opera and movie star who was recently chosen as one of the ten best dressed women in America.

Pastel Colored Kids Are Latest Note in Footwear

Pastel colored kids are the next footnote. They come in pale powder blue, dusty pink, soft green and yellow, and they are designed in high cut-out sandals for afternoon wear with light frocks.

The new beach sandals come in white and eggshell linens bound with bright orange, blue or red kidskin strips to match the beach outfit.

REGENCY TREATMENT FOR SPRING COATS

"Draped bows," "butterfly revers," "front fullness in the bodice"—call it what you will—each phrase describes the treatment that persists through the Vionnet adaptations that are shown. The coat and wrap designers give this detail an impressive position in the second spring collections.

The "pouf" at front, which gives a pleasant Regency quality to the otherwise modern coat or frock, lends itself to a variety of interpretations—suitable for taffeta or flat fur for the coat and varied from ripping revers to double jabot in crisp formal wraps. Also important as a detail that promises to be heard from are the butterfly collars that are placed high across the shoulders rather than as jabot.

Knit Suit Styles Inspire You to Do One Yourself

You know how important the suit is to be. But had you thought of knitting one for yourself? You'd be inspired to make the effort after taking one look at a three-piece which includes a British looking short jacket, with skirt and sweater blouse. The jacket has all the airs of the high-powered English tailored suits of the season, with its high notched lapels, its semi-fitted lines and its casual one-button closing. Skirt and jacket are done in diagonal ribbing, with the same effectiveness of the smartest diagonal woolens.

Tweed knit coat designs are nothing short of superb.

Taffeta Takes Prominent Place in Fashion Parade

Crisp taffeta continues as a highlight of the spring fashion parade. Rustling bags, gloves, sleeves, revers, blouses and dresses are being taken for granted, but have you seen the dashing navy and white taffeta gloves?

To make them fit well, the palms are of soft woven silk. They are gauntlet type, with a heavily corded, flared cuff. They are particularly smart with a dressy navy suit and an ideal accessory.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for June 9

THE HOLY SPIRIT
(Pentecost Lesson)

LESSON TEXT—John 16:7-11; Romans 8:10-17, 26, 27.

GOLDEN TEXT—For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.—Romans 8:14.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Keeps His Promise.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Coming of the Holy Spirit.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How the Holy Spirit Helps Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Work of the Holy Spirit.

1. The Holy Spirit Promised (Joel 2:28, 29).

The prophet foretold that in messianic times there would be a mighty effusion of the Holy Spirit.

1. He was to be poured out.
2. He was to be bestowed upon all flesh, irrespective of age, sex, or class.
3. This out-pouring was to issue in extraordinary activity and service.
4. This activity was to be accompanied by marvelous signs.

II. This Prophetic Promise Was Partially Fulfilled at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-21, 32, 33).

The unusual behavior of the disciples at Pentecost, with Peter's preaching which resulted in the conversion of thousands, evidenced the supernatural, but the cosmic signs which the prophet predicted to take place in heaven and earth were not in evidence. The real fulfillment of the prophet's prediction is in the future and will find fulfillment in connection with the regathering of Israel and the establishment of the Messianic Kingdom.

III. Some Names of the Holy Spirit.

1. Comforter (John 14:16, 17). "Comforter" means literally "one called to one's side as a part taker, an advocate, a helper and defender." He is called "another Comforter" as he was to take the place of Jesus.

2. The Witness (John 15:26). The Spirit peculiarly witnesses of Christ. He does not speak of himself, but takes the things of Christ and shows them unto us (John 16: 13).

3. The Spirit of Truth (John 16:13). The Holy Spirit guides into all truth. Those who are taught by him know the truth.

IV. Some Works of the Spirit.

1. He regenerates (John 3:3-8). The new birth is peculiarly the Spirit's work.

2. He teaches (John 14:26). The Holy Spirit was to take up the work of teaching the disciples.

3. Convicts the world of sin (John 16:8, 9). The Holy Spirit alone can show men the demerit of their lives and their shortcomings before God.

4. Convicts the world of righteousness (John 16:10). The resurrection and ascension of Christ prove that he is the Righteous One and that righteousness is only possible as he is accepted as Savior.

5. Convicts the world of judgment (John 16:11). Sin unatoned for shall be punished. The sinner who refuses the righteousness which God provided in Jesus Christ shall be judged.

6. Gives victory over the flesh (Rom. 8:2, 12, 13). By the energy of the Holy Spirit the carnal nature can be kept in subjection.

7. He leads the believer (Rom. 8:14). The Spirit-filled believer lives the life of the Son of God.

8. He gives assurance to the believer (Rom. 8:15-17). The Holy Spirit witnesses together with the human spirit to the reality of the new birth.

9. Enables the believer to pray according to the will of God (Rom. 8:26, 27). The Holy Spirit helps the believer's infirmities in prayer.

V. The Diversity of the Gifts of the Spirit (I Cor. 12:4-11).

In the Church there are to be found those possessing the gifts of wisdom, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, discernment of spirits, divers kinds of tougues and their interpretation.

VI The Sealing of the Spirit (Eph. 1:13, 14).

Into the regenerated life comes the Holy Spirit at once. The indwelling of the Divine Spirit is God's seal of ownership. It is not only a seal of ownership, but of security. It is also the guarantee of the completion of the work of redemption.

VII. The Unity of the Spirit (Eph. 4:1-6).

Christian unity is only possible when effected by the one Holy Spirit.

VIII. The Sin of Grieving the Spirit (Eph. 4:30).

The Spirit may be grieved by failure to respond to his initiative, by yielding to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye and the vainglory of life, by failure to render full and free obedience, as well as failure to surrender every faculty of the being to his control and direction.

Joy

Joy is the mainspring in the whole round of everlasting nature; joy moves the wheels of the great timepiece of the world; she it is that loosens flowers from their buds, suns from their firmaments, rolling spheres in distant space seen not by the glass of the astronomer.—Schiller.

Nobleness

Be noble, and the nobleness that lies in other men, sleeping but never dead, will rise in majesty to meet thine own.—James Russell Lowell.

Soft Soap

By JANE HARVEY

©. McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

IT WAS an early fall morning in the big city. Busses were pursuing their quiet pilgrimages past Mrs. Hannigan's boarding and rooming house. Mrs. Hannigan's bed of zinnias glowed with beauty in the morning sun. Karen, scrubbing the front steps, paused a moment to admire them.

Quite suddenly, the landlady's ample figure filled the doorway:

"Karen! Where's your soap?"

"But of course—in the water."

"Meltin' itself soft! Take it out! I never see such soap bills! A body'd think you eat it!"

"I am not that hungry—yet," flashed Karen, red staining her fair cheeks. "And if I leave it not in the water, I get me no suds."

"Take it out! I won't speak to you again!" hissed Mrs. Hannigan.

"But that would be lovely," sighed the girl under her breath.

The landlady stepped back into the house to greet her guests with her warm motherly smile and Karen turned to her work. Obediently, she took the bar of yellow soap from the water and laid it on the step beside her. She wielded the scrubbing brush with a fine fervor which was not wholly inspired by a desire for cleanliness. Some of it was merely an outlet for her charged emotions. For Karen was in love and there was no one in America in whom she could confide her big secret.

He—the glorified hero of her dreams—was a roomer and boarder at Mrs. Hannigan's. He was as stalwart as a Norse god should be and a countryman of Karen's. Also, he was quite unaware of her existence except as the maid who cleaned his room and scrubbed the front steps.

On this bright morning she was finding life difficult and hard to endure. Great sighs welled up from her heart and spilled over her red lips. When she heard the guests pushing back their chairs in the dining room, she tipped back upon her heels and carefully brushed the hair from her forehead. Soon her hero would appear. He would pass her on the steps, throwing her a careless "Good morning!" This was the high moment of her day. Before she had secured the last wisp of yellow hair, the door opened and he stepped out. Karen rose quickly to her feet, drawing aside to let him pass. He took a single stride out and down, stepped on Karen's soap and skidded into her with violence. Karen, startled out of her shyness, caught him in a warm embrace and held him so until he could recover his dignity and his balance.

"Dod ding the girl!" he burst out, and added: "Can't you keep your soap in the water where it belongs?"

"I am so—so sorry. It is so too bad you have almost a fall! But Mrs. Hannigan she tell me always keep the soap out of the water. So I do and you have almost kill yourself."

Oscar Helversen—for such was her hero's name—met the pleading of her anchusa-blue eyes with a steely glare.

"I have troubles enough without my neck yet!" he barked.

"You have troubles?" murmured Karen, softly. "I am sorry for that, too."

He turned the full battery of his attention upon her and found her very easy to look at. He murmured something about catching a bus and went on his way.

When Oscar arrived at the boarding house that night, his nostrils were greeted with the odor of mutton. Oscar hated mutton. He decided on impulse, to go out for dinner. On his way up to his room he met Karen. She was altogether lovely in a dark blue suit with white cuffs and collar. She wore a small hat and carried a suit case.

"Going out?" he asked.

"Way out," she sighed. "Mrs. Hannigan saw you slip this morning and tell me to go."

"But—where—"

"The W. Y. till I find work."

"But—seeing it was my fault—maybe we better go out to dinner somewhere and talk it over—"

"But I would love that!" cried Karen, her blue eyes shining.

Oscar took her suitcase from her and they went to a nearby cafe.

It was a delightful supper piled on trays and carried to a secluded table. They talked—but not about their troubles. Troubles were postponed or dissolved or chemically changed into something magic so that they no longer existed for Karen and Oscar.

Other evenings followed: 'til Karen and Oscar decided that two can live as cheaply as one and much more happily.

It was several months after the ceremony when Oscar digging about in his wife's dresser drawer for a bit of court plaster, came upon a battered yellow substance with a disagreeable and familiar odor.

"Karen!" he called. "Kum haar!"

Karen came.

Karen took the yellow thing tenderly in her hand and a beatific smile curved her lips.

"This is the piece of soap which I have not—for once—waste and which has sent you leaping into my arms, Oscar. Mrs. Hannigan tell me I must leave it out of the water—and I did."

"Well, Karen, Mrs. Hannigan—for once—was right!"

"Yes—she was right! If I leave the soap in the water, I would get me a good suds. But I have leave it out of the water and I have get me a good husband. Which is much, much better—Oscar!"

PERSIA HAILED HOME OF PEACH

Expert Considers It Fruit That Tempted Eve.

A small, hairy, inedible peach, which grows wild at elevations of 7,000 feet in Tibet and China, is the Adam and Eve of all modern peaches, said Lloyd C. Stark, nurseryman of Louisiana, Mo., in a recent talk.

Discussing the origins of native fruits and their development through nursery cultivation to the varieties grown today, Stark said that for years it had been supposed the home of the peach was in Persia, because the name "peach" and its European equivalents were derived from the word "Persian" and the Greeks and Romans called peaches "Persian apples."

With the discovery of the small hairy peach, however, by Frank Meyer of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, it became scientifically established that the original home of the peach was the Tibet and Chinese plateaus. The Chinese called the wild peaches "Yeo Toa," and used them for firewood.

Although much is still to be learned of the origin of other native fruits, Stark said, all of them seem to have come from the general area of Central Asia.

The apple is supposed to have originated north and east of Persia, not far from the Biblical location of the Garden of Eden; cherries in Southwestern Asia between the Black and Caspian seas; and grapes near the Caspian sea.

The first development of wild fruits was near their original homes, from where the fruits were carried by commerce through the years into Chinese, Roman, Greek and Persian civilizations.

In China, the peach was given the greatest attention and assumed almost the dignity of a holy fruit. The peach was mentioned in Chinese literature 2,000 years before it was introduced into Persia and the Sanskrit-speaking countries.

To the Chinese, the peach possessed miraculous powers. It is mentioned as the "Tree of Life," and a peach, red on one side, is their symbol of long life.

In more ancient days, the Chinese believed eating a certain kind of peach would bring immortality and preserve the body from corruption to the end of the world. The peach tree was the "Tree of Knowledge" to the Chinese, and it may have been, Stark said, that the apple eaten by Eve in the Garden of Eden, after all was the Persian apple, or as it is known today, a peach.

Fruits were brought into Europe and the Western Hemisphere with the spread of civilization and were developed under the care of growers. Peaches grow well in sections of Missouri, the speaker said, because the soil is similar to that of their original habitat.

Cherries spread from the Caspian sea region into Switzerland and later throughout Europe and America; grapes from the same region east and west throughout Asia, Europe and Africa, and were disseminated by the Phoenicians, a thousand years before Christ; apples have moved from their Central Asiatic home to all temperate climates, including South America and Australia, and even as far north as colder regions in Northern Russia and Siberia.

Island Turning Over

Six hundred miles long, Sakhalin Island, off the northeast coast of Siberia, is less than a hundred miles wide at its broadest point. From the east, the turbulent Okhotsk sea licks it with cold and fierce winds. The southwestern part, however, is warmer and the climate is softened by the Japan sea, writes Vladmir Kondrey in Asia."

Geologists maintain that the island is turning over like a fowl on a spit. Its eastern shore is slowly emerging from beneath the water while the western shore sinks under the ocean. Although the process is very slow—only a few yards in a century—it is said that Sakhalin has already been twice covered by the ocean and has twice emerged. This has been established by the layers of coal alternated with layers of chalk. The island is moving and occasionally underground thunder shakes the earth.

SENSATIONAL TIRE HUNT FINISHED BY NOTED DETECTIVE

Joseph A. Faurot, Former Deputy New York Commissioner, Gathers Evidence On Goodyear G-3's

One of the most unusual and spectacular surveys ever conducted by an American manufacturer has just come to an end in New York City with the arrival there, following a two-months' "tire hunt," of Joseph A. Faurot, one time Deputy Police Commissioner of that city and the man who first used fingerprints as evidence in an American courtroom.

News of Faurot's sensational search for tire evidence from one coast to the other has just reached Bowdon's Service Station, Calera Goodyear tire dealer. The famed detective's inquiry has revealed overwhelming national approval of the new "G-3" All-Weather Tread tire, it is stated by R. E. Bowdon, Jr.

Setting out from New York with James Cannon, ace Manhattan newspaper man, who had just completed work on the Hauptmann case for his afternoon daily, Faurot visited parking lots, gas stations, garages and back yards from New York to San Francisco and from Winstom-Salem, North Carolina, to Detroit. Wherever he paused, he "third-degreed" car owners for tire clues. They interviewed thousands of tire users and the results of this inquiry, according to R. E. Bowdon, Jr., produced evidence of the outstanding performance of the "G-3" in all parts of the nation.

"I have been gathering evidence for a long time," Faurot stated on his return to New York. "I guess I have worked on every kind of case that comes into a big police department's jurisdiction. But never have I seen a clearer case than that in favor of the 'G-3'. My notes contain cold facts I gathered in Whitesville, W. Va., Kansas City, Mo., Royal Oak, Mich., Albuquerque, N. M.—and hundreds of other places. I say they are cold facts. That's the truth. Every leaf out of my notebook shows satisfaction in the ownership of G-3's."

Faurot is present Chief of the Department of Identification of the Commercial Crime Commission. Formerly, as Deputy Police Commissioner of New York, he headed all detective activities for Greater New York. He is widely known as the man who introduced the Bertillon system of fingerprint identification to America. He was chosen by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company as the ideal man to gather facts on the nation's response to the new All-Weather Tread.

According to P. W. Litchfield, president of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, who greeted Faurot on his arrival in New York, the trip has already registered results. "It is the most successful inquiry into consumer demands and consumer reaction that we have ever undertaken," said Mr. Litchfield. "Our new G-3 tire had been subjected to most elaborate tests at our factories, but we wanted the real facts showing how it was performing in the hands of tire users. Mr. Faurot has brought us our answer—a report from the country at large. His reports more than confirm every claim we have made for the tire. We are highly gratified."

LITTLE OR NO ROAD PAVING TO BE DONE WITH WORK FUNDS

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — H. H. Houk, chief engineer of the State Highway Department, said Monday that little if any hard-surface paving could be placed on Alabama roads with work-relief funds because of limitations placed upon the spending of the money.

"The relief purposes of the work-relief appropriation," said Houk, "have been obscured by the publicity on possible public works projects. Heretofore, public works and relief funds have been different and distinct appropriations, but we now must first meet relief needs and second public works."

In preliminary regulations received from Washington it was specified that $1,400 was to be used for each man year, including the cost of materials. Heretofore, highway work has been allowed to expend $2,000 per man year.

Houk explained that a man year was the amount to be paid a man for a year's work and that with that amount he must be provided with tools and materials with which to work. It does not necessarily mean any one man will be paid that amount, but the average must be kept at or below the $1,400 figure.

"This will not permit us to build expensive types of pavement or surfaces," Houk said, "although our greatest need right now is paving.

"It will permit us to grade only federal aid system roads, or grade and surface with local materials feeder or secondary roads.

It was also pointed out by the engineer that 90 per cent of the persons employed on any project must be taken from relief rolls, making works center in dense relief areas.

"Industrial areas, especially Jefferson County, will benefit most because of the density of persons on relief rolls," Houk said.

Grade crossing projects will be apportioned to railroads according to the total number of rail miles in the state, the railroad having the most mileage getting the most eliminations.

"On all projects," Houk said, "we must show the number of men to be employed, number of man hours needed on job, estimated cost and quality and quantity of each material to be used."

Eighteen Club Girls Win Auburn Honors

Treatment For Infantile Paralysis Is Termed "Complete Success" By Dr. J. T. Stulb, Of New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—A treatment for infantile paralysis as simple as the claims made for it are astonishing, was explained to the New Orleans Parish Medical Society June 10th by Dr. J. T. Stulb, chief of contagious and infectious diseases at Charity Hospital.

Dr. Stulb said that by injecting the blood of healthy persons into the blood stream of persons stricken by the deadily disease he has had "complete success" in 15 cases since 1932.

Only in cases where the disease is so far advanced that atrophy, or withering of the limbs, has set in is the treatment likely to prove unsuccessful, Dr. Stulb said.

The blood injected into the arteries of the diseased patients need not be "typed," Dr. Stulb said.

"The 'whole blood' does the work," Dr. Stulb said. "The anti-bodies continued in the 'whole blood' destroy the organisms which produce infantile paralysis."

Ages of the 15 patients he said his treatment had "cured" ranged from two to 14 years. Dr. Stulb presented four of the children to the physicians June 10th. Two of them were "completely cured."

NRA'S COSTS PUT AT 93 MILLIONS FOR TWO-YEAR PERIOD

NEW YORK, N. Y.—The total cost of administering the national recovery act and its 578 codes during the two-year period ending this month amounted to more than $93,000,000, according to a report of the National Industrial Conference Board.

In a breakdown of the figures the report lists code authority expenditures of $71,704,000 as the largest single item. Administration of the petroleum code cost $2,214,963 and the National Labor Relations Board spent $1,214,489, according to the report.

The conference board is sponsored by large manufacturers throughout the country.

FARMER READY TO GIVE UP COTTON IF BANKHEAD DESIRES

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There's a Georgia farmer who will plow up his whole cotton crop if Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) wants him to.

Responses from Bankhead's suggestion there might be another cotton "plow-up" if favorable growing conditions gave promise of an above-quota crop included the following from Dalton, Georgia:

"I am only too glad to make further reductions on my cotton acreage should you deem it necessary. In fact, I am ready to plow up my entire crop at your request and would certainly appreciate it very much if you could get a bill of this nature through at once in order that I will have time to sow my cotton ground with something for home consumption."

Young Democrats To Meet Tuesday Night

An urgent call is made to the League of Young Democrats of Shelby County, to meet in the Courthouse in Columbiana on next Tuesday night, June 18th, at 8:00 o'clock, by Chairman Homer J. Walton.

Every Democrat—men and women, between the ages of 21 and 39, are cordially invited to be present at this important meeting. A complete re-organization, and the re-election of Committees and officers will be held at this time, and an active campaign will be waged for members.

Alabama Land Values Maintain Best Level

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The value of farm lands in Alabama has maintained a more nearly even level than the average for the United States and than other states surrounding, with the exception of Florida, reports F. W. Gist, state and federal agricultural statistician.

Index numbers of such values, based on the average of 1912-14, which are taken as 100, indicate the level of Alabama values in 1920 was 177, while the average for the United States in the same year was 170. The average for 1935 in Alabama is found to be 110, while that of the United States is 79. Only a few states show a higher level of land values at present than the average for Alabama.

NEW VINCENT, PELL CITY AND ASHVILLE HIGHWAY SOUGHT

PELL CITY, Ala.—Judge Ward Forman, of St. Clair County, conferred with Governor Graves during the past week regarding the proposed new Vincent-Pell City-Ashville Highway.

Preliminary surveys of the road would have it tie in with the Florida Short Route at Harpersville and also act as a feeder to the Montgomery Highway, connecting at Calera. From Harpersville north it would continue on to Vincent, Pell City and Ashville, turning northwest at Ashville to Oneonta and on north.

According to sources close to Governor Graves, the chief executive has definitely committed himself on the matter and has asked Gaston Scott, state highway commissioner, to take preliminary steps to get the road under construction.

The road will be chert from Vincent to Ashville and this distance will total about 40 miles.

Baptist Revival Will Start Sun., June 16th

The Baptist Revival will begin next Sunday, June 16th, at eleven o'clock. The Rev. D. Z. Wooley will have assisting him in this series of meetings, Dr. T. E. Steeley, of Roanoke, Alabama. The public is cordially invited to the Baptist Church in Columbiana for the morning and evening services which will last through all next week.

PLANS ALL SET FOR BETTER HOUSING DAY, SAT., JUNE 15

Federal Housing projects are going steadily forward in Shelby County. Saturday, June 15th, has been designated as Better Housing Day in Columbiana by a Proclamation issued by Mayor Harry Gordon.

This day has heretofore been set apart by the Governor all over the State of Alabama, and 50 Model Homes will be begun in Alabama on this day. There are four applicants in Columbiana who will likely take advantage of this administration's constructive plan for Better Housing, and much credit is given to Mrs. Lida Wood, Chairman in Columbiana, for the interest and thorough understanding of the questions propounded to her by the many people in this community who would like to avail themselves of this Better Housing plan for remodeling and rebuilding.

See her today for detailed information and for application blanks.

Boll Weevils Reported In 21 State Counties

AUBURN, Ala.—Boll weevils are plentiful throughout south Alabama. They have been reported by county agents in the following counties:

Baldwin, Bibb, Butler, Chambers, Dale, Dallas, Fayette, Hale, Henry, Choctaw, Clay, Conecuh, Crenshaw, Jackson, Lowndes, Madison, Pike, Russell, Talladega, Tallapoosa, and Tuscaloosa.

Upon receiving the report Prof. J. M. Robinson, entomologist, recommended the use of calcium arsenate in combatting this cotton insect. He stated that the poison should be applied by a dust gun at the rate of 5 or 6 pounds per acre.

Summer Best Time To Purchase Ewes

AUBURN, Ala.—One of the best times to buy ewes for sheep production is following the weaning of lambs in the early summer, states J. C. Grimes, head of the animal industry division of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Prices are usually lower at this season of the year due to the ewes not being bred and have very little growth of wool on them.

Ewes should be treated two or three times for stomach worms before breeding and treatment should be three or four weeks apart, he says. Drenching with bluestone solution (copper sulphate) is the most satisfactory treatment.

LAUDERDALE SAYS JUNE 18TH [illegible] DAY TO GET GIN TICKETS

Mary Sparks 7-12-85

A. A. Lauderdale, Shelby County Farm Demonstration Agent, says that Tuesday, June 18th, is the final date to make application for Gin Tickets.

It is necessary for all cotton farmers to make application for gin tickets in order to sell their cotton tax-free this Fall.

The cotton committeemen have held meetings throughout the County to aid farmers in making these applications. Those who failed to meet the committee should come to the County Agent's Office in Columbiana at once and make application.

If you know of a neighbor who has not made application for gin tickets, please advise him to do so at once.

(Signed) A. A. LAUDERDALE,
County Farm Agent.

Vaudeville Review At Siluria, Sat., June 15

SILURIA, Ala.—There will be a Big Western Vaudeville Review next Saturday night, June 15th, at the Siluria School House. Mack and Johnson, singing and dancing team, with String Band, will perform. Also Marie Mack, vaudeville's favorite blue's singer. Admission will be 10 and 20 cents.

BALDWIN CITIZENS PLAN FOR LARGER GULF STATE PARK

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—An extension of Gulf State Park is being planned by Baldwin County citizens in cooperation with the Park Bureau of the Alabama Commission of Forestry. Dr. W. C. Holmes, of Foley, and State Representative A. B. McPhaul, of Seminole, are among the leaders in the movement. Other prominent citizens are assisting in the plan. Gulf Park already has an area of nearly 1000 acres including three-eights of a mile of ocean front and a large portion of what is known as Big Lake, a body of fresh water lying within a quarter of a mile of the sea. However, to round out the project, about 2000 acres additional are required.

Just how the supplemental acreage can be obtained is a very live question for the Park Bureau. The financial condition of the State is still somewhat unencouraging, and, while the United States Government will allot funds for the development of State Parks, it will not buy the land. It is required that this be secured by the State itself.

As a part of the solution, at least, it is expected that considerable areas will be donated to the State. Strong efforts are being made by Baldwin County citizens to develop this phase of acquisition on a substantial basis. The National Park Service of the Federal Government and the Park Bureau of the State Commission of Forestry are prepared to continue and expand the work program, providing that additional acreage be secured. At the present time prospects for such a development appear quite favorable.

COUNTIES CAN AID IN HEALTH WORK IF BILL PASSES HOUSE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — County authorities, if they so desire, are empowered to set aside a part of their present revenues for the protection of the health of the people under a bill which has passed the Alabama Senate and is now pending in the House of Representatives.

Emphasizing that the law would be optional legislation, Dr. J. N. Baker, State Health Officer, to-day urged Alabama citizens to impress upon their Representatives in the Legislature the importance of placing public health work on a more stable basis, and to ask that the bill be given approval.

The bill provides that the governing body of each county, "in its discretion," may set aside a part of its general fund to establish and maintain a full-time health unit.

With the health authorities knowing how much they will receive, Dr. Baker said a progressive program may be planned that will be a great benefit to the people of the county.

Cullman County has assured its health unit continued and adequate support by the fact that Representative M. L. Robertson, of Cullman, obtained passage of a law requiring the governing authorities to set aside $5,000 a year for public health work. The law immediately was approved by Governor Bibb Graves.

The pending general bill, however, makes it optional for the counties to set aside a health fund.

Ways To Control Screw Worms Told

AUBURN, Ala.—With the appearance of screm morms in a number of south Alabama counties, farmers are being told that benzol is the best material to use in killing the insects. Chloroform is also good.

In telling farmers how to rid animals of screw worms, Prof. J. M. Robinson, entomologist, and Dr. R. S. Sugg, livestock specialist, advise the following:

If there is much discharge from the wound swab it out with sterile absorbent cotton and thoroughly wash the discharge from the surrounding area with water, then inject benzol (90% commercial) either by using a syringe or an oil can, being sure to fill all pockets and cavities. Allow the benzol to act 2 or 3 minutes and then repeat the injection. In some cases it may be necessary to split the skin in order to get at the maggots in deep pockets, but as little damage as possible should be done to the tissues. Chloroform can be used instead of benzol, but it is more expensive. After the maggots are killed and removed from the wound, apply pine tar oil to it and around the affected area. Repeat this treatment every day for 3 days then continue the treatments at intervals of 3 or 4 days until you are sure all maggots are killed.

If pine tar oil is not available, use one part of pine tar and two parts of crankcase oil or cottonseed oil. The pine tar is more irritating and will not repel flies as long as the pine tar oil. Dehorning paint, which can be ordered through your local veterinarian, is waterproof and is one of the best fly repellants.

Hay Growers Seek A.A.A. Assistance

AUBURN, Ala.—Hay producers of the Black Belt section of Alabama and Mississippi are at present raising money among themselves to send representatives to Washington on June 16th to ask the AAA officials to purchase about 700 cars of surplus Johnson grass hay for which they cannot find a market.

State CCC Quota Set At 7,177 Men

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A cam- Conservation Corps to full strength—paign to bring the expanded Civilian 600,000 men—will be launched June 15th, it was announced last Sunday.

Of the 328,000 additional enrollees to be selected for entrance July 1st and camp work by August 31st, Alabama's quota is 7,177 men.

New enrollees must be taken from relief rolls. The regulations provide that former enrollees may join for another period under certain conditions.

President Suggests Amendment of Constitution but Asks Stop-Gap Legislation to Permit Continuance of the New Deal Program.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has created a major issue for the campaign of 1936 and stirred up widespread debate and controversy over a question that the nation had thought was settled in its early days. Furthermore, it is likely he has started the movement for a complete re-alignment of political forces into what will be virtually two new parties. Briefly, he proposes that the Constitution be changed to take from the states and give to the federal government power over the chief social and economic questions so that the New Deal may be saved from the doom pronounced upon it by the Supreme court.

Bainbridge Colby

In the course of a two hour talk with the Washington correspondents the President sent up a trial balloon on the plan he had conceived for remodeling the government to fit his program, declaring that he favored curtailing the sovereignty of the states and giving the central government full control over agriculture, industry, commerce and all other occupations and enterprises. He said this question of amending or re-writing the Constitution must be settled by a vote of the people. In some ways, he said, the Supreme court decision was the best thing that could have happened to the country because it clarified the issue as he presented it. The issue must be met by moving one way or the other, he said, back to the 13 states or forward to the modern interpretation.

We are the only country in the world which has not solved this problem, Mr. Roosevelt said. We thought we were solving it, but now it is thrown right back in our faces. We are relegated to the "horse and buggy" interpretation of the interstate commerce clause.

That many prominent Democrats will be alienated from their support of Mr. Roosevelt by this pronouncement is certain. Already there has been launched a movement for those of the party who seek "a return to constitutional government" to unite with the Republicans who are of like mind. Its leaders are Bainbridge Colby, who was secretary of state in President Wilson's cabinet, and Chief Justice William R. Pattangall of the Massachusetts Supreme court.

Mr. Colby has written to a number of Democratic leaders of national repute proposing they meet in a southern city, preferably Richmond, "to consider some form of political action that is for our country and above party."

In a letter to a friend in Washington it was revealed that Chief Justice Pattangall had decided to resign in order to join with other Jeffersonian Democrats to bring about a coalition with Republicans and the restoration of "constitutional government" to replace the New Deal.

HAVING startled the country by his proposition for changing the basic law, Mr. Roosevelt turned his attention to speedy legislation that might salvage part of the NRA, considering, it was authoritatively said, that amendment of the Constitution was not a matter of the immediate future. He asked congress to pass the Clark resolution in modified form extending the NRA until April 1, 1936, with the understanding that it would be a skeleton organization to collect and classify data but without power to enforce wages, hours or fair trade practices upon industry, except in the case of work done for the government. This was agreeable to both the senate and the house majorities. The President said there would be no attempt to circumvent the Supreme court decision or to persuade business men to enter into voluntary code agreements.

Attorney General Cummings, Solicitor General Reed, Felix Frankfurter and others were studying numerous proposals for substitutes for the NRA, but Secretary Early of the White House staff said none of the suggestions had met the requirements. Secretary of Labor Perkins had a plan for using the government's taxing powers as a means toward interstate regulation. Senators Nye and King introduced in the senate a bill to expand the powers of the federal trade commission. And there were many other propositions, but none of them seemed adequate.

CONGRESS, it now appears, will be in session until September, for the President handed to the leaders a "must" program of legislation that will keep the law makers busy for a long time. Here is the list:

1. Social security bill.
2. Omnibus banking bill.
3. Holding company bill.
4. Wagner labor relations bill, and Guffey coal regulations bill.
5. Tennessee valley bill.
6. Bankhead cotton act extension.
7. AAA amendments.
8. Tax extension bill.
9. Temporary NRA extension.
10. NRA government contract requirements.
11. Federal alcohol control legislation.
12. Federal oil control legislation.
13. Central statistical board set up.
14. Electrical farm and home authority set up.

The holding company measure has been resisted firmly in committee by two Democrats, Pettingill of Indiana and Huddleston of Alabama. In a senate debate it was vigorously attacked by Dieterich of Illinois, Democrat, and Hastings of Delaware, Republican, as an unconstitutional scheme to destroy the government's competitors in the power business. Mr. Dieterich said it was his honest conviction that the measure would destroy all private ownership of public utilities in the country, together with the millions upon millions of dollars invested in them by private citizens.

Thomas N. McCarter

This measure was naturally the chief topic of discussion at the annual convention of the Edison Electric Institute at Atlantic City. President Thomas N. McCarter told the assemblage that the privately owned power industry must fight for its life against the administration's "most devastating and destructive attack." He told of presenting "in person" to the President "a dignified memorial" setting forth "facts that seemed to the trustees to threaten the existence of this industry and appealed to the government for a get-together policy for the elimination of whatever abuses and wrongs might be found to exist," but said he got nowhere.

TEMPORARILY the work-relief program was halted when the officials found that the projects were too costly, and they set about hunting up projects that would provide maximum work at minimum cost, so that the promise to employ 3,500,000 persons can be carried out. Meanwhile approval of all applications was held up.

They have an average of $1,100 per man to spend. Yet the $1,000,000,000 in projects already planned will cost approximately $2,000 for every person taken off relief rolls and kept on government pay rolls until July 1, 1936.

To reduce the average, Mr. Roosevelt instructed Progress Director Harry L. Hopkins to search the country for local, quick work where material costs will be low with almost all the money going for labor and wages.

The plan of enlarging the Civilian Conservation corps from 300,000 to 600,000 was in process of revision because it was believed the additional men could not be enrolled if the present eighteen to twenty-five-year-old age limit were retained. The probability was the age limit would be raised to thirty years.

SOLELY on account of ill health, Ramsay MacDonald has retired as prime minister of Great Britain and gone to Lossiemouth, his home in Scotland, for a good rest. His successor as head of the national cabinet is Stanley Baldwin, the veteran leader of Conservatives who has been serving as lord president of the council and in reality has been a deputy prime minister since the national government was formed seven years ago. Mr. MacDonald exchanges places with him, thus remaining in the cabinet but without departmental duties. The date of his last cabinet meeting as prime minister was the sixth anniversary of his assumption of the office for the second time. With the exception of H. H. Asquith he has held the office continuously for the longest period in modern times.

Stanley Baldwin

Of the other changes in the cabinet the most important was the transfer of Sir John Simon from the foreign office to the home office. He is succeeded in the former by Sir Samuel Hoare, who has been chief secretary for India. Mr. MacDonald's son Malcolm, only thirty-four years old, was made colonial secretary.

BOUISSON'S French cabinet having fallen almost immediately, President Lebrun had great difficulty finding another premier. Pierre Laval, former foreign minister, finally undertook to form a new government and to "save the franc." He kept the foreign ministry post himself, and put Marcel Regnier in as minister of finance.

WITHOUT any special ceremony the Supreme court, at the end of its spring session, for the last time walked out of the old senate chamber which it has occupied as a courtroom since 1859. When the court reconvenes next October after its summer recess it will be housed in the magnificent new $10,000,000 marble building just east of the Capitol.

CHAIRMAN JESSE H. JONES announced that in the future the RFC will file with the interstate commission, if necessary, its own reorganization plans for railroads in financial difficulties and in which it holds a financial interest.

At the same time Mr. Jones announced a plan whereby the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific railroad would be organized with the aid of a $24,000,000 government loan. A four-point program was worked out in conferences between Mr. Jones and H. A. Scandrett, president of the road, and will be filed for court approval.

Notice of the intention of the RFC to force reorganization plans has been given in letters to the Denver & Rio Grande Western, and the Western Pacific.

WITHOUT discussion and without a record vote the house passed the Wilcox bill calling for the construction of seven powerful army air bases at a total cost of $110,000,000. The measure specifies the locations as the Atlantic Northeast, the Atlantic Southeast and Caribbean areas, the southeastern states, the Pacific Northwest, Alaska, the Rocky mountain area, and "intermediate stations necessary for transcontinental movements in the maneuvers of the general headquarters air force."

ONE of the most prominent figures in the World war passed from the scene with the death in Essex, England, of Viscount Byng of Vimy. As a young officer of cavalry Byng distinguished himself in campaigns in the Sudan, in South Africa and in India. In the great war he won undying fame by his desperate defense of Ypres when it was attacked by overwhelmingly superior German forces which for the first time used poison gas and flame throwers. He was given a baronetcy for this and other gallant work, and after serving as governor-general of Canada from 1921 to 1926 he was made a viscount and later a field marshal. He was called from retirement in 1928 to become commissioner of London's police force, but ill health forced him to resign this post in 1931.

Another war commander who died was Gen. Alexander von Linsingen, who was at the head of the German southern army after having fought through the earlier campaigns in northern France.

JAPAN'S army, which appears to rule Japan's foreign policy, has decided that Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, dictator of China, must retire. This was announced at Tientsin by Col. Takashi Sakai, chief of staff of the Japanese troops in North China. He said:

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek

"Chiang Kai-shek, using his financial and military power under the pretense of uniting China, is actually corrupting and disintegrating North China, which Chiang regards as a colony. Hence the Japanese army now feels that it is the wisest policy to uproot Chiang Kai-shek's influence, especially in North China.

"It is not the communists but Chiang Kai-shek who will put an end to the existence of China. The Japanese army intends to take the necessary measures to compel the Chinese goverment to abolish the Tientsin garrison corps, the Kuomintang political branches, the Blue Shirt secret police and patriotic societies encouraging the consumption of native goods. These societies have been responsible for anti-Japanese sentiment as well as disturbance of peace and order within Manchukuo."

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH'S active participation in the affairs of Transcontinental and Western Air has been terminated at least for the present. Henry B. Dupont, chairman of the board, in making the announcement, denied there had been any disagreement between the famous aviator and the company officials.

"Colonel Lindbergh never has devoted 100 per cent of his time to TWA activities," Mr. Dupont said. "As advisor he drew a retainer for his technical advice. Sometimes he worked several days in succession, sometimes only two or three days a month.

"He has devoted much time to the company, but now has decided to devote the next few months exclusively to his personal affairs, although he will continue to be available in emergencies for consultation. He still is TWA's technical adviser and he will be available if we need him. Probably when his personal affairs are straightened out he may be devoting a lot of time to our problems."

LITTLE George Weyerhaeuser, nine-year-old lumber fortune heir who was kidnaped from Tacoma, is safe at home, but the "snatchers" who held him captive for a week got away with $200,000 ransom money paid by the lad's family. They fled in a fast automobile, and at this writing are still at large, though pursued closely by an army of government agents and other officers.

FLOODS and tornadoes wrought havoc in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Texas and Kansas—a region that only recently was afflicted by drouth and dust storms. It was thought as many as 250 lives were lost, and great numbers of families were rendered homeless. The worst flood area was in southern Nebraska, where the Republican river was swollen into a raging torrent.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—For the third time, in the NRA decision, the Supreme court has tried to diagram for congress a pattern by which it can accomplish the desired New Deal reforms. Until now there has been very little effort to meet the ideas of the high court. But from now on there must be.

Until now many New Dealers have been saying privately that the high court would change its tune. What they really have meant is that there would be a change in the court within a year, and the slender five to four conservative lead would be wiped out.

But in the NRA decision the court was unanimous. There has been a very apparent drift, even among the so-called liberals of the court, toward the "pattern" for progressive legislation on which the majority insisted in the decision throwing out the oil code, but to which so little attention was paid. Also toward another diagram as to authority revealed in the decision on railroad pensions.

The court is very positive about the method in which decisions must be made by such bodies as the interstate commerce commission, the NRA, the AAA, the federal trade commission, etc.

In each case, to put it in simple language, the body making a decision must conduct a fact finding investigation. It must recite the facts, recite the powers granted it by law, and then announce its findings. This last word is very important. The Supreme court thinks a lot of it.

The main purpose behind all this is to force congress to be very specific indeed about powers granted, to set up limits, and to specify who shall make the fact finding investigations and pronounce the "findings."

Follows Court's Ideas

If all the other governmental bodies would study the decisions of the I. C. C., they would discover that the railroad regulating body has been strictly complying with the court's ideas for these many years. As a result the number of times the I. C. C. has gotten its fingers burned by a reversing court decision has been so small as to be almost inconsequential.

There has been a lot of loose talk since the decision of the court, as to whether the effort would be to invalidate this or that, and to make rewriting this or that essential. Roughly, the court pattern would require the redrafting of most of the New Deal legislation, but that part of it is generally recognized. What is not so generally appreciated is that the New Deal agencies must reform their methods of procedure.

They must conduct fact finding investigations. Granted this is done, and the story of the investigation is told in the final decision, there is no disposition on the part of the high court to go behind the record as to the accuracy of these findings. So it is not a question of heckling the NRA, or the TVA, or the AAA as to whether it has the facts correctly.

But it must state them, it must state the power under which it acts, and must then present its findings.

To some observers this fixed purpose on the part of the Supreme court may seem rather captious. But to the court it is enormously important. The court has made rather clear why it wants the decisions made in this way. In the first place, it gives anyone objecting to them a chance for lodging an effectual protest, either by attacking the powers under which the action is taken, or by attacking the record of fact finding as revealed, or the conclusions reached from that fact finding.

In short, the Supreme court formula gives the constitutional right of appeal a reality, which under the methods pursued by the NRA and certain other New Deal agencies was and is not present.

Up to Soldier Lobby

What happens now on the soldier bonus depends, absolutely, on the soldier lobby. Col. John Thomas Taylor, his advisers and his superiors in the Legion organization, will determine, within fairly sharply defined limits, what will be done.

If they want to, they can put over something very close to the so-called Harrison compromise. At the time this compromise was first proposed, Senator Harrison stated that President Roosevelt would sign it.

Whether the President would sign it if passed now, following his veto's being sustained, is something else again. New elements enter into it. For example, if the Harrison plan had been accepted when proposed, the President might have been able to convince the conservatives he wants to stay with him that otherwise he might have had not only the bonus but inflation forced on him.

He can no longer make that defense to opponents of the bonus. So it is entirely possible that the President might veto the Harrison bill, if passed now.

But—the Harrison bill could be passed over the veto with ease. There is no argument about the house. That body gave far above the two-thirds majority for the Patman bill. So the whole case rests in the senate.

Now the truth is that the apparent margin of eight votes, which the President had in sustaining his veto in the senate, was padded somewhat. It was not a firm margin. For example, close friends of both Senator Pope of Idaho, and Coolidge of Massachusetts report that each of these senators told the soldiers that if they could muster enough votes to override the veto with their votes, they would vote for the bonus. Otherwise not. Both, as a matter of fact, voted for the Patman bill on its first passage.

Kicks From Home

Reports also are that Senator Chavez of New Mexico has had so much kicking from his state on his vote to sustain the veto that he would feel obliged to vote for such a measure as the Harrison compromise if it were put forward, veto or no veto.

It is not necessary to go on with names to substantiate the point. Obviously the Harrison bill would avoid two of the points of attack made by the President in his veto message. In effect, it provides for payment only of present value of the bonus certificates, thus meeting the President's point that $750 invested now in a government bond would produce $1,000 in 1945 when the bonus certificates are due.

Also the Harrison compromise has no printing press money provision. These two important differences would be enough to change senatorial approval from the 54 to 40 veto sustaining roll-call to more than two-thirds favoring the bill.

Privately, everybody on Capitol Hill knows this. The only question is whether the Legionaires want to push their advantage now, or whether they think it would be better strategy to wait until the eve of election next year.

By waiting they could probably get a little more cash for the soldiers. By taking a little less now they would be sure. Naturally the representatives of the Legion are not loath to have something to keep on battling for. It justifies their existence. Not to mention their salaries.

True, it is generally believed that as soon as the bonus has been finally disposed of the Legionaires will start working on pension legislation. But they do not like to talk about that.

G. O. P. Not Jubilant

Old heads among the Republican leaders—there are a few despite the fact that for one reason or another they do not seem to loom as possible candidates—are not as jubilant about the terrible jolting the administration has been getting from the Supreme court as most published interviews would have one believe.

There are two reasons for their pessimism—so far as G. O. P. advantage from the situation is concerned. One is that they know perfectly well Franklin D. Roosevelt is a very resourceful person. They know that within a short time he will evolve some sort of substitute program. They know that the big propaganda machine of the administration will do a swell job in telling the people about its possibilities. And they are not sure that it will be demonstrated to be a flop in time to head off Roosevelt's re-election.

They are perfectly sure in their own minds that no program can be drafted to accomplish the New Deal aims—particularly as to planned economy, government control of production, etc.—which will not involve a drastic revising of the Constitution. But they are not sure the people will be convinced of this before election.

Their minds go back to the first days of NRA, to all the enthusiasm about shorter hours, raising minimum pay scales, eliminating child labor, benefiting manufacturers and other employers by checkmating the chiseler, permitting co-operation, and temporarily forgetting about the anti-trust laws.

Few, indeed, were the Republican leaders in those days who dared attack the whole scheme, either as unconstitutional or undesirable. Even those who privately disapproved the whole thing knew that it would not only be foolish, politically, but, coming from Republicans, might even be regarded as rather unpatriotic partizanship. For it could certainly be attacked as tending to prevent what then seemed to many as the only proposal to get the country out of the depression from having a chance to succeed.

Seems Strange Now

This view animated public opinion very generally when General Johnson was emitting blasts in the first blush of his enthusiasm. Which seems strange now in view of the chorus of approval for the Supreme court decision.

So what the skeptics among Republican leaders are worried about today is that something approaching that situation may be attained when the administration starts on its new tack.

The other angle for their pessimism is they fear a big reaction from the present wave of satisfaction over the court verdicts. They fear that the strikes now threatening, and various other conditions that may arise, may turn public sentiment all around within the next six months or more.

Involved in this is a rather interesting psychological factor. If the Supreme court decision had been 5 to 4, it is reasonable to assume that the New Dealers would be almost hysterical at the moment in denouncing the "reactionary majority" of the court. They would have kicked up so much fuss that the people in sympathy with the majority opinion would be irritated. This would keep them in a partisan mental condition, so far as the New Deal program is concerned. In short, a splended mental condition for a good hot political campaign.

But the New Dealers are stunned at the blow. All thought of a change in the court is abandoned. Which is not calculated to keep critics of the New Deal steamed up. They are not only likely to cool off, but to have misgivings.

MAN SHOOTS SELF AND LIES ALONE IN TORTURE FIVE DAYS

Rescued by Two Fishermen, He Tells of Horror of "Living Death."

Springfield, Mo.—Despondent over his failure to obtain work, William Slack, twenty-nine, a transient painter of Fort Erie, Ont., shot himself beside a creek near Galloway, Mo., then lay paralyzed for five days and nights without food until discovered by two fishermen.

He had two bullet wounds in his neck and he was in an emaciated condition. His throat and legs were paralyzed. His chest and sides were sunburned. He could not talk above a whisper. At a hospital here he told his story.

"It was h—l," he said. "The first bullet didn't seem to affect me, so I re-loaded and shot again. This time the bullet seemed to paralyze me. I fell down and rolled to the foot of the hill, which was near the bank of the creek.

Undescribable Agony.

"For a while I seemed dazed; then I must have lost consciousness. I guess it was hours later that I awakened, because it was dark. That was where h—l started in. I went through agony that cannot be described.

"I was thirsty but couldn't crawl to the stream. I was hungry, but there was no hope of getting food. At times, I could hear voices of people passing and autos. But I couldn't call for help. My voice had faded to a whisper.

"Sometimes I would go into crazy sleep and dream that I was being given a drink. Then I'd wake up, my mouth dry as a desert, and see the stream, but couldn't get to it.

Crawls to Stream.

"I wouldn't be here today if a little strength hadn't come to me the morning before the fishermen found me. That morning I found I could use my arms a little. Slowly and painfully I raised in a sitting position, then crept along, snake fashion, to the stream. I was expecting to drink the creek dry, but two little sips were all I could take—I couldn't swallow. The only other water I tasted was rain that fell into my mouth on two nights.

"I had given up all hope of being rescued and was wanting to die when I saw the fishermen. I hadn't been able to make a vocal sound, but I knew that was my only chance, slim as it was. The men were not walking in my direction.

"I put all the strength I had in my throat and tried to yell. I did make some kind of a noise. It attracted the fishermen and they came to me."

Asked if he wants to recover, Slack said: "It doesn't make much difference to me."

Hot Sausages and Beer Revive Air Raid Victim

Vienna.—A stein of beer and a pair of "hot dogs" resurrected a man "killed" in a sham air attack.

While the whole population of this town, upon orders of the authorities, was locked up in houses and cellars the air raid took place.

A large gas bomb fell on the market. A fire brigade man, according to instructions, cautiously approached the instrument and dropped "dead" when he touched it. This was too much for the "golden heart" of Alois Huber, a barkeeper who, peering through his closely drawn curtains, was watching the events.

Forgetting orders, he rushed out straight into the danger zone where the victim was lying. He carried a large mug of foaming beer and a couple of sausages.

The effect upon the dead man was astonishing; the corpse rose, hastily swallowed beer and sausages, and fell back again, and the air raid continued.

Killing and Suicide a Sequel to Loss of Job

Joliet, Ill.—Frank Cabetto, forty-six, held his aching head and moaned. His wife had disappeared. His son, Barney, had been fired from his job.

Cabetto stuffed an old .38 calibre revolver into the pocket of his baggy coat and went to the home of Pasqual Daschanro, factory foreman who discharged Barney.

"You put my boy back to work," demanded Cabetto.

The Daschanros, their two children and a guest were seated at dinner. Cabetto fired twice. The first shot killed Mrs. Ida Daschanro, forty-five. The second missed her husband. Taken to jail Cabetto learned that the body of his wife, who vanished April 5, had been found in a drainage canal at Morris, Ill., an apparent suicide.

He Painted Wrong House So Can't Collect for Job

Sunbury, Pa.—The absent-minded house painter has come to the front in Danville.

Several weeks ago he closed a deal with a landlord to paint a house. He performed what he thought were his duties, then went to collect. The owner wanted to see the job and then the complications developed.

It developed that he painted the wrong house.

So he went to the property where he had worked and tried to collect. He was threatened with arrest for trespassing.

The name of the painter has been kept a guarded secret.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California just as the beginning of the gold rush seems to have deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their poetic father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works. Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store.

CHAPTER II

—3—

She walked home in languid twilight; all Clippersville was relaxed and jaded after the fierce, unexpected heat of the spring day. Gail thought that summer would be upon the world in no time now, the hot, dry, inland summer of California. Edith would buy four yards of dark blue dotted swiss, as she always did, and make herself a dainty, cool summer dress to wear with her lace collar. And Ariel would get out her cheap little silk slips and striped frocks.

Gail looked at a dress in Muller's window, a blue organdy with thin orange ribbons hanging in a bunch from shoulder and waist.

Turning away from the window, she walked straight into the miracle.

"I beg your pardon!" she said, laughing. For she had really crashed into this man inexcusably.

"Gail Lawrence!" he said.

For a second she was bewildered, taken back. Then with her own peculiar graciousness she extended both hands, and her round face lighted, and her blue eyes.

"Van Murchison!"

"Well, hel—lo!" he said delightedly. "But I didn't know you were in town!"

"But I wasn't!"

And they both laughed ecstatically.

"No, but seriously, Van," Gail presently began, in a delicious flutter but with a sensible and businesslike air, "seriously, when did you come and why, and how long are you going to be here, and what about Yale?"

"Seriously," he answered, dutifully, although still visibly abrim with laughter and excitement—"seriously— But are you walking home?"

"I am. My honest working day is done."

Laughter. Van put his hand with delightful familiarity under her elbow. They turned toward the Lawrence house, some three or four blocks away.

"Isn't it amazing how the old place has grown?"

"Well, isn't it? But you've not seen it for five years, Van!"

"And are you all still living in Racketty-packetty house?"

"Oh, that's what you used to call it!"

"That's what you called it."

"Yes, we're all there."

"Gee, Gail," Van said with simple fervor, "it makes a difference to me, having you here!"

"But tell me—you haven't told me—" She turned her face to him, the sunset behind her aureoling her tawny head with gold. "Tell me what you're doing here, Van!"

"Well, I went back to coll. after Christmas, see?"

"I see."

"Well, and I got a bug. Coughed, and pitted up, and was awful!"

Their joyous laughter, suddenly ringing out, was anything but suitable.

"You mean—lungs?"

"A pulmonary congestion. So now I have to lie in bed, drink milk, and rest."

"Dropped out of college?" She was horrified.

"My dear Gail," Van said reprovingly, "I darn near dropped out of life!"

"You do look thin," Gail mused, studying him.

"I'm fattening now."

"And where are you staying?"

"At my Aunt Martha's—Mrs. Arthur Chipp, you know. It's all been arranged. She's to watch me, and I'm to report to the doctor every week, and he's to keep in touch with the dear old guy at home, and Mother's to come out in June to inspect me."

Gail, shabby, gay, and friendly, looking up from under the shadow of his high shoulder, gave him a smile of infinite friendliness.

"I'm terribly glad you're here!" she said simply.

"Listen, are you engaged?" the man demanded suddenly.

"Engaged?"

"Yep. To be married."

"Oh heavens! As if I'd tell you if I were!"

Van's handsome face assumed a pleading expression, his voice was reproachful.

"Come on, now; give me the low-down!"

"There is no low-down!" Gail's face was aglow, her eyes dancing.

"Aunt Martha said she thought you liked Dick Stebbins."

"Dick Stebbins!" Gail was conscious of not wanting to forget a word of all this; she had a premonition that she would want to turn under her tongue the tid-bit of his having already discussed her possible love affairs with his aunt.

"Don't like him?"

"Of course I like him. His mother rents our Stanislaus place." It was one of the Lawrences talking; her head was up. "His mother rents our Stanislaus place," said Gail, "and I see him on business now and then."

"Aunt Martha wasn't talking about business, you low prevaricator."

They both laughed again. They were at the gate now; the last beams of the sun struck flame from the windows of the shabby old house hidden behind him.

Gail's heart did not falter. It was not the hour—it was indeed not the place into which to introduce a Yale college man, whose father owned a chain of flour mills. But hospitality, deep-rooted and instinctive, blotted out all lesser considerations.

"You're coming in, Van?"

"No, honest, I can't! You know how things are at the Chipps'. People coming to dinner—a lot of fuss."

"Soon, then."

"Soon! But when can I see you?"

"At the library—any time."

"At the library. And say, listen, we'll go to dinner. We'll go off places, and eata da spaghett'—what?"

"Oh, grand!"

Then he was gone. And Gail turned in at the gate, her heart singing. Oh, what a spring night, and what a thing it was to be twenty-three and to live in adorable, romantic Clippersville!

Edith was in the kitchen. Phil had not yet come home.

"Gail," said Edith, "Vance Murchison's back! He's got consumption, and he's up at the Chipps'."

"Yes, I know. I met him!"

"Does he look awful?"

"No," Gail answered with a wholesome laugh, "he looks perfectly fine."

"Gail, they want me to be Lady Teazle," Ariel announced.

"What! The lead?"

"That's what Miss Potter said. I'll be rotten," Ariel predicted gloomily.

"Oh, Ariel, I think that'll be simply grand!" Gail exclaimed enthusiastically. "Ede, did you hear that? Ariel's going to be Lady Teazle!"

"I thought Aileen Fernald would," Edith observed, interested.

"Aileen," Ariel explained, her red

"Listen, Are You Engaged?" the Man Demanded Suddenly.

lips twisting to a sneer, "said that maybe her mother was going to take her east."

Phil came in before dinner was quite ready, grinned at his sisters, and went upstairs. He came down in a few minutes, to sit in the kitchen and wearily, kindly join in the general conversation. Phil was the quietest member of the family, as befitted its head, the man upon whose shoulders heavy responsibility had fallen in boyhood, and who saw life through sober, sensible eyes.

"Gail, you look awfully pretty tonight," he said, watching her.

"In this old rag?"

"Perhaps Van Murchison's return has something to do with Gail's appearance," Edith suggested archly.

"Oh, is he back?"

"I met him in the Calle," Gail said, rendered absolutely apathetic by Edith's merrily sympathetic manner.

"If there's a new beau in town—" Edith continued rallyingly.

"Oh, shut up!" Gail wanted to say rudely. But she controlled herself. Dinner was served.

Phil sat, absent-minded and gentle, at the head of the board, sometimes coming out of a brown study to give Sam more gravy or decline carrots for himself.

"What's the matter with Ariel?" he presently asked.

"Why, a lot of them are going to the Standard, and I feel—" Gail began reluctantly, with a glance at her sister's mutinous face—"I feel that—on a school night—"

"What's showing, Ariel?"

"Oh, nothing special!" Ariel answered impatiently, savagely.

"It seems to me—on a school night—it isn't as if it was anything special!" Gail pleaded eagerly.

Phil regarded his youngest sister's drooping, butter cup-gold head sympathetically.

"Other girls' mothers let them go, Ariel?"

"They don't ask them!" Ariel answered briefly, bitterly.

"Well, then they're not your sort of girl," Philip decided, with a rather doubtful glance at Gail.

"They're hotsys," Sam contributed simply.

"They are not hotsys!" Ariel flamed.

"Well, whether they are or not, you don't want awfully to go, do you, darling?" the oldest sister pleaded.

Ariel made no answer, and the meal proceeded. Philip would go down to night school at eight o'clock, but it was barely seven now, and a general sense of pleasant relaxation and ease held the group. Edith's thoughts were busy with a favorite subject—some sort of Utopia where women wore robes and sandals, and long tables under trees were set with buns and grapes and milk for all comers by laughing, vine-crowned girls and boys.

Ariel gulped and sniffed; she hated them all. Gail was thinking about friendly Van Murchison. And Phil was twenty-five, and deeply in love.

He had left Lily at a quarter to six, only an hour and a half ago; left her physically, that is; in spirit he was still with her, still feeling her thin, eager hands in his, her thin, eager lips on his.

Oh, she was everything they said she was—one of the shiftless Wibsers married to one of the disreputable Cass boys, common, uneducated, hopelessly not a lady, hopelessly not an intellectual. But she was—Lily, Phil's beloved.

She was the gentlest little thing imaginable. She was twenty-four, and she had been demonstrating ever since her fifteenth birthday her entire ignorance of the world and her unfitness to cope with it. Clippersville thought it knew why Lily Wibser had gone up to San Francisco to take a position, when she was but fifteen. They might have known, they told one another, that she would turn up again, vague as to her business career, and more reckless than ever about her conduct, a year or two later. They might have known that she would pick one of the worthless Cass boys for her mate, and bear him three weak, wet, whining little babies in succession, before he and she parted forever.

They might have known that those Casses and Wibsers would have a shooting affray, and that Lily's particular Cass would disappear, giving Lily an opportunity instantly to claim state aid and sue for a divorce on the ground of desertion.

Even then she never would say an unkind word of Joe Cass. Lily never said an unkind word of anyone; hers was the most loving heart alive. To Phil she was as pure as the Maid of Astolat for whom her mother had named her.

She lived in the squalid jumble of cabins that decorated Thomas Street Hill. Philip Lawrence stopped at her broken-hinged gate every night. The world knew now that she had got him, as women like Lily do get fine men, and felt sorry for those lovely sisters of his who were still so entirely in the dark.

Without money, without even sufficient clothing, with this dim old decaying mansion on his hands, with Gail, Edith, and Ariel to settle in life, Philip was nevertheless dreaming of Lily. Love, with Lily, in a little Spanish house with a breakfast patio—this was all Phil Lawrence wanted in life. He lived in the exquisite dream of it, paying only a gentle and abstracted attention to what was going on around him in the dreary old shabby dining room.

By the time they could barely see their own hands or one another's face there was a sudden interruption, and Dick Stebbins came unceremoniously through the kitchen and joined them.

Sam jumped up to light the gas, and their flushed sleepy faces laughed at one another in the sickly light.

"Eaten yourselves dizzy, eh?" said the newcomer, sitting down between Phil and Ariel, and drawing the depleted plate of ginger cookies toward him.

"We're all slowly dying," Gail said with a nod of greeting. "I thought you might come to supper, Dick," she added.

"I got off early, and rushed out to see Mother."

He sat easily among them, a big rough-looking young man with bushy dark hair and an Indian-looking skin. He was ranch-bred, and looked it, although the big hands were skillful and fine enough and his big mouth firm.

"How is your mother, Dick?" Edith asked politely.

"Not so good. Oh, well—she's pretty good." He lighted a cigarette; Phil lighted another. Sam, suddenly hoarse with eagerness, asked for a smoke and the older brother tossed the little packet over to him with a steady look.

They all knew Dick Stebbins well. He was perhaps the only man, certainly the only unmarried one, who had the run of the house. The girls neither liked him nor disliked him consistently, or for any good reason. He was not important; he was merely the son of those homely farmer folk who rented the Lawrence ranch.

Dick had two sisters—tall, freckled clever girls who had taught school and married young and scattered to neighboring towns. He was the baby, the only boy. They all worshiped him very bad for him too, Gail used secretly to think.

But since he was a young male, she had considered him as a husband more than once. Not that he paid any attention to her or to anyone. He worked hard, he studied hard, he took nothing lightly. At twenty-six he had already graduated from a law college he was going to make something of his life.

He regarded the frivolity and gaiety of the Lawrences with a sort of fearful fascination. For Phil he cherished that deep, wordless devotion that sometimes exists between a clumsy, inarticulate older man and a quick-spoken, autocratic younger one. There were only months between them but Dick was far older than his years.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

COW THAT STARTED A WAR

SHE was only a skinny, foot-sore old cow, abandoned by a party of emigrants on the Oregon trail. But she was found there by a Miniconjou Sioux Indian. He needed a piece of hide to patch his worn moccasins, so he saw no good reason why he shouldn't kill this forlorn beast to get it. When his act was reported at Fort Laramie, that cow suddenly became very valuable, so her owner declared. The Indians offered to pay him $10. He demanded $25 and the Indians refused to give it.

Then Lieutenant Grattan, young, inexperienced and hot-headed, obtained permission to go into the Miniconjou camp and arrest the Indian who had killed the cow. Taking 33 men with him, Grattan marched out to the Sioux camps. In vain, two friendly chiefs, Bear That Scatters, a Brule, and Man Afraid of His Horses, an Ogala, tried to settle the matter peaceably. Grattan remained obdurate.

Suddenly the soldiers opened fire and within a few minutes Grattan and all his men were dead—victims of their commander's obstinacy.

Soon afterwards, Col. W. S. Harney was sent with an army to "punish" the "hostiles." Harney surrounded the camp of a Brule chief, Little Thunder, and demanded that the slayers of Grattan be given up. Little Thunder could not comply with the demand for the very good reason that his people had had nothing to do with the tragedy.

So Harney attacked and there followed the so-called Battle of Ash Hollow, with its shameful record of 86 friendly Indians slaughtered, among them many women and children, five wounded and about 70 women and children captured. Small wonder that the Sioux learned to hate the white men and to fight them bitterly for the next 20 years. And an old worn-out cow was one of the causes of that war!

BOOMERANG

IN 1840 President Martin Van Buren was the Democratic candidate for re-election. The Whigs, passing by the great Henry Clay, nominated Gen. William Henry Harrison, whose principal claim to distinction was his career as a successful Indian fighter.

One of Clay's friends, hearing of "Old Tippecanoe's" nomination, grumpily declared, "Give him a barrel of hard cider, settle a pension of $2,000 a year on him and, my word for it, he will sit for the remainder of his days in his log cabin by the side of a sea-coal fire, studying moral philosophy." The editor of a Democratic paper in Baltimore thought it would be a good joke on the Whigs to publish that statement. But it turned out to be a fine joke on the Democrats!

Other Democratic papers reprinted it. Immediately the Whigs got busy. So General Harrison wasn't fit to be President because he was a poor man and a plain man, eh? Well, he was just as good a man as Martin Van Buren, living in luxury in the White House and spending the taxpayers' money foolishly, etc. etc.

In vain the Democrats tried to undo the mischief by protesting that they hadn't started this talk. A Whig, one of Mr. Clay's good friends, had done it. But it was no use. The "Log Cabin-Hard Cider" campaign of the "singing Whigs" was sweeping the country. They were singing the praises of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too," and they were shouting "Van, Van Is a Used-Up Man."

So Harrison went to the White House, sent there by a small item printed in a Democratic newspaper. It was a sneering item that turned out to be a boomerang against those who used it.

BARBS

FLATTENED out, they wouldn't measure much over an inch in length. They look unimportant and harmless enough, these little pieces of wire, sharpened at each end. But, take enough of them, bend them in loops and place them at regular intervals along two strands of wire woven together. Then . . . well, ask some World war veteran if he ever had to listen to the agonized cries of a wounded buddy caught in a tangle of barbed wire!

Who invented barbed wire? Many are the candidates for that honor.

But whoever it was, he could not have foreseen how those little prongs would change the course of history on the Great Plains of the West. Time was when thousands and thousands of longhorn cattle ranged over hundreds of square miles of land and were trailed to roaring "cow towns" by reckless crews of daring horsemen. That was in the day of the "open range."

Then barbed wire crossed the Mississippi. The cattle trails were closed by mile after mile of wire—two strands nailed to posts. Next came the "nester" to plow under the buffalo grass on which the longhorns had fed.

The barbs on the wire were the tremendous trifles which ended the cattle era of the old West and sent one of the most picturesque figures in American history, the cowboy, galloping down the trail to oblivion.

POULTRY FACTS

CHICK SEXING IS NO FAD, MYSTERY

Plan May Be Costly to Most Farm Flock Owners.

By H. H. Alp, Poultry Specialist, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

"Sexing" baby chicks, the latest innovation in modern poultry raising, is no longer a fad or a mystery, but it may be of limited value to the general run of farm flock owners. Interest in the question is at the peak when the baby chick season is at its height.

Buying sexed chickens so as to get only pullets and no cockerels may be justified in certain instances. On the other hand the flock owner should weigh the increased initial cost of the chicks, the heavier losses from mortality as a result of the higher cost of the chicks and the loss of income from the sale of cockerels.

How cockerels help reduce the cost of raising pullets is shown in the 1934 records from 37 Illinois poultry flocks whose owners kept records in co-operation with the college. Most of these flocks were Leghorn. For every pullet placed in the laying flock in the fall, there was an income of 40 cents from the sale of cockerels. Thus the cockerels on these farms reduce the cost of raising each pullet 40 cents.

Mortality loss is another factor which weighs heavily in deciding whether or not to buy sexed chicks. In many instances chick mortality runs as high as 20 per cent. In a cockerel-pullet flock this is not extremely serious. However, a 20 per cent death loss in a flock composed entirely of pullets would be much more serious because pullets usually are valued higher than cockerels.

There is no mystery or secret about chick sexing. It is merely the turning out of the vent of newly hatched chicks for the purpose of looking for a small prominence smaller than the head of an ordinary pin which is located at the edge of the vent. Any well-defined prominence is a fairly accurate sign of a male chick. This method or technique of making this examination varies somewhat, but it takes considerable practice to do the work accurately, quickly and without harm to the chicks.

Ground Cobs Are Popular for Brooder House Litter

Ground corn cobs have become quite popular as a litter in brooder houses for chicks the past few years, reports John Vandervort, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college.

Grinding the cobs into pieces from one-quarter to one-half inch in size is recommended. This litter, just as all litters, should be stirred every other day so that the droppings will work to the bottom. It is also important that this material be covered with papers or bags the first few days.

Some other litters commonly used are shavings, peat moss, cut straw, sugar cane, peanut shells, dried sawdust and hay chaff. The materials should be free from dust, must and molds and should be changed as often as necessary to keep the house clean and dry. Each poultryman should decide which is the best material for him to use, considering cost, sanitation and labor necessary in cleaning.

Off-Colored Poults

In the best of Bronze turkey flocks, a few light-colored, or slate colored poults occur each year. There has been much speculation among turkey breeders as to the cause of this variation. It can scarcely be due to atavism because White or Slate turkeys have not been used in the make-up of the Bronze breed, the Bronze having been derived from the wild turkey, and the White and Slate in turn established from sports of the Bronze. Many breeders believe that they are the result of an intensive breeding for color and it is alleged that where they are used as breeders their offspring usually are of better color than those from the better colored breeders.—Missouri Farmer.

Poultry Notes

All classes of domesticated and wild birds are susceptible to coccidiosis.

* * *

Nebraska farmers have reduced the number of hens and pullets on farms.

* * *

There is no profit in treating sick chicks. Disease outbreaks should be prevented.

* * *

If fine quality eggs are preserved properly they can be used satisfactorily six to ten months later.

* * *

If fighting among the male birds is serious, alternating them in the pen is advisable.

* * *

Farm geese are water-lovers, but they wander much on land, grazing on grasses and clover, until they become the famous New Year's feast that they make.

* * *

Coarse sand should be supplied to chicks by the time they are ten days old. Later, this should be changed to still coarser sand or gravel, or a commercial grit.

Celebrate Birthday of Oldest Sunday School

The world's oldest—and largest—Sunday school has just celebrated its one hundredth and fiftieth anniversary.

This is Stockport Sunday school, which has been carried on continuously since the seventeen-eighties, and in the same building since 1805. It was founded by the Methodists, but was nonsectarian, and hundreds of thousands of youngsters have been taught in it. At one time its membership was over 6,000; even today it is over 3,000.

But Stockport, though it may claim to possess the oldest Sunday school still functioning today, wasn't quite the first in the field. That honor belongs to Gloucester, where, three or four years before the Stockport venture was launched, the first modern Sunday school was inaugurated by Robert Raikes, a printer, and Rev. Thomas Stock. Reading and writing were taught along with the Bible in the early years of the scheme, and the first teachers were paid.

Before that both Luther and John Knox had made experiments with Sunday schools, but the real beginning of the great movement which we know today was the Gloucester experiment of Raikes and Stock.—London Answers.

PERSONAL MENTION

The Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Hurst had as their distinguished luncheon guests on Monday, Al Penn and LeMeric Penn, who are mong the most noted artists in the State. Al Penn is a Concert Pianist, a graduate of Boston Conservatory; and Miss Penn, his sister, is a noted Vocalist. They were accompanied by their mother, Mrs. Al Penn, who is a sister of the Rev. Hurst. Miss Penn will remain in Alabama College for the summer school session, and will be among the attractive artists at the Writers Conclave.

It is now time to Paint-Up, Remodel or Rebuild. Take a look at the Yellow Front and see what a little paint and a deftly wielded brush will do—then step inside and see what an up-to-date stock of goods awaits your approval offered at special prices through the month of June. A new selection of ready-made dresses is received each week. If your size is not among those in stock, Mr. Glass will order it for you—and get it!

A new comer to Columbiana who is making friends, and plenty of them, is Mr. C. E. Grouby of the Columbiana Hardware Company. Mr. Grouby has made himself a vital part of the community and is civically, socially, and religiously becoming a potent factor in the life of this town. He seems to "fit in" most anywhere. A likable person, right on his toes as a business man, and when the organist failed to show up Sunday, presto—Mr. Grouby proved himself a versatile pianist. Now, with this talent and ability coupled with an accomodating spirit that makes him go out of his way to serve you—he is bound to succeed.

We personally thank him for his interest in our journalistic rambles and for sharing a box of Florida fruit with the office staff on Monday afternoon. Were those Mangoes good? Yummy—Yummy!

The Elivian Class of the Baptist Church met last Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. Alvin Stinson and Mrs. Tony Lyon for a regular business meeting. The meeting was called to order by the President, Mrs. Stinson, and re-organization of the class was the first important part of the program to be brought to the attention of the class. Two groups of workers using the colors, green and white, were chosen for the leaders who are Miss Vonzell Goodwin, and Miss Odell Turner. Each side has eleven girls in their respective groups. The contest will end on August 11th, and the losing side will entertain the winners.

The contest similar to the one above mentioned has just closed, with the Green side winning under the leadership of Mrs. Mason Edwards. A swimming party was given by the White side sponsored by Miss Vernor Kimball.

A delicious iced course was served by the hostesses after the business session. Fourteen members were present and one visitor, Mrs. Wailes Carter.

Campaign Launched Against Screwworms

AUBURN, Ala.—An educational campaign is being conducted in 34 south Alabama counties against the screw worm, the livestock pest which has already been found in many of these counties this season and which played havoc throughout last spring and summer.

The campaign is in charge of T. F. McGehee of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, who is being assisted by W. E. White, former chief veterinarian of Georgia. They have employed 28 district and county supervisors to assist in the work and have established headquarters in the Department of Agriculture Building in Montgomery.

State agencies, including the Extension Service, Experiment Station, and the Department of Agriculture, are cooperating.

Professor J. M. Robinson, entomologist, and Dr. R. S. Sugg, livestock specialist, advised the farmers to rid their animals of screw worms as follows:

"If there is much discharge from the wound swab it out with sterile absorbent cotton and thoroughly wash the discharge from the surrounding area with water, then inject benzol (90% commercial) either by using a syringe or an oil can, being sure to fill all pockets and cavities. Allow the benzol to act 2 or 3 minutes and then repeat the injection. In some cases it may be necessary to split the skin in order to get at the maggots in deep pockets, but as little damage as possible should be done to the tissues. Chloroform can be used instead of benzol, but it is more expensive. After the maggots are killed and removed from the wound, apply tar oil to it and around the affected area. Repeat this treatment every day for 3 days then continue the treatments at intervals of 3 or 4 days until you are sure all maggots are killed.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

A PERSONAL MESSAGE TO THE MERCHANTS OF SHELBY COUNTY:

Usually when beginning a "word-ramble" on Personal Mention page, there is very little rhyme or reason in the opening paragraphs. It is more or less an IDEAL we should like to believe true—a creation of our vivid imagination into an attempt to make it come true—but today, we break away from the imaginary world, and come to the problems of a work-a-day-world especially relating to the merchants and the local newspapers as the necessary medium of ADVERTISING.

Dashing around from one store to another in Shelby County, meeting various types of "salesmen", and talking with various types of merchants, I find most of them up-to-date, ready for new ideas, and eager to put their goods before the people in an attractive manner of advertising which will promote selling power. However, occasionally, and this is the instance I am about to relate—I find a merchant who refuses to advertise, and I guarantee you (for I saw one), you will find SPIDERS building their webs in his store, because even the SPIDER knows, he will not likely be interrupted. He can stay safely enmeshed in his web-house—undisturbed!

The following logical reasons for advertising in your local papers, were suggested to me through the columns of the Camden (Maine) Herald. I pass them on to you believing without much comment, you will realize what an important spoke in the wheel of progress your local paper is in the promotion of your business activities. I shall give it to you in narrative form—You may draw your own conclusions.

Once upon a time there was a merchant who said, "Everybody knows where my place of business is, I do not HAVE TO ADVERTISE". This same old merchant states, "Customers know what I have to sell, why should I tell them about it"?

Now lets see just how far this theory—If carried out by everybody, would get us?

Suppose we should reply, "Well, everybody in this community knows what is happening (sometimes, my friends—long before it happens—and some things they KNOW—never happen)—so what is the use in reporting the news? What is the use of having a NEWSPAPER? If the community can get along without a NEWSPAPER, it can get along without some other things which we now take for granted—For instance, the adults are EDUCATED, let them teach the children, and by so doing obliterate the schools. The parents are religious, let them train the young ones in their creeds and doctrines, and do away with the churches. Folks can lend their money to one another and do away with the Banks. Let them learn to make homespun clothes and swap around among themselves and do away with the Dry Goods Stores.

You can readily see where the chain of never attempting to create a desire on the part of the public to BUY would lead all of us. Stimulating TRADE by creating the DESIRE to purchase, and presenting your wares in an attractive manner will do more for Shelby County prosperity than anything we happen to think about this morning.

We cordially invite you to think these things over and call Number 9—The Shelby County Democrat—We will have a representative there as quick as a wink—an attractive ad ready for Mr. and Mrs. Public next week, and if the stores in this County do not realize a profit by this method of presentation—well, let's see—we shall have to THINK up something else to begin talking with you about on next Thursday.

Rember this MERCHANTS— Advertising reminds people of their requirements! Let us hear from you.

It is SWIMMING time at Yamakita! One of the loveliest pools in Alabama is now open for your amusement. Large crowds have been enjoying this universal sport during the past week. We say UNIVERSAL for the art of swimming is equally enjoyable to rich and poor—lean or fat—old or young. It is a cheap sport and easily available. So, don your swim suit, go to Yamakita—and get in the swim—It is one thing you can do by yourself—all you have to do is get in—flap your arms and kick a time or two and your're off. You do not have to depend on anyone tc even "shove you". All you need is a brief—very brief swim suit and plenty of determination to take the plunge.

Mrs. A. E. Norwood, friendly and graciously charming little matron of Calera, paid the DEMOCRAT office a thoughtful call on Saturday. Mrs. Norwood is an enthusiastic worker in the Ladies Auxiliary of the American Legion, and a more worth while organization in which to devote ones energies, we do not know. It is a coveted privilege to be eligible for membership. A patriotic heritage you should proudly wear. The spirit of the Auxiliary was typified on the Fields of France. Long may it continue to live in Shelby County thru this excellent group of women who have accomplished so many noble achievements through their various Community Chapters.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Tinney and son, Tom, spent last Sunday visiting relatives in Montgomery, Alabama.

On next Monday, should you be driving down Montevallo way, you will likely see more Writers, Musicians, Artists, Dreamers, Doers, Successful Celebrities, Non-Successful but still hopeful celebrities, than have been present in the past 12 years. The occasion is the 13th Annual Conclave of Southern Writers. An attractive program has been arranged, and the public is cordially invited to attend.

Mrs. Marguerite Hayes, of Centerville, District Supervisor of Adult Schools in Alabama, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head.

Misses Susie and Sallie Stone, of Uniontown, Alabama, are the charming guests of Mr. and Mrs. Jee Stone in Columbiana this week. Mr. and Mrs. Stone entertained for them on Tuesday night with a swimming party at Yamakita, followed by a dance in their lovely home on Main Street.

Stop right here and turn through the pages of the Democrat and see the Merchants and Business Firms who have found it to their advantage to ADVERTISE—then, take a stroll through their stores and see who is selling the goods.

Miss Charlie Verne Tinney, James Taylor and George Richardson, were visitors in Deatsville and Montgomery, Alabama, last Sunday.

Lovely DAHLIAS grown by my good friend, Mary Tom Goodwin, are making the old desk a brighter spot this week. FLOWERS brought to this office, bring also FRIENDS—and these are two things absolutely necessary for my existence.

Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Nickson have taken an apartment in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone. Dr. Nickson succeeds Dr. H. T. Donovan, as County Health Doctor. Dr. Donovan has moved to Clanton, Alabama, where he will engage in the active practice of business .

On June 1st, 1935, W. L. Christian, beloved and competent Cashier of the Columbiana Savings Bank, chalked up twenty-five years of conscientious service in this banking institution. Reminiscing a bit (while renewing a note), this distinguished looking gentleman glanced over his "goggles", and laughingly told of his coming to Columbiana twenty five years ago, and taking over the reins of "shuffling American Eagles"—or refusing to "deal" them out as conditions warranted. The space he has travelled during this time, back and forth from his desk to the window where "victims" await the verdict after a conference behind that door marked PRIVATE, is about 15 or 20 feet in diameter. Mr. Christian however, has touched the lives and hearts of practically every one in Shelby County, and if there is a citizen in this County who enjoys the esteem, respect and confidence of his fellow man more than W. LeVert (Pop) Christian, well, we have not met him yet, and we believe during our several summers and hard cold winters spent in Shelby County, we have met directly or indirectly almost every one in the County.

The Democrat joins legions of friends in the County in expressing gratitude and deep appreciation to Mr. Christian, for his wise judgment and for his unusually sound business ability which is largely responsible for this Bank being rated one of the strongest in Alabama. Here's personally hoping 25 years from now we shall walk in and be greeted with the same old friendly smile and the same old understanding "chuckle". We know our standing is not HOPELESS when we hear this, "Well, what now?"—accompanied with a knowing smile and a side wink at the Fulton-Cooper combination who stand guard over the "balance wheel". And thats something worth living 25 years to find out.

Mrs. Dearcy Merrick and two lovely children, Phillis and Jeannette, who have been visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Noland Barnett, will soon leave for their home in Vienna, Maryland. Mrs. Merrick will be remembered as Evelyn Barnett, popular and attractive member of the High school set in Columbiana. We acknowledge a thoughtful call from pretty Mrs. Merrick on Monday, and also a beautiful vase of sweet peas culled from the Flower Garden of her father, who has made an enviable reputation as one of the most successful florists in the State. Drive by the Nelson Farm and see his wonderful collection of summer Flowers now at the height of their beauty.

Mrs. H. M. Hurst is visiting her sister, in Bessemer, and Miss Mary Moore Hurst is attending Birmingham-Southern Summer School.

INTERESTING PERSONALITIES

LOUISE ELLIS,
Columbiana, Alabama.

Seatone Camp on Roanoke Island, North Carolina, will be a happier rendezvous for Kiddies this season, on account of the wise choice, on the part of the owners, in the selection of Louise Ellis, accomplished and talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Ellis, of Columbiana, Alabama, as Counselor and Instructor of Rhythms and Dramatics.

Newspaper work has never brought me a happier task than the privilege of chronicling the successful careers of Columbiana residents. Especially is this true when I have a personal claim on their friendship, and a personal interest in their achievement.

In beginning a pen point portrait of my former pupil and treasured friend, Louise Ellis, I would say that she combines the vivacity and sparkling personality of her Mother, with the inexhaustible energy and keen mental alertness of her prominent "Attorney-Dad". This rare combination is perfectly blended into a charming and very lovely little lady of the Blonde type—(the kind gentlemen prefer)—who is climbing the ladder of success more rapidly than any one we know anything about.

Miss Ellis is a native of Columbiana. She is an honor graduate of Shelby County High School and of Alabama College in Montevallo, Alabama. Immediately after finishing her collegiate course, she accepted the position of Physical Director in the Lanette Schools, which position she has capably filled for the past two years. About the time everybody else was planning to take a vacation from the winter's work, this ambitious young lady decided to find her recreation in the continuation of her chosen avocation. The result? An attractive offer to take charge of the Recreational Program at the famous Seatone Camp above mentioned.

I am sure the Kiddies who contribute each week to the Democrat's "Kiddies' Kolumn", will be vitally interested in the work Miss Ellis is so efficiently performing, and I am going to tell you something about it.

Seatone Camp is located on Roanoke Island, North Carolina. It is the culmination of a happy dream a teacher once had who spent her own childhood playing on the yellow sands and in the shallow waters surrounding Roanoke Island. Children now are sharing the same joy she found with numerous privileges added to make them happy.

Three hundred and fifty years have passed since English Colonies first attempted to settle, and the little English baby, Virginia Dare, was born there, yet time has not lessened the charm of the location. Something of romance and adventure still lingers in the atmosphere even for very young people.

"The main building for Seatone nestles amid pine and shrub covered hills unseen from the highway but with a far view to the sea. A winding lane leads in. Straw covered paths climb up then wander down to an amphitheater for children's games and amateur dramatics. Shallow bays break the shore line where crabs seem waiting for dawn and young crabbers." Can't you just imagine these happy little ones wading and playing in the shallow waters? Swimming, too, is a part of the routine, and young sailors may well try their skill at tacking and trimming the sail without fear of Davy Jones' locker.

When each youthful guest registers at Seatone, a chart of his or her health condition is made. Then intelligent care and proper diet and directed activities are a part of the program perfected by the Instructors.

Gentle ponies are available for youthful riders. Small boats for teaching early steps in seamanship await their childish christening. Further out door life provides completely equipped tents for those who care to spend a few days of their term in "honest-to-goodness" camping. The ocean, at Nags Head Coast Guard Station lies only six miles away, and many instructive trips to historic spots are taken by the children under the supervision of their instructors. Surely a happier combination of WORK and PLAY, in a more beautiful setting, or with a more attractive personnel, could not even be dreamed about.

I'll wager every grown-up who reads of this interesting work in this picturesque surrounding would give much to turn old Daddy Time's clock back and become a member of the Seatone Campers. The fact is, he who can command the love of children is fortunate. "If I were to choose among all the gifts and qualities that which, on the whole, makes life pleasantest, I should select the love of children. No circumstance can render this world wholly a solitude to one who has this priceless possession. Miss Ellis qualifies in every respect, and her success is assured.

So, across the miles we join a host of friends, and send our hearty congratulations and good wishes to Louise Ellis and the Kiddies at Seatone. We realize full well that this little crew will safely bridge the Rainbow of Promise and sail straight into the Port of Dreams Come True, for they are in charge of the best little SKIPPER we know—and its, Happy Landings Everybody!

IN THE VANGUARD OF BANKING PROGRESS

ALWAYS among the first to adopt new banking practices designed to safeguard the funds of its depositors, this Bank now provides the benefits extended by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to individuals, firms and corporations.

The protection thus made available is a permanent feature of Federal banking statutes and offers an important attribute of sound banking to all banks. It applies to all deposits up to and including $5,000 for each depositor. Larger deposits are insured up to the maximum of five thousand dollars.

In extending this additional safeguard of deposits to our customers, we are keeping step now as in the past with all new developments of constructive value to modern banking.

Humpty-Dumpty NRA
Many Damocles Swords
Biggest and Fastest
Gangster Ingenuity

Refusing to admit the resemblance between NRA and Humpty-Dumpty, that "all the king's horses and all the king's men" could not put together again, Washington will gather up the pieces of NRA and try to reconstruct "something as good." The process may remind reconstructors of the boy who took his watch apart, put it together and proudly said to his friends, "Not only have I put it together, but I have quite a number of pieces left over that I do not need."

Arthur Brisbane

The Weyerhaeuser kidnapers, however "hard-boiled" they may be, must feel nervous when they hand out one of the $200,000 ransom bills, knowing that the number and series of every bill are in the possession of government detectives.

It will not make spending the money more agreeable to learn that thirty "G-men" from the attorney general's office will devote their entire time to hunting for those bills and tracing the spenders of them—$200,000 worth of Damocles swords.

The giant French ship Normandie is here and pleasing to Americans who like superlatives. She is the biggest liner ever launched, the longest, broadest, heaviest, costliest. And, crossing in 4 days 11 hours 42 minutes, she is the fastest. She is built, not for profit, but for glory and to advertise French supremacy.

England will soon send her Queen Mary after the Normandie's record and, doubtless, Mussolini will soon enter the race.

Uncle Sam? Well, he is busy with other things, very busy, just now.

In the line of viciousness, modern gangsters show ingenuity. Police give these details of the death of Danny Walsh, head of a bootleg-rum syndicate who was kidnaped, ransomed for $40,000, later murdered. Enemies took him to sea in a boat, made him sit with his feet in a tub of wet cement, and watch while it hardened. He was then thrown overboard with the tub of cement hard around his feet. Several times, while he watched the cement harden, it must have occurred to Danny Walsh that a criminal career is not profitable.

To say, "Man is half tiger and half monkey" is sometimes unjust to the monkey. At High Point, N. C., J. R. Riggs, middle-aged, operating a filling station, was found, with tenpenny nails driven through each hand and each foot, fastened to a rough wooden cross. The man, having been nailed to the cross only for a short time, will probably live. Riggs admitted he had engineered the crucifixion to regain his wife's affection.

Sometimes gangsters show signs of intelligence. Volney Davis, arrested in Chicago in connection with the Bremer kidnaping, was "flown" to St. Paul, and, arriving there, confessed complicity in the kidnaping, saying to the judges: "I knew I could not get away from the 'G-men.'"

Land ownership is the best foundation of prosperity and security, under just government.

Those seeking to establish refugees from Germany in Palestine decide, wisely, to begin with land ownership. A fund expected to exceed $5,000,000 is being raised for that purpose.

The ground under your feet cannot run away, cannot be stolen.

King George, seventy years old, celebrated his birthday reviewing troops, wearing the uniform of colonel-in-chief of the Irish Guards. He rode to Buckingham palace on horseback, all four of his sons riding with him, while thousands cheered. Recently the queen celebrated her sixty-eighth birthday. It is desirable that the husband be a little older than the wife. That gives him an excuse for complaining. He can always say, "Wait until you are as old as I am and you will understand."

A Brooklyn girl, ten years old, paid $1 for a sweepstakes ticket, won $30,000. It will cost other little girls and big men and women many dollars for every dollar accidentally won.

Uncle Sam is presumed to get his share of the winnings in income tax. He and his country would be richer if he could find a way to prevent the gambling invasion.

The United States has important work to do outside of NRA and its revision, work with which the Supreme court would not interfere, and that is the control of floods, protection of population against them. Two hundred and fifty are reported killed in southwestern Nebraska, following flood and tornado.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

A Dallas County girl, Ruth Iva Epp, of Marion Junction, took first place in the state clothing contest for 4-H Clubs conducted during the state short course at Auburn. In addition, second place for teams in the home improvement contest was taken by Miss Epp and her team-mate, Louise Clarke, of Pleasant Hill.

Alabama taxpayers would be saved more than $8,000,000 yearly through a comprehensive consolidation program that would reduce this state's 67 counties to 16, in the opinion of Maurice F. Bishop, son of Jefferson County Commission chairman and a graduate student at Duke University.

Plans have been completed and bids will be asked for the construction of the new $30,000 junior high school at Killen within a few days, Homer Williams, county superintendent, announced. It is expected that the building will be furnished in time for the 1935-36 school year.

Resolutions urging that Congress be given broader powers in view of the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court against the NRA, were adopted at a mass meeting in Jasper of Walker County citizens. Copies were sent to President Roosevelt and to governmental officials.

Dr. Andrew Hemphill, director of music at Birmingham-Southern College, was awarded the honorary Doctor of Music degree at the recent commencement exercises of Southwestern University at Georgetown, Tex., his alma mater for four years.

An educational campaign to eradicate the screw-worm, livestock pest, has been launched in 34 South Alabama counties under direction of the U. S. Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine. The bureau has established headquarters in Montgomery.

Contracts issued to teachers in the Fairfield Public School system for the new scholastic year which begins in September have been signed and represent only a few changes in the faculties of the various schools from the current year.

Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace has apportioned $4,151,115 for highway construction and $4,034,617 for grade crossing elimination projects in Alabama out of a total of $400,000,000 allocated throughout the nation.

Approximately 4000 Negroes are expected to gather at Rowell Field in Selma June 30 for the Dallas County-wide Negro spiritual singing, in competition for a silver loving cup to be awarded the best community group.

Without discussion and without a protest the Birmingham City Commission passed an ordinance requiring wholesalers of cereal beverages to pay an annual license of $300 and retailers to pay a license of $120.

J. W. Goodwin, Birmingham civil engineer, has been appointed to make a preliminary survey preparatory to installing a sanitary sewer system in Pell City. Cost of the project is estimated at $37,500.

Although enrollment for the Summer quarter at Florence State Teachers College is incomplete, all room in the dormitories have been taken. Six states and 33 counties of Alabama are represented.

Dr. M. L. Orr, director of the Alabama College Training Schools, has announced the addition of five members to the list of instructors in the Demonstration High School in progressive education.

Reports from 30 of the 45 Alabama counties using power terracing equipment to check soil erosion indicate that 38,852 acres have been terraced during the past year at a cost of only $1.48 an acre.

An offer from the Burger-Phillips Department Store at Birmingham to distribute school books on a non-profit basis was withdrawn after it was discovered not to be in legal form.

James A. Lipscomb, of Bessemer, was elected department commander of Alabama's United Spanish War Veterans as the organization closed its 13th annual encampment in Birmingham.

A total of $275,000 has been allotted by Federal authorities for construction of a new postoffice in Huntsville, according to information received from Rep. A. H. Carmichael in Washington.

Birmingham's application for a $6,900,000 Federal loan and grant to build an industrial water supply has been reduced to $5,900,000, City Commissioner Lewey Robinson announced.

More than 200 persons interested in literature are expected to attend the annual convention of the Alabama Writers' Conclave at Alabama College, Montevallo, from June 17-20.

Arthur Ward, 18, was swept into Mobile Bay and drowned during a squall that caught the youth and two companions in the bay in a cat boat.

Smart Wardrobe in One Pattern

Pattern 2197

You can make yourself a mighty smart summer wardrobe right from this one pattern. Simplicity's the thing—shirtmaker frocks are "the top"—and here's a beautifully fitting model that may take many variations. Made in a tie silk or print it is perfect under coats now and on into summer—make it again as in the other sketch—with square neckline and loose sleeves, in a solid color. Then start all over and use a striped or checked silk or printed lawn. The material influences the frock to a great extent—and this is a perfect one for developing the lovely new fabrics.

Pattern 2197 is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Sizes 16 takes 3¼ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to the Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

Smiles

WAFFLES

Little Maurice, being fond of waffles, was busily engaged in buttering the one his mother placed upon his plate and, without looking up, said: "Please pass the waffle juice."

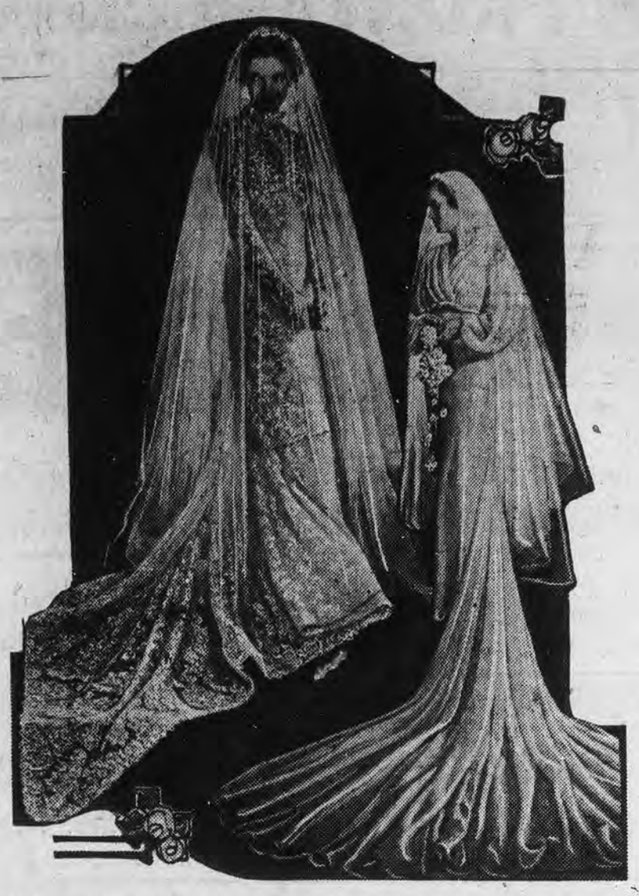
His Experience

"Would your experience confirm the popular notion that there is a sense of honor among thieves?" said the visitor to the prison chaplain.

"Well—no. There may be exceptions," returned the chaplain, "but generally speaking, I find thieves to be just about as bad as other people."

Crude and Refined

Martin—Both these girls are the daughters of millionaires Why is it that one looks down on the other so?



Gilbert—Because one's father made his money in refined sugar, while the other's traded in crude oil.

Summer Bride Is in Lace or Chiffon

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

LACE, most exquisite lace, or chiffon, lovely vaporous chiffon, classic in its simplicity—choose either for your wedding gown Miss Summer Bride-to-be and you win fashion's smile of approval. The endearing charms of each are breathtaking so we warn you it's going to be a difficult matter to decide.

There is no doubt about lace being definitely in the limelight for bridal gowns, in fact for the entire bridal party. For that matter, enthusiasm for lace whether as a medium for bridal array or for all occasion ranging from simplest sports and daytime clothes to high formals, knows no bounds this season.

With the importance of lace as their cue and inspiration, designers are doing wedding ensembles for this year's midsummer brides that simply baffle description. The gown to the left in the illustration, than which imagination can picture no lovelier, is entirely of imported Chantilly lace with wondrous lace-bordered train. It is cut on princess lines with a high ruffled neck and a tunic effect. The voluminous veil is draped over a coronet of orange blossoms.

Not all brides are so favored by fortune as to be married in such gorgeous lace raiment. However that need not at all discourage the bride-to-be who is lace-minded, for instead of being entirely of lace many of the most attractive wedding gowns designed this season have lace worked in for yokes, and sleeves and perhaps insets and numerous other intriguing ways.

As to lace for the bridesmaids, it is a story too long, too dramatic and romantic to be briefly told. Picture a bevy of lovely ladies clad in laces of delicate mesh whose colors take on the hues of the rainbow or a summertime garden of flowers. Lace hats they wear, and lace gloves and as like as not shoes of lace.

Chiffon for the wedding gown? That's another of fashion's most fascinating stories which should be told to brides who would wed in June or later in midsummertime. The flair for chiffon evening and party frocks started in Paris and the vogue has become so pronounced that the call of midsummer night fashions for chiffon resounds throughout the length and breadth of all fashionland. Which is merely the prologue to what we are about to say in regard to the chic, the charm and the importance of chiffon, especially quality-kind all silk chiffon, for not only the bride's gown but for outfitting her attendants even to the littlest flower girl.

In the exquisitely lovely wedding gown to the right in the picture, the poet finds inspiration for a sonnet, the painter for a picture and the bride the realization of dreams come true. The theme of this winsome bridal dress which so obviously plays up simplicity (a sophisticated simplicity, if you please) is white silk chiffon. Draped, it is, in classic Grecian lines, for the latest gesture in realms of formal fashion is the draping of diaphonous materials after the art of ancient Greek sculpturing. Now comes the touch-exquisite which climaxes the beauty and sweet simplicity of this chiffon rhapsody and will cause all who behold to say of her "the bride was a perfect picture"—she carries white violets for her bouquet.

BRIDESMAID IN LACE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Delicate white silk lace makes a frock which is perfect for the bridesmaid at a formal summer wedding, or for the bride who is being married informally. The ruffled bertha cape covers a complete evening gown. The little ruffled peasant cap is in line with the trend toward head coverings for formal wear, such as the Indian sari or Hindu ihram scarf. The mitts of the silk lace have flaring elbow sleeves.

Fullness Is Fashionable

Fullness from the yoke or the collar line at back, above the waistline, and fullness at center front below the waistline, are much reflected in the late costume collections for the little dresses in the simpler modes.

SHIRTWAIST FROCK SLICK AND DASHING

There's a new and youthful shirtwaist frock that is arousing loud cheers from the bleachers.

It is a slick, slim affair in dotted foulard, with small boy collar, short sleeves, a belt and buttons all the way down the front, and it is about the most dashing and practical garment thus far evolved.

It comes in navy, black or brown, with red, yellow or white dots, and is a city version of the dotted linen frock that was the toast of the Palm Beach season.

Its only trimming is the stitched youthful collar and the stitched cuffs on its brief sleeves, and that perhaps is part of its charm. With it you may wear a bandana cap of the same material, very new and springlike, with a Cossack look.

Stockings Are Bursting Into Color in France

Here is news of another brand new mode! Stockings have burst into color in France. This is not nearly so startling as it sounds. The colors are soft, deep shades and will provide fascinating shoe-stocking combinations. In addition, many of them are held just under the knee by lastex band. They are ribbed, English fashion, like men's socks, in lisles and meshes, made sturdy for hard wear, and inexpensive.

After you get used to the idea, can't you picture them with tweeds and sports things? In the country, blue, green and maroon stockings will stride across the fields and over the links. In town, smart legs will shop and tea in navy blue.

White Capes

Long capes of soft white wool, tweeds, angoras and the like will be shown along with white coats for the summer season.

Dots Are Seen

Dots of one material are seen on backgrounds of different fabrics.

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 8:11-18; II Corinthians 9:6-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful.—I Corinthians 4:2.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Sharing God's Gifts.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Joyous Use of God's Gifts.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Does Stewardship Mean?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Practicing Stewardship Today.

I. Warning Against Forgetting God (Deut. 8:11-18).

God is forgotten.

1. Through plenty (vv. 12, 13). It is always true that in time of prosperity the people forget God.

2. Through pride (vv. 13, 14). The natural tendency of the human heart when visited with abundance is to be lifted up with pride.

3. Through self-confidence (vv. 15-18). The inevitable result of pride is self-confidence. The children of Israel arrogated to themselves the power to get wealth. It is ever so that material prosperity turns the natural heart away from God as the source of blessing.

II. The Sin of Robbing God (Mal. 3:7-12).

One of the sins of Israel which brought upon them the chastising hand of the Lord was that of withholding the tithe. The prophet assures the people that their bringing into the storehouse their tithes and offerings would be responded to by God in sending them abundance.

III. Talents Are to Be Used for God (Matt. 25:14-30).

1. The distribution of the talents (vv. 14, 15). This distribution was a sovereign act, giving to each one of his own servants his own money.

2. The employment of the talents (vv. 16-18). Two put to use the talents given them, resulting in doubling their value. One hid his talent.

3. The accounting for the talents (vv. 19-30). The Lord later demanded an accounting from each one of the servants. The ones who had been faithful were not only praised but promoted, while the one who hid his talent was not only reproached but also suffered the loss of the talent given him.

IV. Giving Should Be Systematic (I Cor. 16:2).

This instruction concerning giving is based upon the glorious doctrine of the resurrection of Christ. The one who has come under the power of the resurrection of Christ will be both systematic and liberal in his benevolences. The standard for Christian giving is not the tithe, but "as God hath prospered him."

V. Principles of True Benevolence (II Cor. 8:1-9:15).

1. Examples of true Christian giving.

a. The source of true giving (v. 1) is said to be the grace of God, which means that the disposition to give freely of one's possessions must be created by the Holy Spirit. b. They gave from the depths of their poverty (v. 2), and their unstinted gifts thus became richer in meaning. c. Their willingness surpassed their ability (v. 3). God reckons gifts by the degree of willingness, not by the amount given. d. They were insistent on being allowed the privilege of giving (v. 4). Christians ought to be taught that giving of their means is a high privilege. e. They first gave themselves to the Lord (v. 5). The only method of raising money which has God's sanction is a consecrated hand in its own pocket.

2. Emulation in giving urged (II Cor. 8:6-15). Paul used the generosity of the Macedonian church as a means of stimulating liberality with the Corinthians.

a. Not as a command (v. 8). Giving which has God's sanction must be not only spontaneous, but liberal. b. As a proof of the sincerity of love (v. 8). Love is benevolent action toward the one loved. c. As the completion of their harmony of Christian character (v. 7). The Corinthian church abounded in spiritual gifts, but needed the grace of liberality for the harmonizing of their lives. d. Christ an example of self-sacrifice (v. 9). Christ was rich, but for their sakes he became poor. e. Gifts to be acceptable with God must be from a willing mind (vv. 10-12). f. Every Christian should give something (vv. 13-15).

3. Encouragement to give (II Cor. 9:6, 7).

a. The volume of reaping is based upon the sowing (v. 6). b. There should be a heart purpose (v. 7). c. Giving should not be of necessity (v. 7). d. God loves a cheerful giver (v. 7).

All Are of God

Activities commonly called non-religious—science, art, literature, industry—all come from the same God. Their autonomy must be respected in the sense that there must be no attempt at ecclesiastical control over them.

Life

Life is not made up of great sacrifices, of great duties, but of little things. Smiles and kindness given habitually are what win and preserve the heart.—Sir H. Davy.

New Window Glass Bars Heat Rays From Room

Window glass has been developed which takes the heat out of sunlight but permits the light to pass. The heat-absorbing glass contains iron, and objects viewed through it have a greenish-blue color because some of the red rays of sunlight have been removed. Small amounts of iron in glass absorb ultra-violet and infra-red, the heat rays of sunlight. The visible part of sunlight contains only one-third of the heat in the sun's rays and the new glass cuts out the invisible rays but permits most of the visible rays to pass. While the heated glass might be expected to raise the temperature of a room as a whole, the effect on a person in the direct sunlight is much less than for ordinary glass. The glass is particularly suited to offices and factories.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Lady's Painful Trouble Helped By Cardui

Why do so many women take Cardui for the relief of functional pains at monthly times? The answer is that they want results such as Mrs. Herbert W. Hunt, of Hallsville, Texas, describes. She writes: "My health wasn't good. I suffered from cramping. My pain would be so intense it would nauseate me. I would just drag around, so sluggish and 'do-less.' My mother decided to give me Cardui. I began to mend. That tired, sluggish feeling was gone and the pains disappeared. I can't praise Cardui too highly because I know it helped me." . . . If Cardui does not help YOU, consult a physician.

Ashcraft Resigns State Farm Board

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—C. W. Ashcraft, of Florence, has resigned as executive vice-president of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and the Farmers' Marketing and Exchange Association after three years' service.

Mr. Ashcraft resigned in order to return to the management of his private interests in Lauderdale County.

The directors passed resolutions praising his leadership. They recalled that "upon his arrival he found an empty treasury and a disorganized and vanishing membership, together with troublesome indebtedness." During his management the organizations have built up a cash balance of $41,865.43 and a paid membership of 10,486 for 1935.

1934 Gin Tickets Must Be Exchanged

Farmers having 1934 gin certificates left over may use them this season, provided they are turned in at our office to exchange for new certificates.

All those holding 1934 gin tickets should turn them in at once. Tell your neighbor about this. (Signed)

A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

FARMERS' WEEK TO BE HELD FROM JULY 30 THROUGH AUG. 2

AUBURN, Ala.—Indications are that over 1,000 Alabama farmers and farm women will attend farmers' week to be held here July 30th through August 2nd.

Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the State extension service and president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, has received reports from county agents stating that farmers are manifesting an unusual interest in the meeting this year due to the fact that the New Deal Farm Program will be discussed.

In addition to farmers' week, the annual meetings of the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation and the Council of Home Demonstration Clubs will be held on the same dates. J. Litt Edwards, president of the State Farm Bureau, and Mrs. E. C. Bledsoe, president of the demonstration clubs, forecast record-breaking crowds.

Bill Would Forbid Whisky Advertising

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The drys have revived, at least to the point of offering extreme legislation in Congress.

has introduced a bill to forbid liquor Rep. Francis D. Culkin (R., N. Y.), advertising, as far as the mails, the radio, and interstate commerce are concerned.

The bill would make the liquor seller liable as well as the publisher, common carrier or radio station which carried the advertising. A penalty of up to six months in jail, or a fine of up to $1,000, or both, would be provided.

Valley Grove Union Holds Call Meeting

CALERA, Ala.—The Valley Grove Local Union, No. 124, of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America met at a call meeting, June 15th. A large number of the members were present. Important business was attended to. New members are coming in all the time. The purpose of the Union is to build and not to destroy. We invite all farmers to join us. (Signed)

TREE SEEDLINGS TO BE DISTRIBUTED AT $2.00 A THOUSAND

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—The State Forest Tree Nursery near Livingston will have a large number of seedlings available for planting by farmers and other landowners next fall, announces the Alabama Commission of Forestry. The principal species are Longleaf Pine, Slash Pine, Loblolly Pine, Shortleaf Pine and Black Walnut. The nursery is conducted by the Commission in cooperation with the United States Forest Service.

Under the procedure adopted, these young trees are sold to farmers and others who wish to reforest limited areas. The price is fixed at the cost of production. This amounts to $2.50 per thousand seedlings of Slash Pine, and $2.00 per thousand for the other species.

In most years there is a heavy rush of orders just before planting time. As a result many are unable to secure the seedlings desired. The Commission recommends, therefore, that all applicants for tree seedlings place their orders during the summer so that arrangements can be made in advance to ship at the proper season.

Shipments are made from the nursery between January 1st and March 1st. Five hundred seedlings is the minimum shipment made. Orders for seedlings should be addressed to the State Forester, 500 Dexter Ave., Montgomery, Alabama, and must be accompanied by Post Office money order covering the cost of the young trees. Ordinarily the seedlings are shipped from the nursery by express, the charges to be paid by the consignee.

SCHOOL PARLEY TO BE HELD JULY 2-6 AT ALA. COLLEGE

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—In connection with the announcement of the new text books, the Department of English Teachers of the Alabama Education Association will hold a conference on the Alabama College campus, July 2-6, according to Dr. W. Vaughan, chairman of the committee in charge. The conference will be on the teaching of high school English.

At the first session, Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, will speak. Members of the State Department of Education, members of the course of study committee, members of the textbook commission, members of college faculties of the state and editors of a number of the high school textbooks will take part in the program.

A large representation of English teachers is expected from all sections of the state. Members of the committee, working with Dr. Vaughan on the arrangements, are: Mrs. L. E. Creel, Sheffield High School; Miss Annie Louise Moon, Bessemer High School; W. L. Spencer, State Department of Education, and W. M. Jackson, principal of Selma High School.

LEGION AUXILIARY IS HOSTESS TO 4TH DIST. CONFERENCE

CALERA, Ala.—The Fourth District Conference of the American Legion Auxiliary, met June 12th with the Ware-Crim Unit of Calera, Alabama. The meeting was held at the Methodist Church with Mrs. Alma Jeter, of Montevallo, District Director, presiding. Mrs. Salter, of Talladega, National Executive Committeewoman, made an interesting talk on the work of the Legion Auxiliary and Mrs. Ethel K. Barnett, of Bessemer, Department Secretary-Treasurer, was the featured speaker of the luncheon hour.

Reports from Anniston, Talladega, Montevallo and Calera were read. After the business session, lovely corsages were presented the visiting officials, after which the Methodist Missionary Society served a delectable plate luncheon in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holcombe. Entertainment during the luncheon was successfully presented by Myrtle Pitts, of Clanton, Tap Dancer, interspersed by musical numbers rendered by Mrs. Cecil Cowart and Mrs. Marion Jones.

Blue Eagle Is Revived With One-Man Rule

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The NRA Blue Eagle, revived in an emaciated form after its defeat in the Schechter case, returned June 17th to one-man rule with a new nine and a half months lease on life.

James L. O'Neill, former New York banker and recently control officer of NRA, was named by President Roosevelt to have complete charge of reorganization under the extension act passed by Congress.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his executive order setting up the new organization, indicated he anticipated further legislation to broaden and strengthen the present arrangement. He hinted some such legislation may be sent to Congress.

Trench Silo Filled At $1 Per Ton Cost

AUBURN, Ala.—At a total filling cost of $30, a ilttle more than $1.00 per ton, a 28-ton silo here was filled with sorghum in approximately 12 hours, reports W. H. Eaton of the dairy department.

"Silage taken from the trench silo last year was considered equal in quality to that removed from a concrete silo", he said, in advising farmers to dig more trench silos for saving silage. "Farmers who wish to construct this type of silo will find valuable suggestions in Circular 59 from the State Experiment Station," he advises.

Larger CCC Quota May Bolster Fund

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—More than $13,000,000 will be spent in Alabama annually through the Civilian Conservation Corps if Alabama's Congressional delegation is successful in locating the additional camps be required to accommodate Alabama's quota of 10,900 men, Thad Holt, ARA director announced June 17th.

The income is figured at the rate of 200 men to a camp. The increase of state CCC enrollment from a 3,000 youths who are expected to re-enlist, would be about 7,000 men, he explained.

Enrollment of the first quota of 826 unmarried men between 18 and 25 years begin June 17th. The Alabama Relief Administration is the selecting agency, and the U. S. Army recruiting service conducts examinations and final enrollment. It is planned to complete enrollment before the end of September.

Farmers May Have Tomatoes 'Til Frost

AUBURN, Ala.—Julian Brown, extension horticulturist, is advising Alabama farmers to plant tomato seed during June for producing plant to transplant in July for the production of a late crop of tomatoes.

He also advises that a late tomato crop may be produced from cuttings of old plants. "Cuttings are easily rooted by placing them in a seed box which is kept moist and in a partially-shaded place until 3 or 4 days before transplanting. These plants will usually be well rooted in about 10 days."

In advising farmers to prepare now for a late tomato crop, Mr. Brown says that ripe tomatoes may be had until frost and by "picking the green fruits just before frost and storing in a cool place this delicious fruit can be kept for 2 or 3 winter months."

NICKSON IS NEW SHELBY COUNTY HEALTH OFFICER

Columbiana citizens are having the privilege of welcoming to Shelby County, Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Nickson and daughter, who have this week moved to Columbiana. Dr. Nickson has succeeded Dr. H. T. Donovan in the professional capacity of County Health Officer.

Dr. Nickson comes to Shelby County from Chilton County, where he has been located for the past four months. He is a native of Kansas City, Mo., and a graduate of the University of Kentucky in Louisville. Mrs. Nickson was formerly Carolyn Berridge, of Montgomery, Alabama, the daughter of William Berridge, Editor and Owner of The Southern Farmer and other agricultural newspapers.

Dr. and Mrs. Nickson are charming additions to the personnel of the town, and the Democrat takes this opportunity of extending to them a cordial welcome.

Musical Comedy At Helena On June 28

HELENA, Ala. — "Black Eyed Susan", a musical comedy, will be presented at the High School Auditorium in Helena, Alabama, on June 28th, under the auspices of the M. E. Msisionary Society.

"Black Eyed Susan" is being staged by the Wayne P. Sewell Producing Company, and directed by Miss Dorothy Dunn. It is a colorful and amusing show with clever lines. A capacity audience is expected.

SALT AND WATER KEEP HORSES AND MULES FROM OVER-HEATING

AUBURN, Ala.—Given plenty of salt and water there is no excuse for men, horses or mules suffering from over-heating during the hot spring and summer months.

This is reported by J. C. Grimes, head of the animal industry department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, who suggests that Alabama farmers give their work animals plenty of salt at night and water at least four or five times each day.

...IMATELY 80 MILLION DOLLARS ALLOCATED STATE

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Alabama will obtain approximately $80,000,000 for Federal works relief projects under the plan outlined by President Roosevelt to state relief directors at a conference June 18th.

The President's plan calls for $1100 to be allotted each state for each family now on relief. Alabama, according to Relief Director Thad Holt, now has 74,000 families on relief, which would justify an allottment of $81,400,000.

Mr. Holt was to present a comprehensive program for Alabama to the President June 18th, and he declared that he hoped to have the program approved at once.

The state total will be further augmented by Public Works Administration grants for local projects and the cost of maintaining persons enlisted in the state's Civilian Conservation Corps camps.

Work Relief Jobs Will Be Opened By July 1st.

President Roosevelt and Harry L. Hopkins, his chief aide, June 18th ordered that the New Deal's employment drive be underway by July 1st as they prepared to distribute $4,000,000,000 to individual states.

They expedited the program—a concerted attempt to end the dole within a year by making jobs for 3,500,000 persons—with a conference here of work progress directors from all sections of the country.

The state chieftains received instructions from both the President and Hopkins for launching the plan within a fortnight and were personally charged with the responsibility of its success.

"In regard to the spending of this alloted money," Mr. Roosevelt told the state leaders, "the responsibility is going to be very, very largely on you to see that the money goes around and accomplishes the objective given us a mandate by the Congress of the United States.

"That is, to put all the people on the relief rolls to work within the coming year."

Hopkins explained to the directors that they would receive approximately $1100 for every family with one employable member now receiving direct Government aid. Alabama, for example, with 13,000 families, having one person able to work and make the group self-supporting, will be alloted some $14,300,000.

"That means a great many heartaches for people who have very expensive projects," Mr. Roosevelt warned.

State Convicts May Grow Legume Seed

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—At the request of the Alabama Legislature, R. J. Goode, Commissioner of Agriculture, is looking into the possibility of having State convicts grow legume seed and sell them to farmers at reasonable prices.

The legislature resolution, introduced in the Senate by Senator M. B. Wellborn of Calhoun County and passed unanimously, reads as follows:

WHEREAS, the farmers of this State are learning that the sowing of legume seed, such as Crimson Clover, Vetch, etc., in the Autumn is very beneficial in soil building, thereby adding nitrogen to the land and filling the soil with humus; and

WHEREAS, the cost price of such seed is very high, almost to the extent of being prohibitive, owing to the fact that few farmers have the facilities for saving the seed, and also due to the fact that such seed reach our market from foreign countries and from such far away states as Oregon and other Northwestern states; and,

WHEREAS, it is greatly to the interest of Agriculture in Alabama that some means be worked out to procure such legume seed at lower prices:

THEREFORE, be it resolved by the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, that the Commissioner of Agriculture is requested to look into the advisibility and practicability of having State convicts produce and save the seed above mentioned and have them sold through commercial agencies at a reasonable profit, but the price to the farmers to be fixed by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Senate Extends Skeletonized NRA Despite Long's Extraordinary Filibuster—Grass Roots Meet Offers a Creed for the Republicans.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SENATOR HUEY LONG, the Louisiana Kingfish, made a tremendous effort to keep the senate from adopting the resolution extending the skeletonized NRA until next April, but failed. Advocating an amendment offered by Senator Gore, which would have required senate confirmation of all executive officials drawing more than $4,000 a year, thus disrupting the patronage machine, Huey started on a filibuster. For nearly 16 hours, with occasional help from Senators Schall and McCarren, he kept the upper house in session, pouring forth a continuous stream of discourse that ranged from the necessity of preserving the Constitution down to recipes for fried oysters and pot-likker. He attacked the President and the administration generally, called the NRA "the national racketeers' association," told stories about his uncle, read from the Bible and Victor Hugo, stalked about the chamber waving his arms and croaking as his voice weakened, and now and then took a bite of cheese and a sup of cold coffee. All in all, Huey put on a show that kept not only the senators but a big crowd of visitors up all night. He was continually heckled by his angry fellow solons but always had a smashing retort.

Senator Long.

At last the senate broke down the filibuster, rejected the Gore amendment and passed the extension resolution by a vote of 41 to 13. One change, to tighten up the antitrust laws, suggested by Borah, was made, so the resolution was sent back to the house for concurrence. In its final form it continues the recovery administration without codes but with authority for voluntary agreements among business men dealing only with collective bargaining, minimum wages, maximum hours, abolition of child labor and prohibition of trade practices already outlawed by statute.

The house had previously adopted the resolution by a vote of 201 to 121, only a few Democrats standing with the Republicans against it.

Immediately after the house had acted, it was announced at the White House that Donald Richberg would retire as chairman of the practically dead NRA on June 16, and that President Roosevelt had accepted his resignation "with great reluctance," and with assurances of his "affectionate regard."

PLANS for spending the $4,000,000,000 work-relief fund are coming to the fore rapidly and numerously. Representative Mitchell, Democrat, of Tennessee, has introduced a bill requiring the President to use $1,000,000,000 to help the durable goods industries. By its terms factories supplying machinery and materials would be reimbursed for losses directly attributable to hiring new men. Mr. Mitchell thinks his plan would aid in the production of $80,000,000,000 worth of durable goods needed by private industry.

The War department filed a request for $17,071,388 to finance the construction of 36 army bases in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California and Kansas. The Labor department asked for $400,000 for research designed to aid the United States employment service in selecting and placing workers on relief jobs and in private industry.

THOUSANDS of Republicans from ten states of the Middle West gathered in Springfield, Ill., for the "grass roots" conference and, in the shadow of the tomb of Abraham Lincoln, who saved the Union, solemnly determined to save the "indestructible states" from what they consider an assault on their constitutional rights. The gathering was considered so important that it attracted political observers from all over the country. Most of the delegates were young men eager for the battle, but with them were many white-haired leaders of former frays whose enthusiasm and patriotism have survived the years.

Frank O. Lowden

After a pilgrimage to the New Salem State park where the scenes of Lincoln's youth have been reconstructed, the delegates assembled in the fair grounds Coliseum and were welcomed by George W. Bunn of Springfield, general chairman of the local committee. Harrison E. Spangler of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, was installed as temporary chairman and made a speech in which President Roosevelt was pilloried for all manner of political and governmental sins, from killing six million pigs and breaking campaign pledges to violating the Constitution and attempting to set up a dictatorship. Mr. Spangler then introduced the orator of the day, Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois and former aspirant for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Mr. Lowden, breaking a political silence of seven years, vigorously denounced President Roosevelt's proposal to change the Constitution to fit the New Deal and argued at length for maintenance of the bill of rights unimpaired.

IN THE "platform" adopted by the grass roots conference these governmental policies were advocated:

1. The immediate adoption of a policy of economy and thrift in government with due allowance for essential relief expenditures as opposed to the present spending policy of waste and extravagance.

2. The prompt attainment of a balanced budget, not by the misleading method of double bookkeeping, but by the honest method of bringing the expenses of the government within the limits of its income.

3. A sound currency based on gold and definitely stabilized by congress so that individual enterprise may have confidence in the future value of the dollar, in terms of which every man's plans for his present or future must necessarily be made.

4. The immediate withdrawal of government from competition with private industry.

5. The maintenance of the vitality and free growth of American industry through the preservation of the competitive system protected against monopoly by the vigorous enforcement of anti-trust laws, so that small businesses may be preserved and the door of equal opportunity kept open to all.

6. The rigid enforcement of all laws, civil and criminal, to prevent and punish dishonest or unfair practices in business, industry, and finance.

7. National recognition of the needs of agriculture. Agriculture is a fundamental industry of the United States. The farmer is, of right, entitled to a fair and proportionate part of the national income and to receive a parity price for the products of his farm in domestic markets.

8. Work for the workers. With men out of work, as now, the capital structure of the nation is not only being impaired but undermined.

9. The breaking down of arbitrary restrictions that throttle world commerce, such as quotas and exchange restrictions.

10. Continued protection to farm and home ownership, and continued provision, in co-operation with state and local governments, for those that are in need until private enterprise absorbs the present army of the unemployed.

Senator Robinson, majority leader of the senate, speaking before the Arkansas Pharmaceutical association, said of this:

"The only constructive suggestion made in addition to those which are embraced in the Roosevelt administration policies is the often repeated demand for the balancing of the budget. The budget cannot be immediately balanced unless the various forms of relief now being carried on be abandoned. This cannot be done just now without danger to millions of our people who have yet been unable to obtain employment."

TAXES totaling $475,000,000 would go out of existence before July 31 if not extended, so a resolution continuing them two years was being hurried through the house in accord with the wish of the President. Among them are the 3-cent postage and the 1-cent-a-gallon federal gasoline charge. A second resolution was being prepared to plug loopholes in existing tax laws and to adjust present rates found to be unconscionable or unproductive.

THE American Federation of Labor more than any other group except the old brain trust bemoans the death of NRA, and its attorneys are busy drafting a bill designed to take its place in a measure. This measure proposes to put under federal license all concerns engaged in interstate commerce or handling goods destined for such commerce. Those companies would be exempted from the operations of the antitrust laws but would be required to agree to hours of labor and working conditions determined by a federal commission.

SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH may not be a receptive candidate for the Presidential nomination next year, but anyhow his friends in Idaho have grabbed his hat and thrown it into the ring. They are organizing "Borah-for-President" clubs all over the state. Ralph Brashears of Boise, one of the leaders, says Mr. Borah is the man to "emancipate our people from the vise-like grip of a vast bureaucratic form of government which is destroying individual initiative and regimenting the American people."

MAX BAER lost the heavyweight championship of the world, being defeated by James J. Braddock at Long Island City in a 15-round battle. There were no knock downs and neither man was badly punished.

JAPAN is moving swiftly to obtain the control over north China which evidently is her main objective at present. New demands were presented to the Chinese government at Nanking, and when some of these were declared unacceptable the Japanese troops and officials began moving into Peiping and Tientsin and all the area between the Great Wall and the Yellow river. The Chinese officials, being helpless, moved out and the branches of the Kuomintang or People's party were closed. The central council in Nanking, though accepting some of the Japanese demands, could see nothing but trouble ahead and instructed Gen. Ho Ying-ching, the war minister, to prepare for eventualities.

WARFARE between Paraguay and Bolivia in the Gran Chaco, which has been going on for three years, came to an end after representatives of the two nations signed an armistice agreement in Buenos Aires. The truce was the result of conferences between representatives of Paraguay, Bolivia and six neutral nations—the United States, Brazil, Argentina, Peru, Chile and Uruguay. An attempt will now be made to settle the disputes by direct negotiations. If these fail the World court at The Hague will be called on to render judgment. The war in the jungle has cost about 100,000 lives.

THE British government, it is believed, has accepted in principle the German demand for restoration of the German navy up to 35 per cent of the British strength. This is exceedingly irritating to France, and Premier Laval is likely to send a note to all signatories to the Washington treaty protesting against the revision of the multilateral treaties by bilateral agreements, and proposing a new naval conference, including Germany this time, to revise the Washington and London ratios all around.

REINSDORF, a German town 52 miles southwest of Berlin, was virtually destroyed by the blowing up of a great munitions plant and the ensuing fires. Because of rigid censorship it was impossible to learn the number of casualties. Nazi officials admitted there were 52 dead, 79 injured seriously and 300 slightly hurt.

GREAT BRITAIN'S attitude toward the crisis in east Africa has enraged all of Fascist Italy and the attacks on England in the Italian press became so bitter that Mussolini had to order that they be toned down a little, though it was denied in Rome that the British had made any diplomatic protest. Il Duce, however, continues his outspoken denunciation of the British course. In a speech at Cagliari, the capital of Sardinia, he defied his European critics who have requested him to deal less harshly with the Ethiopians, and attacked the British without going to the trouble of hiding his words behind diplomatic formulas.

"We will imitate to the letter those who taught us this lesson," he shouted, referring to British colonizing methods which his press has been "exposing." "They have demonstrated that when they were creating an empire and defending it they never took into consideration world opinion.

"We have got old, and we have got new accounts to settle with Ethiopia, and we will settle them. We will pay no attention to what is said in foreign countries. We exclusively are the judges of our own interests and the guarantors of our future."

Actually, Mussolini's plans for war with Ethiopia are not very popular in Italy, but British interference is increasing his support daily. The reconstructed British cabinet is much worried over the situation and believes the war cannot now be stopped.

LONG ago the President said he was formulating a special message to congress on relief of the railways and federal regulation of all forms of transportation. This he finally sent in, asking for the following legislation at this session:

1. Amendment of the bankruptcy act of 1933 to facilitate financial reorganization of railways.

2. Regulation of air transport by the interstate commerce commission.

3. Regulation of highway motor carriers, provided for in a bill passed by the senate.

4. Regulation of intercoastal and coastwise trade and some inland water carriers.

5. Extension for one year of the office of federal co-ordinator of transportation and of the emergency railroad transportation act of 1933.

At the same time Joseph B. Eastman, federal co-ordinator of transportation, recommended to the railroads drastic changes in rate structures, schedules and types of equipment.

TWO of the kidnapers of young George Weyerhaeuser of Tacoma—Harmon M. Waley and his wife Margaret—were arrested in Salt Lake City, where the woman was passing $20 bills that were part of the ransom money. A third member of the gang, William Mahan, an ex-convict, was being hunted in the vicinity of Butte, Mont., in which he was forced to abandon a stolen automobile that contained $15,000 of the sum paid for release of the boy. Waley and his wife confessed their part in the crime.

WASHINGTON swarmed with Shriners for a week, and they enjoyed themselves in their characteristic ways. Leonard P. Steuart of that city was advanced automatically to the position of imperial potentate, and A. G. Arvold of Fargo, N. D., was given the coveted outer guard office, first step toward the top. The conclave of 1936 will be held in Seattle, opening July 14.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington. — Growing conviction here that Herbert Hoover is really an active candidate for the Republican nomination against President Roosevelt next year is the biggest comfort the New Dealers get out of the Supreme court decision. It is the silver lining to the constitutional cloud that put the New Deal in the shadow.

That the Republicans would actually nominate Hoover is too much, friends of President Roosevelt say privately, to hope for. But the mere candidacy of Mr. Hoover at the convention would produce a feeling of bitterness comparable to that which distressed the Democrats after Madison Square garden. It would lack the religious element, and even the prohibition element, but it would be pretty bad, they think, and with fair logic.

All this is based, of course, on two factors, either of which may change. One is that at present it appears likely the issue of the next campaign will be rugged individualism versus government control of wages, hours and trade practices, and planned economy to prevent overproduction, etc. Or, as the New Dealers prefer to state it, the New Deal versus the old law of tooth and claw.

The ideal candidate of the Republicans on such an issue would have been Calvin Coolidge. But Coolidge is dead. Mr. Hoover's views as to government, business, and every point involved fit him ideally, almost, for the leadership of the opposition to Roosevelt. Also, as the last Republican President, he is the titular leader of his party.

But when that has been said for Hoover, everything has been said, in the opinion of the New Dealers. His weakness, as they see it, is that he is branded in the eyes of the country not only as a failure, but as unlucky. And the last is almost worse than the first.

It pleases the Roosevelt supporters to recall that it was during Hoover's administration that the public lost so much money and that so many lost their jobs. They point to the succession of events that led deeper into the depression and call them a succession of Hoover mistakes.

Material Scarce

Students of mass psychology insist that once the public mind is frozen about a man it is next to impossible to thaw that conviction out. It just sticks there. For example, William Jennings Bryan. The truth is he had a fairly good chance of being elected President the first time he ran. Only the most adroitly managed campaign in history, plus an enormous campaign fund, plus intelligent and ruthless co-operation with Republicans by employers of labor, defeated him.

Yet for some curious reason Bryan was stamped as a failure in the sight of the country. His campaigns after that time were just jokes. As one of the Tammany orators said at Baltimore, in 1912, "For God's sake, Mr. Bryan, get out of the way and give the Democrats a chance."

The other factor that seems to point to Mr. Hoover is the scarcity of other available Republicans. One thinks quickly of Representative—former Senator—Wadsworth, of New York. But the forces opposed to him for one reason or another are still very strong in New York state. Notably the old woman suffrage crowd, and the more rabid of the prohibitionists. So that many experts doubt if he could carry his own state—a situation which has nothing to do whatever with present issues.

A canvass of all the talked about Republicans shows none with any real strength, all of which contributes to the theory that Hoover can bring about his renomination if he wants it.

Watch Business

Business is to have a ten-months' trial period of rugged individualism. Meanwhile it will be checked by an army of investigators—the survivors of NRA employees. Under the directing and highly suspicious eye of President Roosevelt, fact finding as to chiselers, overworked and underpaid labor, and kindred evils will proceed.

Then will come the decision.

If the experiment succeeds—if business does not oppress employees, if prosperity goes forward, if the country seems to like operating without NRA codes—the whole New Deal program for government direction of business in the interest of the public at large, planned economy and all the rest of it will go out the window.

If the experiment fails—and Mr. Roosevelt believes it will fail—there will be, right on the eve of the Presidential election, a New Deal program to supplant the law of the tooth and claw.

The probability is that it will take the form of a proposed constitutional amendment, one which would give the federal government control over hours and wages, also trade practices—on the theory that what happens in Bangor affects the children's school lunches in San Diego.

Menace of Strikes

Meanwhile, with the Wagner labor disputes bill pushed through congress—not until after the Supreme court decision did the President announce his approval of this measure—industry will find itself, as it sees the situation, with the most provocative status for strikes for many a year.

Warning that "no false hopes" should be entertained by the country as to working conditions is a significant guide to the President's attitude. He wants the investigations of the corps of NRA employees reinforced by an army of self-appointed scrutinizers. He is preparing the public mind for a change in the Constitution to give the federal government the powers necessary to make effective his New Deal policies: higher wages, shorter hours, no big profits, all aimed not only at better living standards for the lower strata but at increased buying power; and planned economy under government control aimed at preventing overproduction.

Roosevelt's understatement of the probable effects of requiring former code conditions on the part of all having government contracts had two objectives—one to provide a constant contrast between what the codes would do if they were in legal effect, the other to prevent these same "false hopes."

Experts believe 1 per cent—the figure used by the President as the dollar volume of government contracts to total production—far understates the actual effect on employees. Amendments are being drafted to the bill to provide that no one can get a government contract who buys any of the materials used from a concern not complying with former code standards.

Incidentally the government will be in a stronger position in enforcing these "code" requirements from government contractors than was NRA even at the height of its power. For this time there will be law behind them, so that the comptroller general will not be able—lawyers agree—to overrule contracts on the ground that the specifications were not broad enough, or that the contract was not awarded to the lowest bidder. As in the automobile cases.

Dill Comments

That President Roosevelt missed the boat as far as accomplishing his New Deal reforms, when he did not press for a constitutional amendment in the spring of 1933, is the interesting comment on the present case of jitters in Washington by Ex-Senator Dill, of Washington.

Regarded as an advanced if not extreme radical, Dill, who was one of the outstanding "For Roosevelt Before Chicago" leaders, voted against NIRA when it passed the senate. Later he began to have misgivings as to whether he had made a mistake, because he saw a number of advantages which grew out of it. But, he contends, it should have been allowed to die some time back, having served its purpose.

Now, the former senator declares, if a constitutional amendment were to be submitted granting the federal government the power to regulate minimum wages, maximum hours, and fair trade practices sought under the code system, he would take the stump against ratification of such an amendment.

All of which is significant in connection with a former dispatch in which opposition to such a constitutional change in Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and Georgia was outlined.

The truth is it is very difficult to pass any constitutional amendment over which there is a real, nationwide battle. Most people do not consider this coldly, because several constitutional amendments have been passed in the last few years without too much trouble.

Amendment Fights

But let's take a look at those fights. For instance, the first battle to put over the Eighteenth amendment. That should have been a real war. But it wasn't. The fact is that the wets just regarded the whole thing as a joke until enough states had ratified to make any remaining fight futile. Even then the stupid wets did not fight. They began assuming that the Supreme court would knock it out! Which sounds crazy now, but anyone in contact with the developments at that time, either in New York or Washington, will remember its accuracy.

Then the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. Every thinking politician concedes that a real fight made by the drys might have held 13 states against it, despite the then popularity of repeal, and the influence of President Roosevelt at the height of his power. This may be disputed, but the fact that outside the two Carolinas no real fight was made to stop repeal cannot be.

The woman suffrage amendment is often mentioned. True, there was some very sharp opposition to it. But this opposition came from a very small minority, and most people who actually did not like the idea contented themselves with private conversation. There was very little violent opposition, even from the minority opposed. Whereas the militant minority in favor was aggressive and persistent.

On the other hand, the issue that would be raised by an attempt to change the Constitution so as to give the federal government the powers President Roosevelt would like—the powers that the nine jurists on the Supreme court held it lacked at present—would provoke a bitter battle in every state in the Union. No state would ratify virtually by default, as Maryland did the Eighteenth amendment, though actually it was so strongly opposed to prohibition that it would never pass a state enforcement law!

Roosevelt counts very heavily on the nation-wide organization, with units in every country, which Jim Farley has built. But the tremendous response to Senator Borah's radio talk a few nights ago shows that no fight to enlarge federal powers at this time would be a push-over!

South Sea Natives Go Back to the Primitive

One of the most favored of the glamorous South Sea islands, Puka Puka, an atoll with a lagoon and sandy beaches fringed with palms, was picked as a paradise by white settlers who established a trading post and coconut estates there. But since the depression the white settlers have abandoned their enterprises and left for home. The result is that the natives are reverting to their former style of living.

The grass skirt and the loin cloth are taking the place of the calico motherhubbard and the denim trousers, the coconut oil lamp is supplanting that which burned kerosene and the natives are using shell hooks for fishing instead of steel ones. Tea, bread and canned meat are being discarded for native food.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The Lucky Lawrences

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Copyright by Kathleen Norris WNU Service

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their poetic father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron work, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale. He and Gail had been close friends before he went to college and Gail has visions of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house.

He had brought a large box with him; a florist's box.

"Dick, don't tell me you remembered my birthday?" Gail exclaimed as he gave it to her.

"Whose birthday?"

"Mine."

Dick's dissatisfied look traversed the circle.

"I didn't know today was your birthday," he said resentfully. "No—I just met the boy bringing this in."

Gail was paying no attention to him. Her fingers had been experiencing the unfamiliar delight of tearing away green strings and cardboard and massed layers of silky green paper. Roses—wet, sweet roses, two dozen of them!

"A dozen and a half," Edith breathed, awed.

"Two dozen, Ede."

Gail had wrenched the card from its wire and torn open the wet envelope; the ink on the card was blurred, but the words unmistakable.

"Twenty-three times twenty-three more. Love from Van."

She seemed amused and pleased; they were all pleased. But Gail's moderately gratified manner gave no hint of the bubbling geyser of ecstasy that arose within her. This was almost unbelievable. Roses—and the intimate, offhand card from Van Murchison! Gail was only confusedly aware of what went on about her, of what the others were saying.

"School tonight, Phil?" Dick asked.

"Oh, sure!"

They went off together and, in a happy daze, Gail began automatically the business of clearing up. Her thoughts swam in a sea of golden light.

The kitchen grew hot; the gas soared and whistled. Gail worked on oblivious. Roses, roses, roses—the world was nothing but pink roses.

Gail had come into Ariel's room, as was her habit the last thing at night, to see that her little sister was comfortably in bed. She kissed Ariel, and smoothed the discarded folds of blanket at the foot of the bed.

When she left the room Ariel seemed to be almost asleep.

Edith, meanwhile, had come into Gail's room. "When all's said and done—" she began, and paused.

"Which God forbid should ever be!" Gail interposed.

"Well, I know. But when all's said and done, Gail, who are the Murchisons? They've nothing but money," Edith said.

"Still . . . money. . . ." Gail was laughing at her sister, but Edith did not resent it.

"Of course." She answered the uncompleted suggestion with a smile. "But I mean that money isn't—isn't like birth," she pursued.

Gail went about the room quickly, long adept in the business of making it ready for the night. She said her prayers in a brisk, businesslike way, with her eyes on Edith's face, and got into bed. Her sister came to sit at her feet.

"It would be wonderful if one of us married well," Edith offered dreamily.

"On the strength of two dozen roses," Gail countered. "At a time of the year when roses are two dollars a dozen!"

"They have seads," Edith mused, undiverted.

"Murchison's Mills. I suppose they have millions," Gail agreed soberly. "But he's not really a Murchison, Ede."

"He was adopted. Nobody ever calls him Kinney."

"Was he legally adopted?"

"Oh, yes. He was only five when his mother got a divorce, and when Van's father died Mr. Murchison practically adopted him."

"How'd you happen to know that, Ede?"

"Reading a book about old Clippersville—you know that crazy book that hardly mentions Grandfather? Well, it had all about some lawsuit, and the Chipps and the Kinneys were in it."

"He's awfully nice," Gail said impulsively, out of a silence.

"He must be. . . . Is he handsome, Gail?"

"Oh—collegiate-looking."

Edith was silent for a full minute. Then she said, with conviction, "You ought to come to Muller's and get one of those striped linens."

"I was thinking I'd get one of those dotted swiss dresses at the sale. They're three-fifty."

"You ought to get both," Edith said firmly.

"I wish I had a white hat!"

There was another silence in the big, dim, old-fashioned bedroom, whose heavy brocade wall papers had not been changed or cleaned for twenty years, and whose windows were still curtained in fringed rep.

"Isn't it fun, the way unexpected things happen!" Edith said.

"I was thinking we could ask him to Sunday supper."

They were silent, staring into space.

"Do you know we're very romantic?" Edith demanded then.

"I suppose we are!"

"You know we are. I mean—Phil's so handsome and so smart, and everyone likes Sam, and everyone regards Ariel as a sort of genius, who's going to inherit Papa's gift, and you—you certainly can write."

"Oh, Ede! I had one article in the Challenge, and that was only because it was in favor of the Bay bridge—"

"Abigail Lawrence! Your compositions always took prizes at school, and your Mother's day article was published on the front page of the San Francisco Call."

"Well, I know." Gail pondered it a minute, and then said with a suddenly flushed face, "If I should marry anyone who had any money, Ede, and didn't have to work so hard and worry so much, I believe I could write stories!"

"You don't have to tell me that," said loyal Edith.

"Are two of your daughters going to be writers, Mr. Lucky Lawrence?" Gail whimsically asked the enormous, enlarged crayon portrait of her father hanging on the wall.

"All of us are going to get somewhere, and put the Lucky Lawrences back on the map!" Edith prophesied.

Left alone under her greenish light, Gail fell into a happy musing mood that made her supply of books entirely superfluous. She had been getting tired and discouraged of late; for months life had seemed to drag with her, to lack its accustomed sweetness and interest. After all, Papa had been dead for almost seven years now, and they had been hard, puzzled years for the children he had left behind him, years barren of results. The old house had grown shabbier, the garden more of a jungle, the children themselves had grown only poorer and more bewildered. There appeared to be no escape; there had been no miracle.

Just at first there had been a decided social movement toward the orphaned Lawrences; immediately after Patterson Lawrence's heroic death in overcrowded Washington, all Clippersville had made a gesture of kindliness and concern toward his children. During these days Gail and Phil had been the center of a happy, fun-loving group. These had been days of picnics, charades, amateur theatricals, sundaes at Dobbins', movies, occasional hilarious gatherings at theaters or dances.

All that was over now. Gradually the smart crowd had drifted away, taking to motor cars, hotel tea rooms, roadhouses.

Gail had neither the money nor the gowns to hold her own; Phil, always something of a Puritan, had frankly abandoned a company and a code with which he had no sympathy, and Edith had withdrawn first of all.

For actual years now—Gail always winced away in her secret thought from calculating them too exactly—there had been no attempt made on the part of Clippersville's golden youth to include the Lawrences in good times. Edith had become just a little bit twisted, in consequence, just a little too prone to explain merrily that the Lawrences did not want to have anything to do with modern ways, for they intended to marry men worthy of their name. And Phil had given up society entirely, and admired—or had admired, for Gail never admitted it—that wretched little social outcast, Lily Cass.

As for Gail, for many months she had known herself to be sinking into utter commonplaceness. As time went on she was becoming more and more drab little Miss Lawrence of the library; Phil more and more the quiet, hard-working, underpaid iron worker; Edith more and more bookish, old-maidish.

The joyous promise of the romantic Lawrence youngsters had long been lost. Phil had told Gail, with a little patient bitterness, that it was to the Hunter and the Barchi boys that all advancement at the Iron Works had been given. Months had gone by without seeing one single eligible man coming to the Lawrence house.

Hardest of all for Gail to lose had been her faith in herself. She had been so sure, at sixteen, seven long years ago, that courage, self-confidence, high spirits, and honest service were the weapons with which to conquer the world. She had been so sure that she knew the secret!

She had seen herself writing children's stories. Oh, nothing sensational, nothing classical—but simple, charming, boarding-school and ranch stories that all girls would love, and that would assure Gail pleasant fame among her townspeople, insure her an income that would mean pleasure and beauty for Ariel's girlhood, and an opportunity to develop the little sister's poetical genius.

But it seemed that forever—forever—forever the once lucky Lawrences would be poor, shabby, hardworking, and obscure, that Phil would help to build ships in which luckier men should cruise the waters of the world, that Edith would sell to more fortunate women the romances she would never realize in her own life, and Gail taste in her own mind only the rapture of typewritten pages, the ecstasy of holding her own book in her own hands, the shy delight of being introduced in distinguished gatherings as "the authoress."

Now, on her twenty-third birthday, unexpectedly, Van Murchison had given her back these dreams. Oh, how good she could be, how gracious and sweet and fine she could be if Van Murchison fell in love with her! That was all she needed, just a break—just an indication that wonderful things could happen, that poor girls were sometimes sought in marriage by rich young men.

Young Mrs. Murchison. After all, if she was married at—say this time next year—nobody could say that she had been an old maid. Twenty-four—that was young to marry. And then Ede should marry—it would be easy enough to find beaux for the other girls, with the Murchison money and position behind her!

The fun of it! The beauty of it! And why not? Other girls had had that much luck, and much, much more.

Drowsing off to sleep in the sweet summer darkness, Gail heard a door bang downstairs, just as the clock struck a drowsy eleven. The Lawrences, having little to protect, rarely locked doors; perhaps this was Sam coming in late, perhaps it was Phil. Anyway, unless it banged again she did not propose to get up to bother with it.

As it happened, it was neither, but Gail could not know that, and so she drifted happily off into the deep sleep of tired twenty-three, Van Murchison's laugh, his voice, still in her ears.

Sam had been in bed and asleep for an hour when the clock struck eleven. Phil had walked home from night school with Lily. He was now sitting on the steps of the Cass shanty at the end of Thomas street, murmuring incoherent and foolish absurdities to the little ear that smelled of heavy cheap powder and perfume.

No; the door had been slammed by Ariel—or rather it had been caught and slammed by an unexpected gust of wind when her small frail hand had opened it upon the summer dark. She had stood there, trembling, terrified, waiting to see if Sam or Gail or Edith had been roused, ready to fly to her room and scramble into bed at the first sound of an investigating footstep.

But there had been no disturbance upstairs, and after an interminable silence Ariel had opened the door again, noiselessly this time, and had slipped down through the overgrown garden, and into the deep green-black shadows at the gate. In a sky of clear dark blue millions of stars had been twinkling, and in the side lane, deeply rutted from winter rains, there had been two other stars, the watchful lamps of a shining low open car.

Ariel knew Buddy Raisch very slightly, but she knew, as all the town knew, that he was an overgrown big boy who had been in Stanford university for about three years and was still a sophomore. She knew what the scent of Buddy's breath signified, too.

Of the couple sunk in the rumble seat, an overcoated man with a collapsed little bobbed, slick head on his shoulder, she had known nothing. But she had settled in beside the driver with a little gasp of satisfaction and excitement.

Buddy had whispered, "Lissen, we're only going down the road a ways, and come back."

"That suits me," Ariel had said, unperturbed.

"You're a good little sport," Buddy had told her. They were out of hearing of the Lawrence house now, and he could move faster. He had stepped on the gas, and the car had shot like a projectile into the starry night.

Herring and Sardine Family

Any properly prepared small fish of the herring family is entitled to be called a sardine, according to the bureau of fisheries, United States Department of Commerce. Pilchard, sprat, and bristling are canned as sardines in Europe; in the United States young herring become sardines in Maine, and a species of pilchard, called the Pacific sardine, in California.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

"UNLESS"

"THE department commander places too much confidence in your zeal, energy and ability to wish to impose on you precise orders which might hamper your action when nearly in contact with the enemy. He will, however, indicate to you his own views of what your action should be, and he desires that you should conform to them, unless you should see sufficient reasons for departing from them."

It was June, 1876, in Montana. Gen. George Armstrong Custer, riding at the head of the Seventh cavalry in search of a big village of hostile Indians, pondered over these orders from his commander, Gen. A. H. Terry. He knew the plan of campaign—Terry and Gibbon and he were to time their marches so that they would strike the enemy at the same time. And that time was June 26.

But Custer was "in bad" with President Grant. If, unaided by the others, he could find the Indians first and win a smashing victory, he might get back into the good graces of the administration at Washington. So he pushed on relentlessly toward the Little Big Horn.

On the morning of June 25 his scouts reported the discovery of the village in the valley just below. True, Custer was 24 hours ahead of the appointed time of the rendezvous with Terry and Gibbon. But here were the Indians. If he let them escape he would be open to censure. Should he wait, or should he attack?

He remembered Terry's orders . . . "he desires that you should conform to them." And yet—"unless you should see sufficient reasons for departing from them." Didn't that little word "unless" relieve him of the responsibility for "conforming?" If he knew the meaning of the word, it did.

So he decided to attack. And on that word "unless" hung his life and the lives of 300 men of the Seventh cavalry. For that many perished, or died later of their wounds, in "Custer's Last Battle" on the Little Big Horn in Montana.

H. U. (U. S.) GRANT

WHEN the first-born son of Jesse Root Grant and Hannah Simpson Grant was six weeks old, his relatives wrote their choices of names for him on slips of paper, folded them, then drew one. It said "Ulysses"—his Grandmother Simpson's choice. But Jesse Grant didn't want his son to bear the name of "one of them furriners." So he tacked "Hiram" on in front of "Ulysses."

As the boy grew older he didn't care so much for "Ulysses" because the village wits pretended it was pronounced "Useless." Congressman Thomas L. Hamer, writing out Grant's appointment to the United States Military academy, couldn't remember if he had a middle name. But he did recall that the boy's mother was a Simpson. So he wrote it "Ulysses Simpson Grant."

On May 29, 1839, Ulysses Hiram Grant registered at West Point. "But," protested the adjutant, "this appointment is for Ulysses Simpson Grant." More trouble over his name! "All right—Ulysses Simpson Grant it is," he replied. And "U. S. Grant" he became.

The Civil war brought new meaning to that "U. S." After Fort Donelson it stood for "Unconditional Surrender," and as a commander of the victorious Union army in 1865, it was easy to believe that it also stood for "United States." Both meanings were easy to remember when it was time to elect a President in 1869. Would things have been the same if his initials had remained "H. U." or "U. H."?

THIRST

IT WAS hot that day along the road to Palos in the Spanish province of Andalusia. The dust eddied and swirled around the hoofs of a little white mule and arose in a choking cloud around his rider. He was Cristobal Colon, a Genoese sailor.

Ahead of him, the mariner saw the walls of a monastery . . . Santa Maria de la Rabida. Surely the good friars there would give him a drink!

They would, indeed! So he drank several cupfuls of the refreshing fluid. Between drinks Juan Perez, officiating guardian of the monastery, listened to the stranger's tale of thwarted ambition. He wanted to sail West across the Sea of Mystery to tap the riches of India and China. He had sought the aid of Ferdinand and Isabella, rulers of Spain. But they refused it.

By and by the disheartened sailor rode away. He did not know that Juan Perez was the confessor of the queen, nor what a deep impression he had made upon the friar with his tale of vast ambitions. But he soon found out. For Perez' eloquent pleading in the Genoese sailor's behalf convinced Isabella. She summoned the mariner to her court and called a council.

And so it came about that the thirst of Christopher Columbus on that hot summer day along the road to Palos sent him sailing at last across the Atlantic to immortality as the discoverer of America.

ENGLISH SPEECH EASILY FIRST

Close to 200,000,000 Use That Language.

How many people speak English today? It is hard to answer with any precision, but an approximation is nevertheless possible. First, let us list those to whom English is their native tongue. They run to about 112,000,000 in the continental United States, to 42,000,000 in the United Kingdom, to 6,000,000 in Canada, 6,000,000 in Australia, 3,000,000 in Ireland, 2,000,000 in South Africa and probably 3,000,000 in the remaining British colonies and the possessions of the United States.

All these figures are very conservative, but they foot up 174,000,000. Now add the people who, though born to some other language, live in English speaking communities and speak English themselves in their daily business and whose children are being brought up to it—say 13,000,000 for the United States, 1,000,000 for Canada (where English is gradually ousting French), 1,000,000 for the United Kingdom and Ireland and 2,000,000 for the rest of the world—and you have a grand total of 191,000,000.

Obviously, no other language is the everyday tongue of so many people. Russian is spoken as first choice by no more than 80,000,000 of the 150,000,000 citizens of the U. S. S. R.; the rest cling to one or another of the hundred odd lesser dialects in which the Bolsheviki are forced to print their official literature. German follows with a grand total of 85,000,000. Whether French or Spanish comes next is in doubt, but neither can show more than 55,000,000. Italian is the runner-up, and the rest of the European languages are nowhere.

Nor is there any rival to English in Asia; for, though Chinese is ostensibly the native tongue of more than 300,000,000 people, it is split into so many mutually unintelligible dialects that it must be thought of less as a language than as a group of languages.

Thus English is far ahead of any competitor. Moreover, it promises to increase its lead hereafter, for no other language is spreading so fast or into such remote areas.—H. L. Mencken in Harper's Magazine.

What Is "Americanism?"

We hear on allsides many discussions as to exactly what is meant by the word "Americanism." What, precisely, is this American spirit and tradition which, some complain, is vanishing under the strain of economic stress?

It seems to us a very simple matter. The American tradition is the tradition of individual liberty. The American spirit is the force that impels every American to pursue his own chosen course to the limit of his ability . Under any genuine definition of Americanism every individual is free to travel as far and as fast in any direction as he chooses or is able to go.

By that definition of Americanism no man is bound for life or for longer than he pleases to any group, class or party. Once he so binds himself he is sacrificing his inborn American right of individual choice, whether he affiliates with a political party such as the Communists, which dictates to each of its members just how they shall act under any conditions, or with a labor organization which denies him the right to work at whatever job he pleases, or with any other class or group short of the whole nation. One cannot admit even to himself that is limited by anything but his own ability and an esential respect for the rights and liberties of others, and be true to the American tradition.

We have no idea how many people have sacrificed their independence for fancied security; the temptation has been great, but we fancy fewer have succumbed to it than is generally believed. We think the old American spirit of personal liberty of thought and action still survives and, in the long run, will continue to rule America.—The Luverne Journal and News.

Praise For F. D. R.

Asa rule, the conference of governors adopts no resolutions of a controversial nature. But in the closing session of the meeting of state chief executives at Biloxi last week, that precedent was broken and without a record vote, it was declared "that business has been greatly benefited and working conditions vastly improved under the wise leadership of President Roosevelt and that the wage and other provisions should be encouraged and furthered throughout the nation."

Gov. Olin D. Johnston, of South Carolina, who had described Mr. Roosevelt as "the greatest president in the history of our nation," offered the resolution.—The Birmingham Age-Herald.

SCHOMBERG

ROOFING AND HEATING CO.

One of Central Alabama's foremost well skilled roofing and heating contractors. They are located in Birmingham at 1916 Avenue E., and feature sheet metal and furnace work, built-up roofs, flat roofs and installation of air conditioning systems. We recommend the Schomberg service to all our Shelby County readers. Phone 6-5716.

This establishment is deserving of more than passing notice in this review of our onward progress of this section as one of the most comprehensive and expert sheet metal roofing service in this part of the state.

In addition they conduct a complete sheet metal establishment and are prepared to execute all intricate features of modern sheet metal work such as furnace and heating repairs, air conditioning systems and general tinning.

In their employ are expert men who thoroughly understand the laying of various types of roofs. The service is rapid and satisfactory, the work careful and tasteful.

By executing first-class work at moderate rates they have built up their business to its present high standing.

In closing we wish to commend Mr. Schomberg upon his success in satisfactorily serving the public.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

Guy Roberts, popular Legionaire and owner of East Texas Service Station in Calera, was one of the distinguished visitors in The Democrat office on Monday morning.

Henry Naish, Treasurer of Shelby County, is an official who combines thoughtfulness and courtesy with strict attention to his business. yet he has a keen eye for the "beautiful" ——Evidence? A lovely collection of choice Dahlias left on my desk this Monday morning, which started the day off—just right. Thanks Mr. Treasurer of Shelby County——Your floral gift cannot be measured in dollars and cents, which you readily dispense when the case "warrants", but my appreciation is deep and sincere, and the flowers took all the "blues" out of Monday.

Leroy Mooney is steadily improving in Birmingham after undergoing an appendicitis operation last week.

Visitors from Vincent, Montevallo, Calera and Sylacauga, assured the success of the dance staged at the Columbiana Airport on last Saturday night. The Rhythm 'Ristocrats have never played to a more appreciative audience, nor have they ever played more rhythmically perfect. They were fortunate in securing Mamie Horn, versatile Pianist, who substituted for Leroy Mooney, regular Pianist. Mrs. Horn proved herself an artist in her rendition of the popular tunes of the day, and the appreciation from the dancers, and from the personnel of the orchestra, registered a compensation which, this lovely little lady states, she deeply appreciated. The next dance will be held at the Airport on June 29th.

E. Carter, of Kentucky, has moved to Shelby County and is located on the Bob Atkinson place, near Shelby. One of the first things Mr. Carter did which pleased us, was to sign up with the Democrat for a year's subscription, and we take this opportunity to welcome him to Shelby County, to wish him success, and to express our appreciation for a personal call in the office.

Bill Moody, popular staff member of The Sylacauga Advance, spent a few hours in Columbiana on Monday. Mr. Moody was also one of the popular "beau brummels" at the Airport Dance on Saturday night.

J. W. Letson is spending his vacation with his mother, Mrs. J. W. Letson, in Columbiana.

Washington has its "Merry-Go-Round"—politically speaking, and Columbiana had hers in reality during the past week. Horses, Chariots, Lights, Music and a merry whirl. It was a toss-up between the "grown-ups" and the "kiddies" as to which enjoyed it most. Many older residents proved that they were not averse to the rotation by music. For instance, "Uncle Jim Morrow" and a dignified Member of the Board of Revenue, C. R. Tinney, chose the raciest horses obtainable for their whirl under the lights.

Dame Rumor tells us that Mayor Harry Gordon will soon be the posessor of his own AIRSHIP. He tried out a "beauty" he tells me, last week. He has the fever all right, and it wouldn't surprise me to hear him whirring through space in a spiffy new Monoplane.

Carl Edwards, efficient Assistant Manager of the Taylor Cash Store in Columbiana, has been transferred to Montevallo, where he will continue his successful commercial activities in the store located in this cultural center. Columbiana's loss is certainly Montevallo's gain in this popular young fellow, who numbers his friends in this territory by the hundreds. The good wishes of this entire community follow Mr. Edwards. He will be sincerely missed in business, civic and social circles in Columbiana.

Karl Harrison, of Birmingham, and Miss Mildred Bennett, of Columbus, Georgia, spent Sunday in Columbiana with Mr. and Mrs. Ed Lovelady. Mr. Harrison holds a responsible position with the First National Bank in Birmingham, and recently passed the State Bar Examination. It is rumored that he may decide to locate in his former "home town"—Columbiana, and if this is true, a royal welcome will be awaiting him.

Personally speaking, we think "Karl Harrison, Attorney" on an office door, will look great—and we hope he will come in and fight his legal battles right here on home territory. If we remember correctly, his well known argumentative powers, on many occasions when we traveled the Melody Trail together, won his case, and we are fully convinced that he will have no trouble in convincing a jury in Shelby County to the fact that his CLIENTS should receive a favorable verdict.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nichols and their two sons, Henry and Frederick, are spending their vacation at Daytona Beach, Fla. H. G. Nichols, Sr., of Birmingham, is in Columbiana looking after their mutual business interests in Shelby County during their absence.

Heart Drifts

A WEDDING PRAYER.

God, give them length of days to live together
Upon this earth; and lend them grace, we pray,
To keep in dignity and peace and splendor
This bright new house that they have built today.
Oh, always may the new rooms be encircled
By walls of love, and may the faith two hold,
Each in the other, grow with Time's long passing.
We do not pray that they shall garner gold.

From years to be—Far better to glean wisdom
Of UNDERSTANDING, and to draw so near
Each to the other that though storms may threaten
Their love will keep them guarded from all fear.
Oh, teach them God, on this their bridal morning
To walk love's path with fearless eyes, brave, gay;
To know that two who bear all things together
Will build a house that will not pass away.

—(Welshimer)

LONG AFTER YOU'VE FORGOTTEN ME.

Long after you've forgotten me
I think I shall love you.
I think when trees walk up
Skies touch April blue

And winds splash music in the air,
And crocuses, too bright,
Lay colored rugs on meadow lands,
I'll cry for you at night.

But traitor to my love I think
How nice, dear, it would be
If, after I've FORGOTTEN YOU
You kept on loving me.

—(Welshimer)

GO AND SIN NO MORE.

I never could
Be very good—
Some damning deeds I do,
Which proved my sinful soul and I
Plain wicked through and through.
Unethical, surprises
Everywhere I go,
Rewarded satisfaction,
Shocking people so!
And where there's no repenting,
There's nothing good you see;
The fact that I'm not SORRY
Brings out the bad in me!

—(E. B.)

PASSER-BY

A breeze passed by, and in its wake
Left a trail of Spring.
It took away the gloom and cold
And left a wondrous thing
Of flowers and blossoms, white and sweet
Of hillsides green and bright,
Of glowing, pulsing, living earth,
Freed from wintry night.

Your lov epassed by, but touched my heart,
And brought it Spring again.
As snow in April rain.
The gloom and cold were swept away
But could the Springtime ask the breeze
To stay the summer through?
Then how could I, despite my heart,
Ask the same of you?

—(Contributed)

GARDEN LATE AT NIGHT.

I like my garden late at night
When moonbeams etch in black and white
The lily studded, sunken pool
That lies so calm and still and cool.

The daytime's noise has died away;
And only fountains splash and play,
While just beyond the garden wall
A whippoorwill sends out his call.

—(Aurett)

A HEART BREAK.

A heart break is a little thing
It only means that you
Will have no foolish songs to sing
Or useless things to do.

A heart break means that you can sit
And watch a dream go by
And laugh because you know that it
Will sicken soon and die.

A heart break—why, it only means
There is no word or touch
No hand you clasp or smile you miss
Can hurt you very much.

A heart break means that where a kiss
Has dealt you pain before
There is no-thing-next world or this
Can hurt you anymore.

—(Ross)

PERSONAL MENTION

Misses Susie, Sallie and Robbie Stone, and Miss Malone, of Uniontown, who have been the feted guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone, returned home, Sunday.

Friends of Mrs. Wailes Carter will regret to learn that she is in a Birmingham hospital suffering from an appendicitis operation performed Monday.

Mrs. Lena Merrill had the misfortune to fall and break her ankle last week. She is, however, rapidly recovering after a trip to the hospital Friday, and has returned to her home in Columbiana.

The Yellow Front Store did a land office business on Saturday—An extra force of clerks had to be pressed into service—This is one store that believes in ADVERTISING.

There is no good reason why you should suffer so much from the hectic rays of Old Sol. Why not go to Yamakita—get in the swim—and forget it? Although there are only six miles between the two towns—Yamakita is several degrees cooler after the sun goes down. Try it and see.

Speaking of improvements needed in the town of Columbiana. Someone should build an Apartment House. You would be surprised to know how many people come by this office daily wanting "rooms to rent". That's an idea Mayor, and you could call it GORDON APARTMENTS. Sounds pretty swell I think. Now, there's the IDEA and the NAME—all you need is waive your fairy wand, get in you little airship, go get the money and come on back and presto—it would be all built and ready for occupancy by next day. Let's get "hammering".

Baby Nickson has the best racket we know of for SERVICE. When she comes to her meals with Dr. and Mrs. Nickson at Curlee's, and she does not get what she wants just when she wants it, a very emphatic yelp gets us all going, and her baby smile when ice cream arrives is the richest reward we could want. She is a new comer to Columbiana and only nine months old, but a more popular "boarder" has never made this cafe more attractive at meal time than this Babette who is the most adorable member of the Nickson family.

Mrs. J. B. King, of Troy, Alabama, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Zera Walton, in Columbiana.

Supt. J. L. Appleton has returned from his vacation spent in Panama City, and is busily engaged in completing plans for his new building projects soon to begin on the schools in Shelby County.

A lady school teacher confides in us that the big problem she is facing in applying for a job next year and in making a personal appearance before the School Board is whether to look "old-henish" or "Mae Westish".

Here is a "catty remark" made about a citizen in this town from one of his "close friends" — "The part he talks with is too big for the part he thinks with" — Sure, I'll tell you and let you fight it out — Come by.

Here is another wise crack from the same gentlemen — "Horse sense is due to the fact that the horse is kept tied up. Turn a horse loose and it will act a fool, same as some people".

Clay Lester, former resident of Columbiana, now making his home in Birmingham, spent Tuesday in Columbiana with his mother, Mrs. Nora Lester.

Members of the Homemaker's Club met at the home of Mrs. J. M. Harkins, of Chapel Community, Thursday, June 6th, for a spend-the-day party. Embroidery work was the feature for the day during work hours, but an interesting as well as practical demonstration was given on cleaning silver by a simple and easy method, which is well for every housewife to know. Crochet work was also discussed, as many of the members are now at work on dresses, purses, hats, rugs, mats, tams, collars, bedspreads, etc. Fancy applique quilts were also exhibited. At the noon hour a lunch was served to 19 members and four guests. The guests being Mrs. Loretta Head, of Columbiana, Supt. of Shelby County's Adult education; Mrs. E. B. Lyon, of Columbiana, director of an adult class of that place; Mrs. Cecil Duke, of Columbiana; Mrs. Zadie Guy and Miss Hazel Guy, also of Columbiana. The guests departed declaring this one of the most enjoyable affairs of the season, as Mrs. Harkins, "Sallie", as she is lovingly known, is one of the most lively as well as likeable hostess at all times. Similiar gatherings of this type are being planned for later dates.

METHODIST NOTES

There will be the regular services at the Methodist Church, Sunday morning, the pastor using as his subject, "The Other Fellow".

There will be no evening service, the Methodist congregation worshiping with the Baptists. The pastor urges all his people to attend the services now in progress at the Baptist Church.

Revival services have been announced to begin at the Methodist Church on Sunday, August 11th. Dr. Arthur H. Nabors, pastor of the First Methodist Church, of Florence, Alabama, has been engaged to do the preaching.

NOTICE—I have rented the Barber Shop at Shelby, Alabama, and will barber on Wednesday's and Saturday's, and will appreciate your business.

Paroles and Ransom
Vincent Astor's Hotel
Mussolini Is So Blunt
The Brain Bath

Waley, the Weyerhaeuser kidnaper, caught after he sent his wife, like a true gangster coward, to change ransom bills for him, has this record:

Arthur Brisbane

He had been arrested six times, beginning at eighteen, and sentenced to terms in prison that would have kept him in prison for 75 years if parole boards had allowed it.

He was repeatedly released until at last, thoroughly trained in crime and convinced, probably, as he might well be, that American justice is a mere joke, he went to Tacoma and planned there the "snatch," as criminals call it, of the Weyerhaeuser child.

Highway patrolmen in the western states did admirable work co-operating with the "G-men." The western highway patrolmen are real policemen.

Mr. Vincent Astor of New York has bought in and will operate the St. Regis hotel on Fifth avenue, built originally with Astor money, now repurchased for $5,090,000.

An Astor running a hotel is nothing new. You need not be very, very old to remember the gray granite "Astor House," a block long, opposite the City Hall on lower Broadway, where they had roast beef such as you find nowhere now.

Before prosperous Americans learned to be really "aristocratic" with yachts, race horses and divorces, they thought owning a hotel and putting your name on it was almost aristocratic. The Astor House and the Brevoort House in New York, the Palmer House in Chicago, the Coates House in Kansas City, a thousand others prove it.

Mussolini annoys England; he talks so plainly—no diplomatic beating about the bush. Bluntly he says to old Britannia: "When you were building up your empire, killing off the Boers to grab South Africa, taking India from the pot-bellied rajahs, gathering in everything that was not tied down, you did not care tuppence what the world thought about you. Now it is my turn to gather in territory, maybe Ethiopia, and I care less than half of tuppence what you think about it. So mind your own business, please."

Important to the human race is news of the "brain bath," which, according to physicians gathered at a convention of the American and Canadian medical associations, literally "washes the brain," freeing it from the poison of diseases such as infantile paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sleeping sickness and some kinds of spinal meningitis.

A solution of salt and water is injected into the vein at the ankle. After it has gone through the circulation and washed out the brain, it is withdrawn with its collected poisons through a needle inserted in the lower end of the spine.

Newsdom, written for newspaper men, says it has questioned all editors and publishers that amount to anything, and finds them "overwhelmingly certain that radical movements are of no serious trend."

The discovery will comfort many, but it is well to be cautious. There is always a possibility of underestimating what looks like "radicalism of no importance."

China, because she cannot do otherwise, yields in full to Japan's demands. That is the news from Tientsin, and it happens because the 400,000,000 Chinese are not prepared for war, whereas the 60,000,000 Japanese are prepared.

"Yielding" probably will not save China from another heavy loss of territory. It is predicted that the young Chinese emperor, Japan's figurehead in Manchukuo, will be moved over and back to the old imperial palace, there to sit again as the Japanese imperial dummy.

All this it not our business, for it is happening in Asia. We have plenty to do here.

"What's in a name?" Some young Republicans want the old Republican party to change its name from "Republican party" to "Constitutional party." Long ago, when the New York Herald, since dead, reduced its price, the late Joseph Pulitzer wrote in a short editorial: "The trouble is not with your price, it is with your newspaper. Change that."

The trouble with the Republican party is not with its name.

A dangerous strike is called off in Toledo, workmen wisely deciding to deliberate before going ahead with a strike that might have thrown tens of thousands out of work.

The steel industry, also setting a good example, decided to continue the NRA wage scale, not reducing pay or increasing hours. The Supreme court's Constitution decision has done no harm there.

With the Always Popular Ruffles

PATTERN 2220

Perhaps the reason girls love ruffles is because men "adore" them. You'll be very definitely "dated" (in more ways than one) when you appear in Fashion's newest scoop—Double Tiered Ruffles—some Sunday afternoon! What more heavenly than 2220 made up in soft powder blue printed chiffon? That ruffle that starts and ends very conservatively at the waistline, looks its fluttery best at the shoulder with the help of the sleeve ruffle! A cool way to eliminate sleeve difficulty, too. The skirt takes just enough flare to give it graceful movement. Less expensive but just as lovely in organdy or sheer print cotton!

Pattern 2220 is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40. Size 16 takes 3½ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address, and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern department, 243 West Seventeenth Street, New York City.

"Would you consider it a disgrace to be descended from a monkey?"

"Not exactly," answered the professor. "A monkey isn't so bad. He doesn't use alcohol or tobacco or profanity, and in moments calling for discretion knows exactly when to climb a tree."

Cottons of New Style Importance

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUMMER cottons were never so lovely as they are this year, when their new fashion importance has caused them to be styled as carefully and as beautifully, and often as formally as the most expensive silks. They have blossomed forth in the stores in such alluring array that even if you have forgotten how to thread the bobbin of your sewing machine, you will find yourself buying dress-lengths for your own sports and daytime summer clothes and for pretty frocks for your little girl.

With cottons being declared so really high-fashion this season, at the same time so practical and inexpensive, it is no wonder they are creating such a furore in the style realm, they are simply irresistable. Then, too, they include such a wide variety of weaves to choose from, there is not the slightest difficulty in finding a proper kind for any pattern you may have selected.

Seersuckers are of course big news—and there are several types that merit attention for street and sports wear. The shiroshakker plaids, in very fine-crinkled seersucker, are equally attractive in two tones of one color or in vari-colored designs in bold or small patterns. The sports dress, to the left in the group illustrated, is made of this sort of plaid seersucker. It buttons all the way down the back and proves its practicability in that it may be worn separately or over a play suit of halter bodice and shorts. The ensemble is smart for beach, bicycling or tennis. Anyone who can sew even a little bit can easily make this simply though effectively styled dress.

Lighter in weight are the crepecord seersucker variations with corded lines emphasizing the color stripes in either pastel or high shades. You will have a difficult time choosing between these colorful stripe and the gay seersucker plaids. A dress of each is the best solution to this problem.

Flaxon batistes, which you probably wore in rosebud-sprigged prints when you wore braids and hair ribbons, are just as cool and sheer and dainty as ever. This year they are especially chic in new lively plaid and floral designs. The best of it is you can depend on them being in reliable fast colors.

That smart tailored budget frock which we are picturing to the right is made of one of the fashionable flaxon batistes in very sheer yet firm stripes. You will enjoy a dress like this for summer daytime and spectator-sports wear. One of the fascinations of stripes is they make up so effectively. The gown illustrated is no exception to the rule. This striped batiste comes in red or blue with white or yellow, also brown with orange. The tie and belt of organdie in a matching shade add a pleasing trimming touch. Pleated short sleeves and buttons all the way down the front are nice details.

The little girl is wearing a pretty frock which is made of lightweight crossbar cotton seersucker in red and white. The collar and pocket are piped with bright red.

FLOWER JEWELRY

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The new gold flower-jewelry is so attractive you will fall in love with it at first sight. The centers of the flowers are of turquoise, coral and pearls. The clips fastening this charming black lace-and-net cape with matching halo hat which has a large clip at the back, the bracelets and the ornaments on the lace bag show how decorative and flattering a touch these pretty jewel-centered gold flowers impart to milady's costume. With the now-so-fashionable white chiffon evening gowns you couldn't think of anything more pleasing to wear than a gold flower jewelry ensemble as here pictured. This stunning lace cape-and-hat ensemble was shown in the style revue in connection with the Lace ball recently given in New York.

FASHIONS HAVE NEW ACCENTS OF COLOR

White is still the top, but there are some new notes creeping into the song. They will never be able to steal the place that pure white accents have held for so long, but they are a great boon to those whose skin doesn't take kindly to white. With navy, with black or with brown a deep shade of pink, called desert rose is used. In pique or silk it makes gilets and collars and bunches of flowers for the neckline of a frock.

Chamois is the other color that is stealing into the accessory picture—the real thing or rough silk that is dyed the same tone. When the leather is used it makes belts and ascot scarfs, to be worn with navy or gray when matched to chamois gloves and bag.

Just as there are new colors in accessories, so are there new colors in hosiery. There is a coppery shade that blends beautifully with brown or tan ensembles, to be worn with brown shoes.

Peasant Influence Noted in Various Dress Items

The peasant influence is felt in all sorts of angles of female attire this season. Blouses go in for great big sleeves that are banded tight at the wrist, embroidery of peasant motive is used on dresses and good-looking sports oxfords have thick soles stitched in hemp.

One of the smartest results of the "back-to-the-soil movement" is a two-piece Paquin daytime dress in a soft shade of blue. The straight skirt is given fulness by small kick pleats in front. The rounded high neck is formed by a sunburst of wide tucks and is edged by a band of blue pearls and metal which continues on the left shoulder to form an epaulette.

Chiffon Blouses

Gay blouses of chiffon in such shades as turquoise, chartreuse, mauve, beetroot and coral are going to look awfully smart with white crepe suits this summer

Lesson for June 23

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 1:6-8; 13:1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature.—Mark 16:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Sharing the Good News of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Paul Goes Preaching.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Can I Do for Missions?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Missionary Purpose of the Church.

God is, in his essential being, merciful and compassionate. All his promises to and actions toward man have been with redemptive ends.

I. Israel a Missionary Nation.

Following the apostasy of the whole race, God called Abraham to become the head of a race through whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed (Gen. 12:1-3). The first gospel promise, that of Genesis 3:15, was to become an actuality through the missionary activities of the Jewish people.

1. The nations of the earth invited to look to God (Isa. 55:22). Israel was called to be the peculiar witness to the nations of Jehovah, the one God Deut. 6:4).

2. Christ given as a light to the nations (Is. 49:6). Christ is the way, the truth, and the life (John 14:6). Christ is the light of the world (John 8:12).

3. Jonah, a Jew, goes as a missionary to a Gentile city (Jonah 3:1-10). Jonah is prophetic of the nation and God's purpose for the Jews. While the chosen nation has been disobedient to God as Jonah was, yet after severe chastisement they shall fulfill the divine purpose.

II. The Church a Missionary Organization.

The very genius of the Church is propagation through devout missionary effort.

1. The apostolic commission (Matt. 28:18, 20).

a. The authority of Jesus (v. 18). God gave him all authority in heaven and earth. b. The commission of the apostles (vv. 19, 20).

(1) It was to teach, that is, make disciples of all nations (v. 19). They were to make known to the world that Christ died to save sinners.

(2) Baptize those who believed. This baptism was to be in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, indicating that the believer has been brought into definite relationship to each member of the Holy Trinity.

(3) To teach the disciples obedience (v. 20). Profession is not enough. Oberience must issue.

c. The all-sufficient promise (v. 20). There would constantly be the blessing and fellowship of the all-powerful Savior and Lord.

2. The missionary program (Acts 1:6-8). The Church is under solemn obligation to witness to all the world of the gracious salvation which has been provided in Christ.

3. The first foreign missionaries (Acts 13:12). The occasion for this enterprise was a meeting of certain prophets and teachers at Antioch. While these ministers were engaged in praying, the Lord laid heavily upon their hearts the evangelization of the world. This marks the beginning of foreign missions as the deliberately planned enterprise of the Christian Church.

4. Preaching the gospel in Europe (Acts 16:6-10). Paul's inclination was to tarry in Asia Minor preaching the Word, but he was carried along by the Spirit. The Holy Spirit is just as active in closing doors as in opening them. The time had come for the gospel to begin its conquest of another continent. Paul, being hemmed in on all sides, was given the vision of a man of Macedonia pleading for help.

5. Preaching Christ before Agrippa (Acts 26:12-20). Paul, having been brought before the king, took advantage of the opportunity to witness to him of the Savior. Observe,

a. His manner of life (v. 12). He showed that he had been in strictest accord with the most rigid sect of the Jews. b. His supernatural conversion (vv. 13-15). Christ had appeared to him on the way to Damascus and revealed himself to him. c. Jesus Christ commissioned him for a work (vv. 16-18). He was sent to the Gentiles to open their blind eyes, to turn them from darkness to light and from the power of Satan to God. d. His consecration (vv. 19, 20). He rendered immediate obedience to his commission. He showed that the opposition which he now experienced was due to his vigorous prosecution of his work.

The Foot of the Rainbow

The foot of the rainbow is never where you think it is. Perhaps there is a pot of gold there, but there are many more pots of gold that you will pass on your way to realize your dreams. Some men have the vision to see them.

The True End of Life

Happiness is the true end and aim of life. It is the task of intelligence to ascertain the conditions of happiness, and when found the truly wise will live in accordance with them.

No Place for Good Old Mule in Modern Armies

Ten thousand spectators looked on with bewilderment, officers with a score of years' service stood by in amazement. There was "something wrong" as the 12,000 troops at Schofield barracks, largest army post in the United States, passed in review before Maj. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, new commandant of the Hawaiian department.

Infantry brigades passed on in rank after rank; tanks rumbled and roared and lurched; motor trucks of the field trains sped across the huge field; signal corps cars with their loads of carrier pigeons raced along; light field artillery and the heavy guns swept past the reviewing stand; bands tooted and thumped—but there was something decidedly wrong, something missing.

It was the good old army mule. Not a single mule had been used. It was the first time in the history of the Hawaii department that a complete divisional review had been staged without the appearance of any mules. The review was completely motorized.

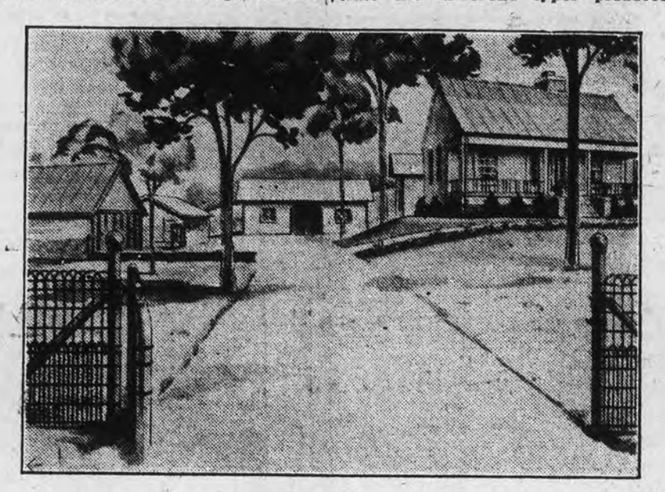
T. C. I. COMPANY TO HOLD OPENING OF MODEL NEW STEEL-CLAD HOMESTEAD



Tennesteel Homestead on Red Mountain Demonstrates Advantages of Steel in Home and Farm Building

June 22nd is the date set by officials of the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company for the official opening of Tennesteel Homestead—the model, new steel-clad homestead development recently constructed by the company near the crest of Red Mountain, bordering the Montgomery Highway on the outskirts of Birmingham, to illustrate the advantages of sheet steel in homestead construction.

Governor Bibb Graves, Commissioner of Agriculture R. J. Goode, Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and many prominent agricultural authorities have accepted invitations of the company to attend the opening of the new development.

Tennesteel Homestead occupies a tract of four acres on the Southern slope of Red Mountain. It comprises a modern steel-clad cottage, two-car garage, barn, poultry house and corn crib. All buildings are constructed of Tennessee Sheet Steel, applied over wooden framing.

Of particular interest is the new steel-clad, four room cottage, which is equally adapted to the requirements of the farm or urban center. Tennessee Company officials foresee a vastly increased use of this type construction in rural districts and communities removed from fire protection and in urban areas where landlords have suffered heavy losses in recent years through vandalism.

Except for the wood framing, floors and trim, which are said to lend themselves better and more economically to small, low cost housing, the Tennesteel cottage, is built of Tennessee Steel Sheets rolled at Fairfield. Siding of the cottage is of painted steel weatherboard sheets, applied over a wooden frame; the roof of V-crimped steel sheets; the ceiling and interior walls of beaded steel sheets. Proper insulation both against summer's heat and winter's chill has been amply provided. Wall board insulation has been placed between the studs and both the outside and inside sheets. Four inches of mineral wool insulation is used between the joists and ceiling sheets.

Just south of the cottage is the durable and trim two-car garage, designed for use on farms or for city homes. Back of the home is the steel clad, sanitary poultry house, built to accommodate one hundred hens, where poultry is securely guarded against depredations of marauding animals, which often take such heavy toll of young chicks and feeds. A modern steel clad two-stall stable incorporates in both design and construction the best thought of Southern agricultural college authorities and practical farmers. It is planned especially to meet conditions found on the average Southern farm and like the other structures in the farmstead group is fire and lightning resistant. A steel corn crib is situated a few yards from the dwelling.

At Tennesteel Homestead, particular attention has been paid to the fencing. Various types of fencing, all made in the company's wire mill at Fairfield, have been erected to illustrate the different types produced. Ornamental lawn fences surround the front and sides of the premises. Fields are enclosed with American Wire Fence and National Wire Fence, the poultry yard with American Poultry and Rabbit Fence. All fence is erected on steel posts.

Grounds of the development will be farmed and used to demonstrate the advantages of Basic Slag, a plant food and soil conditioner, produced in the United States exclusively by the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company.

Tennesteel Homestead will be in charge of caretakers and open to visitors at all times, after June 22nd.

Young Calves Need Some Grain Feed

AUBURN, Ala.—Yearling heifers and 2-year-olds may be fed at this season on pasture alone, but the calves under 6 or 8 months of age require some grain feeding in addition to grass in order to keep thrifty and growing, advises W. H. Eaton, of the dairy division of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

"Most pastures may be improved by mowing several times during the summer to control the crop of weeds," he says. "Bitter weeds should not be clipped too low at the first mowing as this may cause seed to form so low as to be difficult to clip at later mowings."

WOMAN OF 81 WANTS DIVORCE FROM HUSBAND WHO DOESN'T TRUST HER

DONIPHAN, Mo.—"Aunt Sarah" Jane McNabb, 81, after 65 years of married life, wants a divorce from her 85-year-old husband who accused her of "running around with other men."

Unless Circuit Judge R. I. Cope changes his mind, she'll never get it.

"We just ain't been worshippin' the Lord like we ought to," she told Judge Cope June 21st.

"She went to Oklahoma," L. C. McNabb, retired farmer, countered.

"I wrote her and told her if she would quit running around with other men and come back home it would be all right. I didn't mean by that, judge, that she was doing nothing wrong."

Judge Cope ordered McNabb to pay his wife $10 monthly until his final decision is handed down. Asked how long that would be, Judge Cope said "unless I change my mind, I'll never render a decision."

Legislators Win Salary Hike Suit

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — The injunction to prevent Alabama legislators from boosting their own pay $2.00 to $6.00 a day was dissolved here today by Circuit Judge Walter B. Jones, who held the increase constitutional.

John A. Yung, attorney for W. B. Leedy, Birmingham real estate man, who obtained the injunction, indicated that Mr. Leedy will not appeal.

"We would like to appeal to the Supreme Court to have the injunction reinstated," Mr. Yung said, "but there is the possibility of heavy costs if the high court should uphold Judge Jones' ruling.

"Mr. Leedy does not feel he can stand the liability of these costs by himself and no one has volunteered to share the cost with him."

Farmers Union Will Meet Here, June 29

The Shelby County Farmers Union will meet at the Courthouse in Columbiana on next Saturday afternoon, June 29th, at 2:00 p. m. The State President, R. H. Sartain, and State Secretary, W. C. Irby, will address the members.

All farmers and interested citizens are cordially urged to be present as matters of vital importance will be discussed.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF STATE TO USE NEW BOOKS NEXT YEAR

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—New textbook adoptions for the Alabama public schools, announced June 21st, reflect face-to-face with the problems of modern times.

The high school books include many titles on economics and government.

Rexford Guy Tugwell, assistant secretary of agriculture and one of the advance guard in the New Deal forces, is co-author of "Our Economic Society and Its Problems," adopted for use in the senior three grade of Alabama high schools beginning next session.

The list of high school books, announced by J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, includes the following representative new titles with emphasis on realistic problems: "Our Environment, Its Relation To Us," "The Growth of A Nation," "Our World Today," "Literature and Living," for junior one grade; "Cooperative Citizenship," junior three; "Our Nation's Development," senior two; "Unified American Government" and "The Nations at Work," senior three.

The majority of textbooks in both high school and elementary grades are new selections.

Reductions in the prices of the new textbooks will result in a total saving of $367,000 during the next six years, if each pupil is supplied with a complete set of books during that period, educators announced.

Old Age Pensions And Insurance Will Start July 1st In All States That Match Government Money

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Roosevelt social security program, administration leaders said Friday, eventually will cover more than 25,000,000 persons.

Under provisions of the legislation—now before the House for action on Senate amendments—the federal government would begin July 1st paying a maximum of $15.00 monthly to needy persons over 65 years of age or to needy blind, provided the sum is matched by the states. For the first two years, however, states without pension laws would not have to match this sum, according to the bill as passed by the Senate.

The measure would appropriate $100,000,000 for such persons next year. In addition, this money will be used to aid dependent and crippled children, destitute mothers, and for other welfare purposes. Just how many needy aged will be aided at this time is not known. Estimates are that there are about 10,000,000 persons over 65 in the United States, but not all of them require such financial assistance.

Beginning in 1937 employers and employes will be taxed to provide old age pensions for those now working. The workers will get the pensions when they become 65. This tax starts at 1 per cent each on employes and employers in 1937 and ranges up to 3 per cent in 1949. It applies to salaries up to $3,000. These pensions will range from $10.00 to $85.00 monthly. Companies which have private pension systems would not be affected by the tax under an amendment which the Senate attached to the legislation.

Administration leaders estimate that by 1950 this payroll tax will yield $2,000,000,000 annually, and that 25,000,000 workers will be entitled to the pensions when they reach the retirement age.

Those who are now 65 and are destitute will continue to receive up to $15.00 a month from the federal government, plus the state contribution as long as they live. The other plan, which provides for the taxes is designed for the men and women now employed.

The benefits those now working will receive will depend upon the length of time they have been employed and have paid the tax into the benefit payment fund. A person earning an average monthly salary of $100 would receive the following benefits, based on length of employment:

Years of Employment	Benefit
5	$17.50
10	$22.50
15	$27.50
20	$32.50
25	$37.50
30	$42.50
45	$53.75

Farm labor, domestic help, government, casual or charity workers are not included in the plan.

Another major feature of the security program is the unemployment insurance provision. Under this employers of four or more persons will be taxed at the rate of one per cent beginning next year and increasing to three per cent by 1938 on their payrolls to set up a general fund to pay benefits in depression times.

The employers will be able to get a 90 per cent credit on payments made to approved state unemployment insurance funds. The amount of benefits will be fixed by state law. The amount expected from this tax is $1,000,000,000 yearly.

Altogether, administration leaders said, the entire program contemplates eventual expenditures of between four and five billion dollars annually, more than the normal present cost of running the government.

A board of three, each member receiving $10,000 annually, will administer the act.

Secretary Perkins predicts that within the next year 20 states will set up unemployment insurance systems and that 35 states will have old age pensions systems. Twenty-eight now have the pension systems.

Garnishment Ruling Declared Optional

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Salaries of state officials and employes can be garnisheed only with consent of state officials Atty.-Gen. Albert A. Carmichael ruled June 21st in an opinion replying to an inquiry by State Comptroller Charles W. Lee.

Explaining the ruling, the attorney-general said that "garnishment may issue only after final judgment after suit for the debt, and even then only with the consent of the state officials."

"Consent of the state officials was construed as the official in charge of the department in which the "official" or "employe" is employed.

SEEN AND HEARD

By BILL SIMS

Well, well its awfully good to be back in deah ole Columbiana again. I sincerely want to thank you for the "get well quick" cards, they really helped. And now if you can still take it, I'll keep on writing my krazy lines.

Congratulations, I wish to bestow upon the baseball team for one of the quick'est of quickies I witnessed last Thursday. Really boys for a once a week afair you should'ent play so fast. Incidently if you want to see a good ball game, come up every Thursday p. m.

Tears and grief stood dormant Sunday last when "that man" left and took his "flying jenny" with him. I know the kiddies had a swell time, and still believe that ma and pa had a better time. Many a hungry husband found no food upon coming home, just a note that said:

Darling Hubby:

You will find a can of beans on the table, the can opener is in the cabinet. I'll be on hoss number 7 at the Merry-Go-'Round.

Wifie.

One of the newest inovacations that went down upon the streets of our fair village, and upon the pages of Mayor Gordons dairy, are the yaller stripes which compose the parallel parking law, which was brought into this borrough for the sole purpose of giving native women drivers more room down the center asle. Of course when you're caught between two closely parked autos all you have to do is count up to ten and then get out and walk home. We feel confident that the new idea will work, in fact two different organizations will be helped in this non-prosperity age, first the local garage, when other cars get through bumping and pushing your car around all you have to do is take your buggie down and have the permanent waves smoothed out of the fenders. Secondly, by the time we get familar with all the yellow stripes, circles, boxes and barrels, the optometrist will have completed a landslide business. So mister what have you got to loose besides a bumper?

Mr. and Mrs. to be Elliott were seen arm-in-arming it down main street evidently very happy. We understand that the bell will ring sometime in July, remember, the Baer-Braddock party only lasted fifteen rounds. This column sincerely wishes this young couple eternal hapiness and contentment.

Now if you will excuse me I'll remain your kibitzing correspondent, who just read in the local scandel sheets: that to be elligble to go around with a married lady, you must be able to go five rounds with her busbando

YOUNG DEMOCRATS OF SHELBY COUNTY MEET HERE, JUNE 18

On June 18th, 1935, at the call of President Homer J. Walton, the young Democrats of Shelby County assembled in the Courthouse for their first business meeting. A reorganization of the entire county will soon be perfected. Officers elected at this meeting included: Homer J. Walton, president; Yeager Horn, Secretary and Treasurer; and R. T. McGraw, of Vincent, Member of the State Executive Committee.

The Charter has been received from State Headquarters and work is going forward in each precinct in the county. The personnel of the Young Democrat Executive Committee will be announced at an early date. A full representation from various Beats in the county is urged to be present before these important positions are filled.

President Walton requests the Ladies to take advantage of this Party organization and meet with them at the next announced session. Ages eligible are from 19 to 39 years. Five hundred members is the ambitious goal set for Shelby County by this enthusiastic group of young Democrats.

Sheriffs Get Fees In New Ruling

AMERICAN LEGION CONVENTION WILL BE HELD IN MOBILE

MOBILE, Ala.—Chairman Inge, of the General Committee in charge of the Alabama Department Convention, American Legion, which begins at Mobile July 14th, has given notice to Legionnaires that they should make reservations for quarters as soon as possible, writing Chairman James E. Duggan, of the Housing Committee. care of Legion Headquarters, Battle House, Mobile, Alabama.

As many of the former Service men as desire to go in barracks can be accommodated at the low rate of fifty cents per day and those desiring rooms with bath and garage at private residences will pay one dollar.

The Mobile city commission has turned over to Convention managers two down-town fire stations, equipped with showers and sanitation, to be used as barracks, if desired, and the National Guard Armory is also available for this purpose.

Other visitors, in addition to registered members of the Legion and Auxiliary, will be provided with quarters on making request to the Housing Committee, and many of the most desirable homes in the city are being opened for the Convention period, to delegates and visitors.

Hotels, large and small, can accommodate approximately 1100 guests, and advance reservations indicate that these will be filled early in the four-days session. Chairman Inge gives assurance that all will be taken care of. The big entertainment feature is a boat trip to the Gulf on Tuesday, July 16th.

MISS JEAN LETSON WINS SCHOLARSHIP TO COLLEGE CAMP

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The three winners of the scholarships offered to the Alabama College Camp for Girls are Misses Sarah V. Gammage, Birmingham; Jean Letson, Columbiana, and Ann Canon, Opelika.

Miss Letson has a record of unusual versatility at Shelby County High School. She has been president of both the Girls' Athletic Association and the Dramatic Club. She has also been a member of the student council, cheer leader, a member of the school paper staff and a member of the Tennis Club.

Miss Gammage has taken part in several plays and other auditorium work at Kennedy School. She was the honor camper of the girls' camping group at Camp Cosby last Summer. She has held a number of important offices in her school and Sunday School.

Miss Canon has been an outstanding student at Opelika High School several years. She has been particularly interested in sports, playing tennis and making her letter in basket ball.

Those awarded honorable mention by the camp scholarship committee are Misses Carolyn Smith, Livingston; Annie Lee Ellis, Orrville, and Martha Asbury, Bessemer.

The camp is to be held July 22nd to August 17th and the scholarship winners may attend for any period of two weeks during that time, according to Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, director. Advance registrations indicate the largest attendance in several years. The camp is open to girls between the ages of 10 and 18.

An added attraction is the availability of the college camp house, library, tennis courts, archery greens, swimming pool, playing fields, gymnasium, dining halls and recital halls.

CCC Enrollment Ruling Clarified

Enrollment of a family member in the Civilian Conservation Corps will not bar any other member of the same family from employment on projects financed through the Government's new $4 880,000,000 work-relief fund, Federal relief authorities have ruled.

The ruling was announced in Birmingham through the office of John D. Petree, Alabama director of the National Emergency County and state NRA head.

Tenant Aid Bill May Not Pass This Time

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Senate action on the Bankhead farm tenant bill to provide federal loans to sharecroppers and tenant-farmers to purchase their own lands, was blocked by debate over seating Senator-elect Holt, of West Virginia, and may be postponed until after the Guffey coal control bill, the special tax extension resolution, the AAA amendments, and possibly other measures are disposed of. While Senator Bankhead (D., Ala.) will continue his fight for the bill, it is probable that it will be held over until the next session.

Legion Auxiliary To Meet Friday, June 28

There will be a meeting of the American Legion Auxiliary at the Court House, Friday, June 28th, at 3:00 p. m. This meeting is for the purpose of electing officers for next year. You are urged to attend.

Memorial Services At Old Salem, June 30th

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — Memorial services will be held at Old Salem, two miles north of Montevallo, on Sunday, June 30th, 1935. Brother Gabb, of Bessemer, will have charge of the services. Everyone is invited to come and bring a well filled basket.

President Offers Higher Tax and Wealth Reduction Program—Social Security and Wagner-Connery Labor Bills Passed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SPURRED on by the White House, the house, after a hot debate, passed the Wagner-Connery labor disputes bill by acclamation, and President William Green of the American Federation of Labor hailed it as a "magna charta of labor." As is well known, the federation is the chief beneficiary of the measure, and Green and other labor union leaders had worked unceasingly for its passage.

Sen. Wagner

Opponents of this bill, including constitutional authorities in both parties, have asserted repeatedly that it is unconstitutional, and it is most probable that it will be carried to the Supreme court for an early test.

Every attempt to give the employer an even break with labor was voted down, but the house did accept an amendment making the new labor board an independent agency instead of a part of the Department of Labor as Secretary Perkins had demanded.

As passed by the house, the Wagner-Connery bill provides:

1. For the setting up of a permanent labor relations board of three members, appointed by the President, as an independent agency. The board, or its agencies or agents, is authorized to supervise elections, conduct hearings, and issue cease and desist orders for "unfair labor practices," which are enforceable by the courts.

2. That representatives selected by a majority of a unit of employees for the purpose of collective bargaining shall have the exclusive right to negotiate with the employer. The board may determine the appropriate unit for collective bargaining, whether by plant or craft, etc.

3. That it is an unfair labor practice for employers to restrain, coerce, or interfere with employees in their organization for collective bargaining.

4. That it is an unfair labor practice for employers to "dominate" or contribute financially to any labor organization.

5. That it is an unfair labor practice to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization for the purpose of making closed shop agreements.

6. A fine of $5,000 or a year in prison for anyone interfering with agents of the board, such as refusing to permit access to books and records.

EVEN Huey Long cheered when President Roosevelt's unexpected message on redistribution of wealth and increase of taxation for the rich was read to congress. The Chief Executive offered a program that he hopes will pay part of the vast expenses of the New Deal and at the same time break up some huge fortunes and check the growth of big corporations. He doesn't expect congress to do the entire job at this session, and the administration leaders at once set about stopping the radicals who wanted immediate enactment.

The President's taxation plan is frankly aimed against the wealthy, especially the men with million-dollar incomes. Of these there were 46 in 1933.

The following legislation he recommended for enactment during the present session in order to obtain ample revenue without hampering enterprise and to distribute tax burdens equitably:

1. High inheritance and gift taxes on "all very large amounts received by any one legatee or beneficiary." Segregation of this revenue for reduction of the national debt.

2. Tax levies to restrict "very great individual net incomes."

3. Substitution of a graduated corporation tax ranging from 10¾ to 16¾ per cent for the existing 13¾ per cent rate.

For consideration at the next session of congress the President proposed:

1. Elimination "of unnecessary holding companies in all lines of business," by discriminatory taxation.

2. Discouragement of "unwieldy and unnecessary corporate surpluses."

3. An amendment of the Constitution to abolish tax exempt securities by authorizing the federal government to tax subsequently issued state and local obligations and state and local governments to tax federal securities.

Treasury officials estimated that about one billion dollars could be expected ultimately from the tax plan submitted. Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee promptly called that body together to consider the proposals.

WITH only six senators voting in the negative, the senate passed the tremendously important social security bill that already had gone through the house. During the five days of debate a number of members, Democrats and Republicans like, had argued earnestly that this measure never would stand up in the Supreme court, but when their names were called nearly every one of them voted for it. The only consistent ones were Moore of New Jersey, Democrat, and Hastings of Delaware, Hale of Maine, Metcalf of Rhode Island, Austin of Vermont and Townsend of Delaware, Republicans. This social security measure will affect about 30,000,000 beneficiaries in the immediate future and by 1960, it is estimated, will cost the federal government more than $3,000,000,000 a year.

These are its main features:

1. An appropriation of $98,491,000 for the fiscal year 1936, including $49,750,000 for grants in aid to states for old age assistance. In addition there are authorized annual appropriations for the old age reserve fund, graduated from $255,000,000 in 1937 to $2,180,000,000 in 1980.

2. Income tax on employees and excise tax on employers, for old age benefits, beginning in each case at 1 per cent of the pay roll in 1937 and reaching the maximum of 3 per cent in 1949. In addition there is a pay roll tax on employers for unemployment insurance, beginning at 1 per cent in 1936, increasing to 2 per cent in 1937, and to 3 per cent, the maximum, in 1938.

3. Grants in aid to states on a matching basis for assistance to persons sixty-five or older, the government's contribution not to exceed $15 per month.

4. Old age benefits after January 1, 1942, ranging from $10 to $85 per month, depending upon the total amount of wages earned after December 1, 1936, and before reaching sixty-five years of age.

5. A 90 per cent credit to employers for taxes paid into state unemployment insurance funds, the other 10 per cent to be apportioned among the states for administration of their unemployment insurance laws.

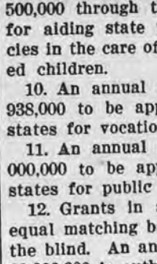
6. Grants in aid to states for aid to dependent children, the federal government putting up $1 to the state's $2. An appropriation of $24,750,000 is authorized for the fiscal year 1936.

7. Grants in aid to states on an equal matching basis for maternal and child health services. An annual appropriation of $3,800,000 is authorized.

8. Grants in aid to states on an equal matching basis for the care of crippled children. An annual appropriation of $2,850,000 is authorized.

9. An annual appropriation of $1,500,000 through the children's bureau for aiding state public welfare agencies in the care of homeless or neglected children.

10. An annual appropriation of $1,938,000 to be apportioned among the states for vocational rehabilitation.



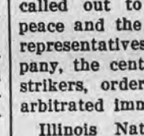
11. An annual appropriation of $8,000,000 to be apportioned among the states for public health services.

12. Grants in aid to states on an equal matching basis for assistance to the blind. An annual appropriation of $3,000,000 is authorized.

13. A social security board of three members in the Department of Labor, to be appointed by the President, each member receiving $10,000 a year.

GREAT BRITAIN'S realistic government finds the best path toward general peace in Europe is conciliation of Germany, so it has yielded to Hitler's naval demands and concluded a bilateral pact with the reich, disregarding entirely the desires and fears of France. The agreement acknowledges Germany's right to build a fleet up to 35 per cent of the tonnage of the British empire, and, what is more important, permits Germany 45 per cent, and in certain circumstances, parity with the empire in submarine tonnage. Submarines were forbidden to Germany by the treaty of Versailles.

EWING Y. MITCHELL, whom President Roosevelt ousted from the position of assistant secretary of commerce because he could not work in harmony with Secretary Roper, retaliated with public charges that "special interests" dominate the Commerce department. He cited especially a government contract with the United States lines for the permanent lay-up of the steamship Leviathan, asserting that it was against the public interest and that "those interested in the company, including P. A. S. Franklin, John M. Franklin, Vincent Astor and Kermit Roosevelt" stood to benefit by it. He also severely criticized the bureau of air commerce and the steamship inspection service.



E. Y. Mitchell

No one in the administration seemed disturbed by Mr. Mitchell's outbreak, but the senate committee on commerce at once summoned him to explain and expand his charges. Mr. Mitchell turned out to be an excitable gentleman, prone to jump to conclusions and to voice his opinions rather than facts. He talked a lot about inefficiency, "sinks of corruption," "favoritism and graft" and such things, but he didn't tell the committee much that it didn't already know. He asserted the United States lines, a subsidiary of the International Mercantile marine, had received a "gift" of $1,721,000 through the retirement of the Leviathan.

SENATOR JAMES COUZENS of Michigan has given to the federal government $550,000 to finance a 1,000-acre residence colony for part time industrial workers in the Detroit area. A tract has been purchased nine miles south and west of Pontiac. The project will be controlled by a non-profit corporation and Senator Couzens will have nothing to do with its management.

FORTY prisoners in the Kansas penitentiary at Lansing staged a spectacular revolt against what they said was poor food, and refused to come out of the prison coal mine until their demands were granted. They built fires to keep the guards away from the shaft, but the smoke from these was turned backward and the mutineers tamely surrendered.

POOR old NRA, now just a thing of skin and bones, has a new set of managers. President Roosevelt issued an executive order extending the emaciated affair until April 1 next, in accordance with the resolution adopted by congress, and then announced that James L. O'Neill, vice president of the Guarantee Trust company of New York, would serve as administrator. Assisting the banker in the effort to persuade the public, business men and labor to abide voluntarily by the codes no longer enforceable, and in the assembling of statistics, are Leon C. Marshall, director of the division of review; Prentiss L. Coonley, director of the division of business co-operation, and George L. Berry, assistant to the administrator, representing labor. Mr. Berry, who has been serving as a code administrator, is president of the International Pressmen's union and was once a candidate for nomination for Vice President of the United States.

G. L. Berry

O'Neill, Marshall and Coonley were made directly responsible to the President. An advisory council of six members was named to help them. On this council are Charles Edison and Howell Cheney for industry; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Philip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers, for labor, and Emily Newell Blair and Walton H. Hamilton for consumers.

AFTER three bloody riots in Omaha's street car strike, in which one man was killed and nearly two hundred were injured, Gov. R. L. Cochran of Nebraska took charge of the situation. State troops were called out to preserve the public peace and the governor, meeting with representatives of the traction company, the central labor union and the strikers, ordered that the dispute be arbitrated immediately.

Illinois National Guardsmen were sent to Freeport where strikers at the Stover Manufacturing plant had fought with deputy sheriffs. Gov. Henry Horner intervened and a basis was reached for settling the strike, which had been in force since May 7. The men were granted a wage increase at least until September 1 next.

President Roosevelt succeeded in averting the threatened strike of bituminous coal miners. Both the operators and the United Mine Workers agreed to a truce until June 30, before which time it is hoped a new wage scale can be formulated and accepted.

SECRETARY OF WAR DERN exonerated Maj. Gen. Benjamin D. Foulois of blame for the army air-mail fiasco and merely directed that he be reprimanded for making "inexact, unfair and misleading" statements to the house military affairs committee. This didn't suit certain members of the committee who insist the general should be removed from his command of the army air corps. Representatives William H. Rogers of New Hampshire and Lister Hill of Alabama said they would carry the matter to the floor of the house and there review the evidence the committee took.

Gen. Foulois

In holding that Foulois should receive more drastic punishment than a reprimand, Representative Rogers made public a letter from Secretary Dern to the committee. The letter followed an official War department statement clearing Foulois, whose friends insisted he was being made a scapegoat for the administration air-mail blunder.

"It is affirmatively established," Dern's letter read, "that General Foulois violated the ethics and standards of military service in making statements before your committee which not only were unfair and misleading to the committee itself but which also reflected upon the integrity of his brother officers."

PRESIDENT CARDENAS of Mexico appeared to have come victorious out of a crisis that was precipitated by Plutarco Elias Calles, who was opposing Cardenas' economic policies. The young president forced his entire cabinet to resign and formed another that would support him wholeheartedly.

The Mexican City Catholics, who are pretty much suppressed, took advantage of the presence in the capital of thousands of Rotarians attending their international convention, and held a monster parade with speeches calling for religious liberty

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—Old human nature is working for an early adjournment of congress. It is not so much the heat, although despite the local boosters, Washington is no summer resort. But the senate and house chambers are both air-cooled, and so, for that matter, is the White House. As a matter of fact, the national lawmakers are probably more comfortable here than they would be at home. Not all of them, of course, but most of them.

The answer to the desire for early adjournment has nothing to do with temperature. It is the overpowering sense of futility, developed sharply since the Supreme court decision on NRA. Laws are being passed, which half the members believe will be held unconstitutional by the high court later on. Everything that is being done is frankly and openly admitted by the administration leaders to be of the stop-gap variety.

Hence there is no feeling that what they are doing is really constructive—that it is the kind of thing to which they can point with pride later on—telling their admiring constituents that they helped frame this or that.

Senators have told the writer in the last few days that they feel they are on Ickes' "work relief." Just going through motions on more or less fruitless errands. In short—time serving. But—senators and members of the house are not paid by the day. They are paid by the year. Staying in Washington a month or two longer than is absolutely necessary does not put a penny into their pockets.

Like Home Publicity

All of which might not be important if there was really important work to be done here. Oftimes senators and members of the house figure that it is much better politics for them to stay on the job in Washington than to go home. The publicity in their home-town papers is better. The folks back home think of the congressman as sweating in the sultry heat of Washington, working for their interests. Especially if his secretary is a good letter writer.

But there is very little percentage for that sort of thing in the present situation. The country isn't much interested in this stop-gap legislation. Huey Long managed to get headlines by talking all night to stop a bill, which passed early next morning anyhow. But the average senator doesn't want to do that, and the average representative would be prevented by the rules.

So there has developed a real yen on the part of the legislators to go home. Which may bring about adjournment earlier than most observers have figured—especially right after the NRA decision.

Prior to that the prospect never was for an early adjournment. These dispatches consistently held to the idea of an August adjournment, not on any detailed calculations as to how long the White House "must" list would take, but on the theory that something always turns up to consume time in the senate. And it is the senate, not the house, which determines time.

Joint Selling

A wave of "joint selling companies" is in the offing as a result of the expiration of the codes, and the determination of the administration to prosecute anti-trust suits.

The original bargain of NRA, it will be recalled, was that industry was to agree to pay better wages, work its labor shorter hours, eliminate child labor, and stop chiseling, and in return the government would go lightly on anti-trust prosecutions, permitting all sorts of agreements as to prices, distributions of territory, etc.

Naturally industry liked the latter, whatever it thought about the price it had to pay, and right now it wants to continue the benefits, if any, from what have been regarded as combinations in restraint of trade.

Whereupon many eyes have been turned on the famous Appalachian Coals, Inc., case. This is a case in which a large number of coal producers joined in having one corporation sell their product. The avowed object was to cut selling costs—to abandon the ruinous cost of each coal operator maintaining an office and selling force in every important market.

The government did not like this setup at the time. The Department of Justice pointed out forcefully that actually the selling company in question maintained, in many cases, separate offices and selling organizations for every coal producer it represented.

But the Supreme court, after lengthy arguments and due consideration, held that this practice did not violate the anti-trust laws.

Now there are some who think that the high court took due cognizance of the fact that coal is a more or less distressed industry; that if the same case were presented to the high court affecting a prosperous industry the decision might be different.

Astute lawyers here, looking into the situation for a number of industries, do not think so. They think the language of the court in deciding the NRA case shows conclusively that the court is not willing to temper the Constitution to the shorn lamb.

Here's the Point

The whole point now is whether some industry which, if it attempted to get together and frame price scales for its products or divide up territories in which its various corporations would sell, would run afoul of the anti-trust laws, could avoid this danger by following the Appalachian Coals example.

Determined to enforce the Sherman and Clayton acts, the Department of Justice is concerned over the situation. It fears a number of industries will attempt this plan—far more effective, it believes, than ever were the famous Judge Gary dinners, at which the steel trade fixed prices by mutual consent, thus getting around the law.

All the government agencies, incidentally, are interested, notably that of Public Works Administrator Ickes, who lets out loud blasts every now and then attacking agreements by producers of this or that commodity sold to the government.

Just what Ickes would say if the cement industry had a common selling agency is not hard to imagine. One lawyer, studying the problem for an industry having nothing to do with cement, commented with a grin that his industry would take pains to have different bids submitted by the various units whenever the government wanted any of its products. Thus, he thought, it could avoid running afoul of Ickes and all the departments except that presided over by Homer S. Cummings.

Meanwhile industry generally takes no satisfaction whatever out of the Harrison amendment to NRA extension. As some of the business men here observed, it gives business the right to do everything it could do already without congressional approval, and denies it the right to violate any law.

Question of Power

Not even in the hottest days of dissension between Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and Donald R. Richberg were the friends of the two men further apart than they are right now over the solution to the problem presented by the Supreme court's invalidating the Blue Eagle.

Richberg's followers are all demanding an amendment to the Constitution. That, they contend, is the only way to meet the situation.

Johnson's friends are insisting that there is a perfectly constitutional method of solving the whole problem.

The real difference between the two, which would appear to be a matter for constitutional lawyers to determine, is actually not that at all, but a difference in powers desired for the federal government, with the Richberg crowd being for absolute federal powers. And with the President, very vigorously, siding with the Richberg crowd, but giving the Johnson crowd a chance to show what it can do.

Hence the Shanley bill. This little publicized—so far—document, is threatening to attract a good deal of attention before congress adjourns. It imposes, under the taxing power of the Constitution, an excise tax of $1 a year on every person, firm, corporation, or other form of business enterprise engaged in or whose business directly affects commerce among the states or with foreign nations.

It fixes a 40-hour week, for general practice, noting exceptions. It fixes a minimum wage of 50 cents an hour, saying that piece workers' pay shall be graduated so that the lowest will not fall below the 50-cent-an-hour minimum. It fixes an eight-hour day. It provides for time and a half for overtime in emergency work. It provides for collective bargaining.

Richberg Idea

What is in the minds of the Richberg group is clearly shown by some quotations from the language of the bill. For example:

"Interstate commerce as hereinabove defined is hereby declared to be in the nature of a public utility; and every such enterprise engaged therein shall in respect thereto, and in connection with the payment of the excise tax hereinabove provided and appurtenant thereto, be subject to regulation and control in the manner and with respect to the matters hereinafter provided."

Also:

"The congress hereby finds as a fact and declares that the employment of children in the trades and industries within the jurisdiction of this act, and underpayment of employees and the working of employees for excessive hours and under conditions which are hazardous in nature or dangerous to health, the denial or obstruction to employees of the right to bargain collectively with respect to their wages, hours and other working conditions, and unfair practices or methods of competition affect directly the flow of interstate commerce; and that, to facilitate and promote the full utilization of the nation's productive capacity and the free flow of such commerce, it is necessary and vital that basic standards be laid down with respect thereto."

And:

"Commerce among the states has become so interwoven in the fabric of economic life that our congressional experience and knowledge dictates that finding that those agencies of industry which are directly and immediately linked to interstate commerce must be deemed objects of interstate commerce in the interests of national defense and otherwise for the public welfare."

Senator Borah was not consulted, it might be stated, perhaps unnecessarily. Best judgment is that the constitutional lawyers in the house and senate will relieve the Supreme court of any embarrassment in ever passing on it. But it shows how a good many minds rather important in the New Deal are working.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their poetic father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron work, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale. He and Gail had been close friends before he went to college and Gail has visions of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides.

CHAPTER III

—5—

The next day, to all appearances, was like all the other Friday mornings of the year. Sam and Phil got away first of all, leaving a litter of coffee and cold toast on the kitchen table. Gail rushed down next, with her rich hair unwontedly flat and trim, and a kitchen apron replacing the office dress she too often wore into the kitchen.

Then Ariel, looking tired and seeming nervous, came down in a terrible hurry, as usual. As soon as she had departed for school Gail and Edith agreed that she had cried herself to sleep the night before.

"She's such a baby!" Edith said lovingly. Gail made no answer; her patient, level gaze went to far spaces. She mentally wrote and rewrote a suitably casual, yet cordial note of thanks to the sender of the roses.

She stopped at Muller's on her way downtown and bought a box of fine notepaper. The note itself was written at the library a few minutes later.

At the end of the note she added:

"If you can, come and have supper with us very informally—oh, so very informally!—on Sunday."

She thought of this, all day long. "Come and have supper with us informally—oh, so informally!"

But at three o'clock she had something else of which to think, for the telephone in the library rang suddenly, and the voice on the other end demanded Miss Lawrence.

It was Van, cheerful and friendly. What time was he to come to supper, and why put it off until Sunday? This was Friday.

"What the heck are you doing tomorrow?"

"Tomorrow's my Saturday at the library, until nine o'clock."

Gail could hardly bear the happy beating of her own heart as she hung up the receiver. She thought she would suffocate with sheer felicity.

She went home on winged feet, stopping to pick up Edith, to buy the dotted swiss dress. Gail hesitated long over colors, finally deciding on a deep purple. It would be practical, and that shade was always lovely with the dull gold of the Lawrence hair.

This was one of their happy evenings. They strolled home through the shabby streets, admiring gardens, stopping at shop windows. A block before they reached their own corner the Lawrence girls took the footpath through the Morrison place, their hands linked, their voices murmuring along together with the easiness of lifetime intimacy.

"Should you be glad if he was in love with you, Gail?"

"Oh, heavens, I've only seen him once in five years!"

"No, but I mean—should you?"

Gail considered. "Yes, I think I would."

"I don't know that I want you to marry and go away from Clippersville, Sis."

"It mightn't mean that." Gail paused, on the fresh grass that was thickly set with popples and buttercups, under the Morrisons' oaks. She broke into laughter. "Aren't we idiots! To have it all settled but the wedding day!"

"Yes, but it sometimes comes as suddenly as that, Gail."

"I suppose it does," her sister agreed. "I was thinking," she said after a pause, "that we might have Dick on Sunday—that's one more man, if we dance to the phonograph or have games. That's four men to three girls."

"And Ariel really doesn't count as a girl, because she's just a kid," Edith reminded her, approving this plan.

That night, while Edith sewed and Ariel played idly with pen and paper, Gail played solitaire. It had been her custom to do this ever since her father's death.

As she played she kept up a sort of monologue. Sometimes it was in the form of an argument, a dissertation. Often it was odd bits of poetry, or remembered scenes from Dickens or Poe or Stevenson, recalled word for word; most often of all it was improvised, in the form of a story or of biography.

Just how she had begun this she never could remember; it was a family institution now. Phil never went out when Gail started to play cards. Edith was her loyal prompter when Gail forgot a date in some dramatic tale of English history, or tried to remember the source from which some fantastic theory had sprung.

It was all heartening and happy, and especially wonderful to have the evening end with them all wandering upstairs at once, lights out below, everyone at home, safe and united. Gail saw the roses, still bright and fresh, in her room, and sat on the edge of her bed with one shoe on and the other in her hand, for a long, long time, dreaming. It was not imagination then? Van Murchison had sent her those roses. He was coming to supper night after next.

* * * * * * *

Saturdays and Wednesdays, every other month, Gail stayed at the library until it closed at nine o'clock. On these days Edith always came down at about six with a big sandwich and an apple, and Gail and she repaired to the dressing room where Gail devoured the collation, powdered her nose, exchanged the news of the day with her sister, all in ten minutes' time, and returned to the desk refreshed.

Alternate months she went home at noon on Saturdays and Wednesdays, but was on duty all day Sunday, opening the library at ten o'clock and remaining at the desk until five. Gail hated the Sunday duty, but the Saturday nights were for some mysterious reason eternally exciting. There was always a good deal of noise and traffic downtown, the theaters were packed, the streets gaily lighted, and the quiet, shadowy library seemed like a coign of vantage from which she watched the world.

On the particular Saturday evening that followed his arrival in Clippersville Van Murchison came in. Gail was busily stamping and dating, opening and shutting the covers of books, when a voice in the line asked anxiously:

"Have you a good book about cockroaches?"

She looked up on a wild rush of delight, and there he was, in dinner clothes, with a light overcoat on, but bareheaded. They laughed soundlessly together, and Gail sedately disposed of a dozen claimants before she was free to murmur with him for a minute.

"Oh, hello," she smiled. "D'you want a book?"

"Yes, I seem to need one. How about this one?"

She grinned at "Little Susy's Cousin Prudy."

"I think that would be about your number."

"I'll bet it's racy! I'll bet there's considerable matter that couldn't go through the mails, in this book!"

"Oh, sh-sh-sh-sh!" For they were both bubbling audibly with suppressed laughter.

"Well," said Van, "I'm going up to the Speedwells' for dinner."

"Who are they?"

"Well—Corona Barchi married a Spence, see? And one of the Spence girls married a Speedwell, see?"

"Oh—Burlingame?"

"Burlingame. And gosh, how I hate it!"

"You do?"

"Oh, Lord, yes!"

He regarded her curiously.

"D'you mean to say you'd like it?"

Gail composedly stamped a returned book, smiled at a faded woman with bare gray hair and a wilted voile dress, and returned to the conversation.

"I imagine I would," she said.

"You don't go to dinners?"

"I haven't much chance."

"What'll you take to go to this one? I could do that—I could do what you're doing. Go in my place."

"Nonsense!" She laughed and shook her head. Van went away, leaving her with a feeling of contentment and completeness, a certain thrilled sense of being alive, of being pleased with everything.

Later, reading in bed, she told Edith Van had come in to see her.

"Gail, he didn't!"

"Oh, yes, he did."

"Oh, Gail," exclaimed Edith, "that's significant!"

"Well . . ." She wouldn't quite admit it. But she drifted off to sleep on the rosiest sea of hope and joy that ever a woman knows.

Van came to supper the next night, and everything was happy, unpretentious, and natural. The kitchen was just what a kitchen should be, when he arrived, a social place in which three pretty girls were busy and three rather clumsy men were trying to make themselves useful. Gail's biscuits were browned to a turn, and the famous Lawrence cheese-and-egg dish turned out perfectly.

They sat about the table until eight o'clock, and then Phil and Dick, after duly carrying handfuls of dishes into the kitchen, departed. Ariel began at the kitchen table her composition, and Edith generously forced Gail and Van away.

"No, please—it's nothing. I'll leave them all until morning anyway!" protested Edith. "You were going somewhere—go on!"

"We were just going for a run. We can perfectly well get these out of the way," Gail argued. But she did not insist. Somehow the dishes and the kitchen did look greasy and dull tonight; a little domestic drudgery was all right, but it would not do to disgust Van with too much of it.

She caught up a coat, and she and Van went out in the dusk to his roadster and rolled smoothly away from dingy Clippersville up into the fragrant hills where twilight still lingered, with the sweet smell of dew on dust and of meadows wilted under the long day's sun.

"How about Old Aunt Mary's?"

"What sort of a place is it? I've never been there."

"Oh, highly respectable!"

They went, accordingly, to Old Aunt Mary's, a low wooden shack on the Peninsula highway, with a greasy dance floor in the center, and greasy bare tables all about it. The air was thick with grease, for Aunt Mary's big frying kettles were right in full view; Aunt Mary and her colored assistants were also greasy.

But the music was good, and the floor good, and the whole scene so novel to Gail that she found it delightful. She and Van talked flippantly and with much laughter, as young persons who are just making each other's acquaintance usually do. Van even laughed when a chance question from Gail brought the conversation about to his own condition.

"But ought you be up so late? Oughtn't you be in bed, drinking acidophilus milk or something?" Gail demanded as the clock's hands moved to half-past nine.

Van crushed out his cigarette, smiled down at his own fingers, smiled up, with a glance into her face.

"My dear child, there's no more the matter with my lungs than with yours!"

"There's—what?" Gail demanded blankly.

"I haven't got con," Van reiterated. "I flunked out of college at Easter, that was all! Or no," he remembered, conscientiously, "I did have a heavy chest cold, coughing, all that. That was part of it, you see? I had to stay home a week at Christmas, and what not—"

In his incorrigibly gay manner he finished the sentence with a shrug.

"You're not sick at all!" Gail said, in so disappointed a tone that they both laughed outright.

They sat on, watching the dancers. Against the low open pine crossbeams of the roof cigarette smoke was rising blue and opaque. The music droned on, the saxophone whining above the other instruments; the crowd was thinning now, some of the tables were empty.

When the clock struck ten Gail said she must go home. Van made no protest; he seemed tired, too, willing to say good-night.

They were laughing again, driving home in the starlight. But at the Lawrence gate Gail was conscious that somehow their parting was going to be a little stiff and flat. Some minutes before they arrived she began to dread it. It would be stiff. It would lay a heavy bar upon the frothy gaiety of the evening.

But she could not save herself. She could not be suddenly flirtatious—amorous. She did not know how. Did he expect her to let him kiss her good-night? Did he even want to kiss her? She did not know.

Suddenly she felt like an innocent, awkward little girl. A sense of helplessness smote her. This happy evening must end on a high note, she must be equal to it. She must not say good-night like Edith saying good-night to one of the girls from the store—like a nice old lady saying good-night to a dear old friend.

But somehow she could not carry it. The wild thought of leaning above him for a second, when she moved to leave the car, and of putting a butterfly kiss on his bared head, crossed her flurried mind. But that would be idiotic—that was not the way girls kissed boys nowadays. They sank against the boys, their bodies limp, their painted mouths plastered against the boys' mouths. Such a girl at this moment would have her head on Van's shoulder.

While she confusedly considered it, they had reached the gate and she was out of the car, Van making no movement to get down. Gail went about to his side of the automobile, and stood looking up at him for a moment.

"Van, I've had a perfectly delicious time."

He moved the gas control idly to and fro on the wheel.

"Sure, it was fun."

His own voice seemed flat. Gail tried desperately for the hilarity of the earlier evening.

"As for your consumption, I shan't get over that for a long time!"

"My what?" he asked dully.

"Your fake consumption."

It was no use. Perhaps they were both too tired for talk, Gail thought.

A pause, brief, but much too long. Then Gail said, "Well, good-night! See you soon?"

"Oh, sure!" he said, and "Good-night!" and he was gone into the dark.

The girl made faces at herself as she went up the steps; she was conscious of a shamed sort of feeling of anti-climax. It was as if she had sold her birthright, somehow.

Actually, she had not compromised; there had not been a word or a glance all evening that might not have been exchanged by the most decorous of friends. But that was part of the trouble!

Or else she was tired; maybe that was it. The front door was open, a head of gas wavering in the hot, odorous hallway. Edith came out from her doorway like an angel, cool and fragrant from a bath. She welcomed Gail as if from the wars.

"Darling, did you have a good time?"

"It was heavenly. We drove around for awhile, and then we went down to Old Aunt Mary's."

"Gail Lawrence! Was it wild? On Sunday night!"

"No, it was as calm as a mill pond. There were two policemen there, and a lot of nice college boys. Some of the girls looked rather—well, ordinary; but it was very quiet. Nothing rough."

TO BE CONTINUED.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

SHOT HEARD 'ROUND THE WORLD

IT WASN'T fired in a battle. It was fired near Fort Mackinac, Mich., in 1822. One of the fur traders told a funny story and in the raucous laughter that followed a shotgun was accidentally discharged. It hit Alexis St. Martin, French-Canadian voyageur, in the chest and part of the charge pierced the walls of his stomach.

Friends of the stricken man called Dr. William Beaumont, a young army surgeon at the fort. The village priest was summoned to administer the last rites. Doctor Beaumont arrived in time to stay the fatal bleeding and stayed with St. Martin for ten years!

Here under the surgeon's eyes was the one sight he had been longing to see. A man's stomach lay exposed with the top blown off. In 1822, no medico knew the mysteries of the digestive apparatus. Some physiologists claimed that the stomach contained "a myriad of small worms which attacked the food and reduced it to a uniform pulpy mass." Others said "The stomach is a mill or a fermenting vat, or a stew pan."

Beaumont knew his chance. He wrote in his diary "No human being ever was given my opportunity to solve the mystery." He put thermometers into St. Martin's stomach, measuring its temperature under all types of body and weather conditions. With food tied to silk threads he watched digestion taking place. He drew off tubes of gastric juice which up to this time had never been analyzed.

The surgeon made a lint and adhesive tape top for his patient's stomach and after a year, a natural valve was formed in the opening, through which he studied digestive processes.

For ten years the frontier army doctor gave the world the benefits of his trained observations. That accidental shot is still saving many lives.

LOVE OF A MAID FOR A MAN

"THE love of a maid for a man"—no doubt, Pontiac, mighty chief of the Ottawas, would have considered it a mere trifle, if indeed, he had thought about it at all. And if he had known of the love of a dusky Indian maid for a white man, he would have scorned it. He little realized how this affection would help defeat his great plan to "drive the hated palefaces into the ocean."

The man was Major Gladwyn, commander of the British post at Detroit in 1763. The maid was a girl of the Ojibways, allies of Pontiac in his scheme to surprise all the English forts in the West on a certain day, massacre their garrisons and then carry the tomahawk and scalping knife against the eastern settlements.

The girl, named Catherine by the officers, had visited the post often. Gladwyn had been kind to her and she fell in love with him. So, one day, when she seemed very sad, he tried to learn the reason. At first she refused to tell. Then, her love for him overcoming her fear of the wrath of the great war chief, she told her news.

On the next day, Pontiac would bring his chiefs to the fort for a council with Gladwyn. They would carry guns hidden under their blankets. At Pontiac's signal they would throw off the blankets, shoot down the commander and his officers and then kill every Englishman.

The morning came and Pontiac and his savages filed into the fort. When he saw the bristling guns all around him, he knew that his plot had been betrayed. He dared not give the signal.

Other forts, taken by surprise, were destroyed by the Indians. But Detroit held out through long months of siege. At last Pontiac was forced to sue for peace. His conspiracy had failed because of the love of a maid for a man.

TONGUE-TIED TOM

THOMAS A. EDISON, in his old age, was deaf. Once in his youth he was tongue-tied for a moment, with embarrassment, and with lucky results.

Young Edison had invented a stock-ticker. A company was ready to buy it. Green and inexperienced in the ways of business, he stammered and stuttered when asked his price.

"Come, come! Mr. Edison!" exclaimed the president of the company. "We're ready to pay you handsomely for your invention." Edison wanted desperately to answer. But at the thought of the staggering sum he was going to ask he simply couldn't speak.

"Well, how about $100,000?" impatiently asked the president.

"Yes!" gasped young Tom Edison, inwardly thanking his lucky stars that he hadn't spoken. For he had intended to ask only $20,000!

In accepting the offer he specified that it should be paid him in seventeen annual installments. This gave him a regular income long enough to keep him going on some of his experiments until they were successful. If he had opened his mouth a few seconds sooner in that interview he would have lost $80,000! And he might have struggled along with inadequate funds for many years instead of perfecting his inventions while enjoying an ample income.

Poultry

FOWL POX WEAKENS NEW LAYING CROPS

Disease May Strike at Any Time of Year.

Supplied by the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service

No matter how high poultry prices may go next fall and winter, the new crop of layers which farmers are now building up will never be profitable if fowl pox gains a foothold.

Outbreaks of fowl pox, if promptly diagnosed, may be suppressed by proper cleaning and disinfection of the premises and by destruction of all infected birds. If a large number of fowls are infected, destruction is not so practical a measure as sanitation coupled with vaccination.

While the disease may be more frequent during the coming fall and winter months, it may occur at any time of the year. Chickens and turkeys of all ages are susceptible to fowl pox, but the effects are more serious in young cockerels and pullets than in mature fowls. The death rate in young stock may be high in some outbreaks. Fowls that do recover often are stunted. In pullets that are laying and in older laying stock, the malady lowers production and in some cases stops it entirely.

All birds in the flock should be vaccinated if symptoms of the disease are detected or if there is danger of fowl pox being introduced into the flock. Either fowl pox or pigeon pox vaccine may be used, but pigeon pox vaccine is less effective. Its use is best limited to cases where a severe reaction may cut egg production or injure weak birds. Immunity to the disease lasts from six months to the life of the bird.

The best time for vaccinating flocks on infected premises is in late summer, at least two months before the birds begin to lay. Pullets that are to be vaccinated should be given sufficient time to recover completely from the effects of the handling and treatment before entering production.

Eggs for the Incubator Need Careful Attention

Eggs to be used in an incubator should be selected from healthy, vigorous hens that are good producers, says Prof. A. L. Romanoff of the department of poultry husbandry at Cornell university.

"Use eggs uniform in size, shape, and color and of good shell texture, because all of these qualities are transmitted to the new generation of chicks. Do not wash the eggs to be used in the incubator, as washing destroys the cuticle, an outside layer of the shell that keeps out harmful bacteria."

Professor Romanoff advises that eggs be kept only for a reasonable time before they are placed in the incubator. They should be protected from dust, dry or humid air, and extremely high or low temperatures. The wrong temperature may kill the developing chick even before incubation.

Cheap Chicks Prove Loss

Chicks sold for less than the cost of producing them should be looked upon with suspicion, asserts a writer in Capper's Weekly. Certainly one loses much more than the cost of the chicks when he feeds a bunch of weak ones that finally turn up their toes. He loses time, feed, and the opportunity to get early chicks started. That period of growing is something one cannot estimate as to worth.

An egg a day does its bit toward keeping the doctor away.

Both disease and worms can better be controlled when hens are confined.

The demand for frozen poultry in England continues at satisfactory prices.

The raising of a flock of geese is so simple that every farmer should avail himself of the opportunity. The expense is very small. The birds require very little care, either summer or winter.

* * *

There are three chickens on farms for each person in the United States.

* * *

Infertile eggs, produced from flocks without males, are most satisfactory for preserving purposes.

* * *

Keeping only standard bred flocks for breeding is an important factor in determining egg size, shape and color.

Chickenpox is very contagious and may be carried in the flock by birds that have not fully recovered, for a long time.

* * *

A breeding pen of 12 to 18 hens mated to a male bird of high production blood affords a good way to improve the poultry flock.

Litterings from the hay-mow make excellent bedding for chicks, being dry and absorbent and supplying bits of leaves and an occasional bug.

* * *

Net cost of raising a pullet last year averaged 49 cents, exclusive of labor, for 142 poultrymen who kept records in conjunction with the poultry department of the Ohio State university.

Snoring Described as Disease of Civilization

Snoring, observes the Manchester Guardian, has been called a disease of civilization, on the ground that savages do not snore because the man who gave audible announcement in that way of the presence of himself and other tribesmen in the neighborhood of an enemy would get short shrift. With civilization (runs the argument) came security, and with security those nasal noises of the night—and not of the night only, for Lord Ullswater, when he was speaker, ruled that snoring was out of order in the house of commons.

There are those who draw fine distinctions between different ways of snoring. When Beau Brummell was once traveling from Calais to Paris, he found himself in the company of a king's messenger, who later said that the Beau slept the whole way, and even snored. But the messenger added what he thought was an extenuating circumstance, that "Mr. Brummell snored very much like a gentleman."

What Farmers Have Gained

The fact that fewer than 15 out of every 1,000 American farms changed hands last year through forced sales or bankruptcies, as against 39 in every 1,000 in 1932, bears witness to the progress of agricultural recovery. The country's total farm mortgage debt is now less than $7,830,000,000, whereas in the Spring of 1933 it was $8,500,000,000. This lightening of the burden by nearly $700,000,000 is only part of the relief, for interest charges on the remainder have been materially reduced. At the same time there has been an increase of upwards of $2,000,000,000 in farm income, while the estimated value of farm lands is nearly $2,300,000,000 greater than it was two years ago.

Back of these figures stands a gain in rural purchasing power from which every field of commerce and industry benefits. Best of all, the lives of millions of men, women and children, dwellers on the soil, are more comfortable, more hopeful, more secure, in consequence of what has been done under the Roosevelt administration to give agriculture its belated bill of rights.—The Atlanta Journal, Atlanta Georgia.

The CAT'S Out of the BAG!

$161 in Ontario — $28 In Alabama

Which Would You Rather Pay?

The people of Alabama could pay off ALL of the state's debts by paying only $28 each. For the people of the Province of Ontario to pay off all its debts each would have to pay $161.

Which Would You Rather Pay?

Ontario, you know, is where certain political theorists who were either careless with their facts or who had some political axe to grind (perhaps some of them got soft government jobs) promised the people of Ontario that if their government would only go into the electric power business, everything would be lovely. They promised that the power plants would not only pay for themselves but that they would make enough money with which to pay off other public debts.

What Actually Has Happened?

The public debt of Ontario, where the so-called "successful" government owned and politically operated electric power venture is located, has increased to $161 per person, almost SIX TIMES MORE THAN IN ALABAMA where power development is by private organizations such as this company. In Alabama, the state debt is only $28 per person. This company helps pay the taxes caused by this debt.

IN ONTARIO, the home owners and other property owners have to pay the increased taxes caused by the losses of the unsuccessful political power business which the government is engaged in, because that business pays no taxes.

The People of Ontario Got a GOLD BRICK

Is that what people of similar ideas are trying to foist upon the people of the United States? They tell a pretty story which, IF TRUE, would be interesting. But they never tell the WHOLE TRUTH.

Be wary of those who promise to put money into your pocket. They may want to get their hands in so they can take money OUT while they have you believing they're putting it in.

PENPOINT PARAGRAPHS ABOUT PEOPLE WHOM YOU KNOW.

Dr. J. M. Kimmey

Wonder how many citizens could leave Columbiana, stay away for a year or more, return, and receive the sincere welcome accorded Dr. J. M. Kimmey by his many friends last week? There is a reason for this, and while watching the immaculately clad Doctor pass through Main Street, shaking hands on all sides with friends—both old and young—it occured to us that few men or women have ever merited the love of the BOYS, and the respect of the entire community that Dr. Kimmey maintained during his term as County Health Officer of Shelby County, and resident of Columbiana. He was Scout Master of an enthusiastic troop of boys. He was always at his place when the Church Bell rang. He was an ardent Exchange Club member; a civic booster; a "cracking good" bridge player—and was equally at home when the orchestra struck up a lively fox trot or a dreamy waltz—And if a bit of Spanish melody was required, he and his Mandolina furnished the musical atmosphere necessary to put the "stringed" instruments over. He was, in short, an all-round good fellow. Columbiana friends have missed him everywere, but feel a distinct pride in the success which has crowned the further pursuit of his professional career.

"Peep" Harper

Several years ago, little "Peep Harper, talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harper, then of Columbiana, now residing in Birmingham, was featured in almost all school entertainments presented, singing and dancing her way into the hearts of the audience. One day last week, we met this graciously charming little lady, who had grown so much, we almost had to ask for a formal introduction—but she remembered "us" all right, and it was not long before memory did a back flip, and WE recognized HER. "Peep" has has grown lovelier, and our personal prediction is, that her blonde beauty and sweet personality will be two vital factors toward whatever goal she attempts to reach. She is visiting her grandmother, Mrs. Nora Lester, who is, by the way, considered the most striking looking matron in Columbiana.

Sam A. Benton.

It was with a great deal of pleasure that the writer heard of the promotion which has recently come to a former fellow traveller along the Melody-Trail, whom all of you have "heard" many times when dials have been turned to WAPI or WSGN. I refer to Sam A. Benton, announcer and Tenor Soloist. Mr. Benton is now in charge of the Commercial Department of WAPI, and will serve as contact man for firms sponsoring various commercial programs. He is well known in Birmingham and extremely popular, and will likely be as successful in the capacity of Commercial Director, as he has been in the entertainment and executive positions he has efficiently occupied in the Radio world. At least, friends in his "old home town" predict for him a brilliant career in this newer and wider field for the development of his progressive ideas along Radio Row.

Sidney Norris

Friendly, likable, accomodating, and thoughtful Sidney Norris, son of Mr. and Mrs. Curry Norris of Columbiana, has returned from Tuscaloosa where he was operated on for appendicitis, and many friends were having the happy privilege of welcoming him home again last week. With Mr. Norris was his Aunt, Miss Hester Norris of Tuscaloosa, whose gracious and charming manner has made her one of the Summer's most popular visitors. Miss Norris is the sister of Curry Norris, chief architect for many of the PWA projects now in progress in Shelby County.

Jack Cooper

Jack Cooper, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Cooper, is now in Charleston, W. Va., and states he finds the Democrat the best way to keep informed about his friends and "home folks"—so presto, here goes the Democrat to greet our good friend, Jack Cooper, and with it go heartiest wishes for his future success in the mountains of this famous old state. Remember what the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Caroilna? Well, do not let this famous verbal message apply to your visits home, Young Fellow!

Mayor Harry Gordon and Councilmen

We next congratulate the "City Fathers" upon their recent traffic regulations and the clean appearance of the streets. Many accidents that would have eventually occurred, can now be averted on account of the new parrallel parking law. Hats off and a merry Hurrah for this wide-a-wake group of men who are always on the alert for civic improvement. One other little item, gentlemen—How about a Traffic Light at the intersection of Main Street near Davis' corner? We think that would be the next best "buy"! A Light or a Life is likely to be the answer!

Dixie B. Shealy, Tax Collector
L. C. Abbott, Assistant

The Tax Collector's office has recently undergone a rigid examination by the State Examination Department, Messrs Jackson and Jones, of Montgomery, in charge of the itemized statement. Before these distinguished gentlemen left Columbiana, where they made many friends, they told the writer that this set of books were rated "A number 1". In other words, they found them in perfect order and perfectly balanced. In baseball parlance, "No hits, no runs and no errors". They further stated that few officials in the State could boast of the above excellent record. Shelby County citizens may well send their congratulations to Dixie B. Shealy, Tax Collector, and L. C. Abbott, Assistant, efficient and competent custodians whom you placed in charge of this responsible official position.

Lida Wood

Mrs. Lida Wood, who has succeeded in creating more interest in the Better Housing Program than any worker whom we know, has been transferred to the Canning Program Project sponsored by the Relief Administration of Shelby County. For further information concerning the plans now in progress for the various remodeling and rebuilding of homes in Columbiana, please consult Earl Wood, who has been appointed to succeed Mrs. Wood.

Esther Christian, Tax Assessor
Cecil Duke, Assistant

When intricate "facts and figures" tally to the nth degree, and books are scrutinized carefully for faults, or deficiencies, by the best Examiners in the State, and they come through with a favorable verdict of "Well Done"—there must be a reason and a good one. It is now time to congratulate another little lady who has successfully made an enviable record in her official position in Shelby County and merited the above recognition by her conscientious devotion to the position of Tax Assessor of Shelby County. to which she was appointed several years ago. We join a host of friends throughout the County and send congratulations to Mrs. Esther Christian, and her able assistant, Cecil Duke. They have added further dignity to their respective positions, and merit the praise recently received upon their excellent workmanship.

Misses Vaudon and Lula Atkinson

Miss Vaudon Atkinson, of Columbiana, is making good in the Nurse's Training Course in Bryce Hospital, Tuscaloosa. Miss Lula Atkinson, popular teacher in Shelby County, made a trip to the Democrat office last week, and while renewing her allegiance to the Democrat, ordered the paper sent to her sister in Tuscaloosa. We deeply appreciated this recognition of our journalistic attempts, and happily add their names for another year on our subscription list.

A. C. Carter and family

Appendicitis is getting to be an epidemic in the family of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Carter. Several months ago, Wailes Carter was rushed to Birmingham for an emergency operation for appendicitis. Last week, Mrs. Wailes Carter, plus Loren Carter, were operated on for the same complaint. "Dad" Carter states that Dr. Drennen sent him word if he "took it", he would operate for "zero"—but, up to this writing, we have not noticed this popular gentleman rushing around to take advantage of the "slashing bargain" so magnanimously offered by this successful wielder of the surgeon's blade.

Yamakita

Old Mother Nature has been rather lavish with her scenic effects at Yamakita. And those seeking wholesome recreation will find a beautiful playground built for Shelby County citizens to enjoy. Robinson and McMillan, who are operating this delightful resort, report large crowds of swimmers have taken advantage of the lovely swimming pool—and many picnics are scheduled through July and August. You will not find a cooler spot to spend these hectic summer nights than — Yamakita. Drive down after supper and meet your friends. A twilight chat under the friendly branches of those old trees will often end the day—"just right."

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Nichols and their two sons, Fred and Henry, have returned from Daytona Beach, Fla.

Miss Saranel Carter entertained a group of her friends with a dinner party at Curlee's Friday night. Included in this attractive coterie of sub-debs were: Misses Jean Letson, Elizabeth Taylor, Jeannette Niven, Dorothy Miller and Saranel Carter.

The Exchange Club held its regular meeting on Thursday night, dining at Curlee's Cafe.

Norman Lefkovits spent last weekend in Birmingham.

L. B. (Judge) Riddle, Jr. and George Richardson were visitors in Deatsville and Montgomery last Sunday afternoon.

Rev. H. M. Hurst

There is a certain preacher in this man's town who has a seemingly inexhaustible supply of TOLERANCE. Rarely, if ever, have we heard a critical remark fall from his lips. He is a Methodist by belief, but the entire town of Columbiana claims him as a FRIEND. Sure, you guessed it first time—the Rev. H. M. Hurst! If you can find a man more sincerely respected and loved, one more genuinely alive and interested in everything and everybody—well, you can beat us—and we believe we have a pretty good idea of the "general run of men" in Columbiana. Remember this, "He climbs highest who helps another up". In our humble judgmen, the Rev. Hurst is destined for "the top".

G. R. McNeil

Saturday afternoon, while dashing at a rapid rate of pedal speed down Main Street, we noted a large circle of friends gathered around a most familiar figure. You said it, G. R. (Mack) McNeil, former popular Athletic Director of Shelby County High School, now successfully engaged in selling Chevrolet cars for Edwards Motor Company. We shall waste no time in introducing to you this genial, jolly good fellow. He is too well known and loved by Columbiana residents to need any preamble. We did manage to get within the "charmed circle" long enough to add our hearty welcome back to Main Street, to wish "Mack" continued good fortune, and also to selfishly wish him back again —"for keeps."

Sarah Dycus, Columbiana
Tom Elliott, Camden

The announcement of the approaching marriage of Sarah June Dycus, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Dycus of Columbiana, to Tom Elliott, of Camden, will be received with cordial interest to a large circle of friends throughout Shelby County and Alabama. The wedding will be solemnized in July and marks the culmination of a romance begun several months ago, when both popular young people were engaged in the Relief Director's office in Columbiana. Mr. Elliott has been transferred to Camden, where he continues to hold an important position. Friends will regret to learn that their future home will be in Camden, and not in Columbiana, where both Miss Dycus and Mr. Elliott are so favorably known and liked.

Saranel Carter

If nominations are in order for the most attractive Stenographer, Typist, Secretary, or what have you, in Columbiana—Saranel Carter will likely win it without ever turning her closely cropped brunette locks, or looking Kewpie-Wise with those big brown optics. Energetic, efficient, and ambitious, this little lady of the typewriter keys will make a mark for herself—Never doubt it! She is now engaged in writing up records in Register Sparks' office, and when Personal Mention took a peep at the neat looking sheets being taken from the machine, Monday, we wondered if TYPING too, could be inherited, for she is the daughter of Mrs. Grace Carter, recognized as one of the best manipulator of type keys and exponent of shorthand in Alabama. Congratulations Miss Carter! Here's hoping some day you will be typing a check for a million dollars. Sure, you can do it—All you need is "cents" to justify it.

We have received some complaints about the non-reception of the Democrat last week. We would mildly suggest that you check the yellow label on your paper and see if your subscription has not expired. We will not be able to continue sending you the paper without some arrangement on your part to "pay up the American Eagle". Postal laws and regulations forbid it! We sincerely hope you will attend to this little matter and that in the final round-up, there will be no "vacant chairs" in our large circle of weekly readers. July 1st marks the dead line. Come by and let's talk it over. We want to se you, anyway.

Rhythm 'Ristocrats! What shall I say about this peppy, wide-awake, happy-go-lucky bunch of youngsters who have more "get up and get" in a minute than most people have in a life time? They have deliberately formed themselves into a royal band of music loving and pleasure giving "'Ristocrats", who have made Columbiana a more delightful place in which to live. They do not yet know what the word, "discouragement", means. They have not, up to this writing, met Old Man Disillusionment in the road. The world is a toy, and their playground. They know nothing of Injustice. They are never "too tired" to play. They are bubbling over with the sheer joy of living, and giving pleasure to the other fellow. Something of Universal Lustre hovers near them. They are radiantly alive, and glid blissfully along over every little "bump" on life's highway, and laugh about it! They rejoice in the present! Here's hoping that in the heart of each "grown-up", there may yet be located the "wisest and best" impulses found in the heart of youth, which will, in some way, respond to its earliest enchantments and lend encouragement to these young Americanos who drift by daily to visit with us, and make the old office a brighter place in which to work. It might surprise you, some of you, to really find out WHAT these young folks think and WHY? Better be a model then a critic for them. They do not mind getting you told.

Personally, I covet the kind old Dream Man's place, and if possible, I should like to veil from their laughing eyes, all that would "hurt" should they grow "too wise", and live to learn that LIFE can be cruel—and sometimes, Dream Castles about people and things will come tumbling! Here's hoping the years hold naught but happiness for this radiantly glorious bunch of youngsters who lie close very close, to my heart. Tread lightly you, who do not ever understand. Their early impressions of you will be indelibly imprinted upon their minds—and even YEARS will not bring FORGETFULNESS.

Mary Teague

Mary Teague, efficient Director of Special Services with the Relief Department of Shelby County, has resigned her position with the Columbiana office, and left for Kingsport, Tennessee, to join her husband, William W. Teague, who holds a responsible position as Chemist for one of the largest Corporations in that section of the country.

Dr. E. B. Cooper spent last weekend in Birmingham.

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Brabham, of Montgomery, landed at Columbiana Airport, Wednesday evening, and with Norman Lefkovits proceeded to Birmingham on business, where Miss Hazel Rosenberger joined them for the return trip to Columbiana and will spend a few days with Norman Lefkovits.

The Home Improvement Club, of Columbiana, enjoyed a most delightful outing Wednesday afternoon, June 19th. The Club motored out to Jackson's Spring where they were joined by the Home Improvement Club of Bethel. The younger picnickers enjoyed wading and hiking, while the older members chatted about various things concerning club activities. An appetizing picnic lunch was spread and everyone did their part to see that none of the food was left. The club looks foward to many other afternoons as enjoyable as this one.

Wealth Is Wages
Most Constant Market
Wages and Prosperity
Long Wants Chunks

The American Cotton Manufacturers' association, at Charlotte, N. C., promises not to reduce wages or increase hours, an excellent pledge, as important to the employing, prosperous class as to workers. This was well put by W. J. Cameron, speaking for Henry Ford, announcing restoration of the six dollars a day minimum wage, which will cost Henry Ford $2,000,000 a month! Said Mr. Cameron:

Arthur Brisbane

"The finest possible method of distributing the nation's goods is through wages. They represent work done and useful wealth created; they never drain or tax the country—they add substance and strength. . . .

"It is impossible to exaggerate the dependence of the country upon wages earned and paid, or the happy effect of a return of wages after a period of decline. . . . The expenditures of the rich cannot support any basic business in this country; for in the first place we have very few people who can be called rich; and in the second place, neither their needs nor their buying power is sufficient to support even a medium-sized industry of any sort.

"The largest, most varied and most constant market in the world is the wage-earning American people. They handle the bulk of the money; it is their needs and standards that keep the wheels turning. If they can't buy it doesn't matter who else can or does and their buying power is wages."

Business men who think wealth can be taken out of the wages of working men, should read those words in italics, carefully, and they should be read by any workers that have listened to demagogues telling them, "Take it away from the rich. That is the way to be happy." There are not enough "rich" to go around, but with full production, full consumption, good wages and reasonable leisure, affording time to spend and enjoy the good wages, American prosperity for all that has grown steadily in the past would continue to grow.

Have wages and prosperity increased? They have.

First, a President of the United States once complained, publicly and without rebuke, that you could not hire a good worker in this country for less than $100 a year, about 30 cents a day.

Second, McMasters, the historian, tells you that in the early days only one American mechanic, a New England carpenter, could earn as much as one dollar a day.

Third, in 1914, when the automobile industry was young, Henry Ford's minimum wage was $2.34 a day. It was in January, 1914, that the new minimum was changed to $5 a day.

The senate rejects Senator Long's proposition to spend five thousand million dollars a year benevolently, and raise the money by taking "chunks" out of large fortunes.

This process, the senator's "share-the-wealth" idea, might last a little while, but after the large fortunes were all gone the "share-the-wealth" gentlemen might begin taking "chunks" out of each other.

J. Pierpont Morgan of New York, who sold valuable pictures here, and sold them well, proving business ability, in London is selling costly miniatures.

Some ask why Mr. Morgan, who is prosperous, sells works of art that cannot be replaced. The reply might properly be "That is my business." Perhaps he sees ahead conditions in which "real money" will be better than miniatures.

Telegram, dated Washington, from Congressman P. L. Gassaway. Try to be as cheerful as he is:

"Just returned from trip through Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas. Crops are good out there. Prosperity is certain. Couldn't get breakfast in railroad restaurant on account of crowd."

Lloyd George says: "Signor Mussolini is bent upon the conquest of Abyssinia. Lust is in his eye and it makes his speech wild and incoherent. He resents all interference from outside with furious anger."

Mussolini's speech may have been "wild and incoherent," but there was common sense in it when he reminded the British that they didn't invite or listen to criticism while they were building up their empire.

Jackie Kaul, a New York boy, five years old, thought kidnaped, is found in the East river, drowned, by accident, undoubtedly.

After dreadful anxiety, to know the truth brings relief to the parents. The sad death of this child shows how faith and a belief in the hereafter console human beings. Faith that their child is happy in another world, and has been happy and safe ever since they first missed him, makes their grief bearable.

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

In appreciation for what the Tennessee Valley Authority has done and is doing to develop the valley bearing its name as a yardstick for cheap power, residents of the middle and lower section of the region have joined to celebrate a huge July Fourth appreciation jubilee at Muscle Shoals.

A biography of Dr. LaFayette Guild, native of Tuscaloosa and surgeon-general of Robert E. Lee's Army of Virginia, has been prepared in pamphlet form by Dr. Emmett B. Carmichael, professor of psysiological chemistry at the University of Alabama.

John Fowler, radio instructor at Paul Hayne School, Birmingham, was named president of the Alabama Radio Service Men's Association and Birmingham was selected as the 1936 convention city at the concluding business session in Montgomery.

Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service at Auburn, announced that the Agricultural Adjustment Administration had paid Alabama farmers $20,214,543 in rental and benefit payments between May 12, 1933, and April 30, 1935.

Reductions in the prices of textbooks, adopted for Alabama schools for the next six years, will result in a total saving estimated at $367,000, if a complete set of books is brought for every elementary and high school pupil during that period.

A Circuit Court jury at Russellville returned a verdict of guilty in the case of Mrs. Zula Cochran, charged with the first degree murder of Walter Sanderson, Vina police chief. The jury recommended life imprisonment.

Farmers and other landowners seeking tree seedlings for reforestation next Fall, may place their orders during the Summer with the state forester's office at Montgomery to avoid the rush of orders near planting time.

Joan Bernheim, graduate of Ramsay High School, Birmingham, won the $100 scholarship offered by the Wesleyan Alumnae Club of Birmingham to be applied on tuition at Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., next session.

The Florence Hotel fire of June 6 was echoed in Jefferson Circuit Court when Mrs. Jack Pardin, a guest, filed suit against the owners for $25,000 damages for injuries received in leaping from the flaming structure.

Acting for the State Tax Commission, Traffic Judge Thomas E. Skinner filed suit in the Jefferson County Circuit Court to collect $370,000 in alleged escaped gasoline taxes from five major oil companies.

The Alabama Supreme Court affirmed the action of the board of commissioners of the State Bar Association in disbarring C. J. Griffith, Birmingham attorney, for alleged professional misconduct.

The Tennessee Valley Authority and the Alabama Agricultural Extension Service, working in co-operation, have launched an intensive "live-at-home" program among farmers in four North Alabama counties.

Fixtures in stores and other business establishments are considered real and not personal property because removal would materially damage the realty, Atty.-Gen. Albert A. Carmichael ruled.

Miss Thelma McGinty, teacher in Phillips High School at Birmingham, has been appointed as assistant supervisor of rehabilitation with the state department to promote crippled children service.

Mayor J. M. Lile of Leighton announced that that community would conduct a drive for the establishment of a Civilian Conservation Corps camp at the site of the old LaGrange College near there.

Camp Westmoreland on Shoals Creek will become a mecca for the Boy Scouts of the Eighth Congressional District July 8 when weekly camps will be inaugurated for a period of 60 days.

Clyde A. Fletcher, 47-year-old employe of the Evansville Packing Co., died in St. Vincent's Hospital, bringing the number of victims of the Florence Hotel fire in Birmingham, June 6, to four.

The Tennessee Valley Authority has brought prosperity to Athens. Approximately 1,000 residents are being employed on land clearance work and on the Wheeler Dam construction.

Willie Jack Miles, 6, was shot and instantly killed near Tuscaloosa by his 9-year-old brother, LeRoy, who told officers the "gun went off" accidentally.

Louis G. Collier, license inspector for Madison County during the last six years, has resigned effective June 30 to become postmaster at Huntsville.

William F. Thetford, 62, president of the Alabama Central Railway, died in Montgomery after a lengthy illness.

Alabama mayors and city commissioners have launched a drive for important changes in the general revenue bill passed by the House of Representatives.

Dr. George Lang, of the University of Alabama, was elected president of the Writers' Conclave at the closing day's session of the annual meeting in Montevallo.

Members of the Alabama Lumber and Building Material Association, in session at Mobile, unanimously adopted a supplementary NRA agreement.

Appeals to Those of Mature Figure

PATTERN 9342

Capes? Everybody loves them—they've descended upon fashion like April showers. All sorts of capes. In this charming dress the cape influence is minimized, but it is used to advantage. Joining in front like a raglan sleeve, and cut in one with the yoke in back, these cape sleeves give grace and proper proportioning to the mature figure. A small bow, adroitly placed, adds a winsome touch at the bodice. You'll find the cut of the skirt excellent, too. It's a grand dress to make up in a flower print or a solid sheer, or in voile or lawn for the heat waves to come. The capes may contrast.

Pattern 9342 may be ordered only in sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 36 requires 3⅞ yards 39 inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, diagrammed sew chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

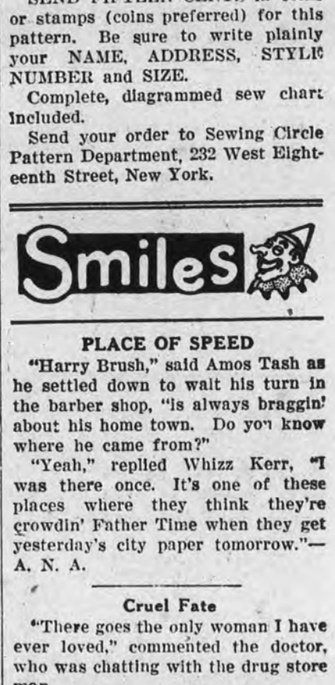
Cruel Fate

"There goes the only woman I have ever loved," commented the doctor, who was chatting with the drug store man.

"Why don't you marry her?" the drug man inquired.

"I can't afford it," whispered the doctor. "She's my best patient."



How's It Holding Out?

"Well, old man, what are you doing these days?"

"I'm selling furniture."

"Are you selling much?"

"Only my own, so far."

Lace Goes Everywhere This Season

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

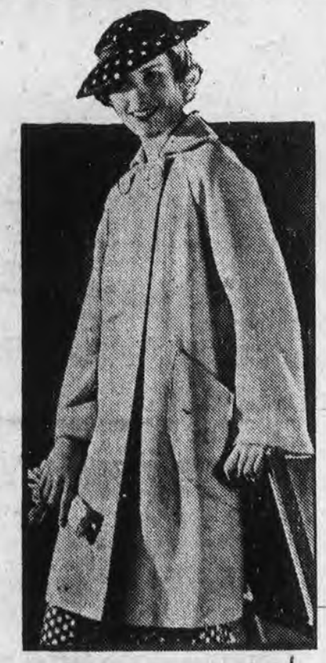
IN THE progress of fashion there is ever one dominating note which gives impetus to the season's style trends. This spring and summer it's lace. What with the featuring of fashions this season which include everything from bathing suits, beach outfits, sports clothes and daytime tailleurs to fine millinery and gracious evening array made all of lace, and after that amazingly beautiful lace ball which was recently given in New York where everyone wore lace, the guests as well as those who took part in the gorgeous pageantry which was staged so picturesquely, we are coming to know more about lace than we have ever known before.

When all has been said and done, the present season will go down in history as an era in which lace really came into its own—as a period which marks the development of a new appreciation for lace, a new feeling, a new lace sense as it were. Up to now, in the minds of most of us lace had its limitations, was rather a luxury to be reserved for occasions of more or less dress-up tendency. Henceforth, with modern laces being that versatile they range from sturdiest sportsy cotton and hardy linen types to be used in a fabric way, to laces so delicate and of so fragile a beauty the traditional cobweb will have to look to its laurels, theories in regard to the restricted possibilities of lace have had to give way to lasting conviction that the practicability and the adaptability of lace to every phase of fashion, measures up 100 per cent to that of any other member in the fabric realm.

So it is we find lace going everywhere this season, no matter how formal or how informal the event. Than lace, either cotton or linen, you can choose nothing smarter for your tailored suit or your simple daytime frock.

A most fetching idea is to wear a blouse of monotone chiffon (chiffon is the rage for blouses) with your tailored-of-lace jacket suit. See centered in the picture this partnership of chiffon blouse and lace two-piece suit. Here we have an afternoon ensemble in brown lace in neat allover patterning. Pearl buttons and a peasant gathered neckline are contributing style features to the blouse of chiffon. You will find a costume such as this a perfect joy in the summer wardrobe, being cool and lovely and fairly bubbling over with swank. The hat is fashioned of the same lace as the suit, with a brown straw facing to accent its charm.

The stunning costume to the right in the group demonstrates how beautifully and appropriately lace can be used for spectator sports wear. It is of natural color cotton lace with a bright green silk tie. Which reminds, if you would trek along fashion's high-style path, wear vivid green accessories with your grege or your beige or your pure white costumes this summer. Notice the very good-looking hat which tops this spectator-sports outfit. It is made entirely of starched lace in the same pattern as that used for the suit with which it is worn.



A bit dressier, yet not too dressy for going about places during the daytime hours is that most attractive frock which the young woman seated is wearing. The lace is smart white linen with accents of blue in the sleeve and collar binding and the bows down the front also the tie-belt. A large blue straw hat completes the ensemble.

By the way, have you a lace cape in your summer collection of prettiest clothes? You really must not overlook this intriguing item of fashion. Border it with a double fold of net in matching color and finish the neck with a huge pleated ruch of the net. It is practical in black and in pastel colors—well, just try it out for yourself.

SUMMER COAT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A swagger coat worn over the summer frock is the last word in chic. Seems as if these swagger woolen coats were never so swagger as they are in the beautiful, soft textured fabrics of this year. These pastel coats in finger tip or three-quarter length are particularly in high fashion favor made of such fabrics as novelty rabbit woolens which are as smooth to the touch as a kitten's ear. These include shadow-checked weaves of featherweight but firm textured, also surfaced constructions that delineate striped, diagonal or chevron designs. The fabric used for the coat pictured is a fine herringbone patterned rabbit woolen of super-light weight. It is in a lovely pastel yellow.

HOSE ARE ADAPTED TO CUT-OUT SANDALS

Sandal shoppers who have been buying all the newest models in these most revealing trifles masquerading as summer footwear have possibly been more than a little troubled by the problem of proper stockings to wear with these high fashion slippers. But the hosiery designers have kept in step, and the last arrivals ready for sandal collectors are the semi-sandal hose.

As you may surmise, the extra thickness is distributed over the area where it will do the most good, but so cleverly restrained that even the most cut-out of sandals show only the sheerest part of the hose. Heel re-enforcements, as well as the toe sections and the long, very narrow panel under the foot, make them ideal numbers. Very sheer and not so sheer stockings in all the newest of summer tints, tones, and shades, with a flock of fancy new names, are now ready.

Lanvin-Designed Draperies Fall in Swirled Festoons

Lanvin, this season, designs draperies which fall in portiere-like drapes of swirled festoons. From three great gold rings at the front decollete of the evening gown she swings drapery of rich black silk crepe falling to the floor.

She makes a smoke gray crepe afternoon frock with a skirt whose criss-crossed folds swoop from the waist to the hem and back again, and fashions a long-sleeved green crepe evening gown with skirt panels worked in green and gold pailettes like an old mosaic.

Bags Like Cameras

The new bags of polished calf look like camera cases, for they are often deeper than they are wide. They come in rectangular pouches slung from a strap on the wrist and are a distinct departure from the flat "envelope" so long in vogue.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for June 30

LIBERTY UNDER LAW

(Temperance Lesson)

LESSON TEXT—Romans 14:13-21; I Corinthians 8:9-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth. —Romans 14:21.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Giving Up Our Own Way.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Royal Law.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Attitude of a Good Citizen Toward Law.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Personal Liberty and Law.

A more appropriate title for this lesson would be "The Christian's Obligations in Matters of Conscience." The Scripture reference from Romans sets forth fraternal duties in matters of conscience. The background for these obligations is to be found in the fact that there were some in the Church who were very conscientious in regard to the eating of flesh. Likely, these were Christian Jews who were scrupulous in the observance of dietetic laws given by Moses. Others in the Church ate what was set before them without question. There were some also who had particular regard for feast days and holy days. Others regarded every day alike. Differences and disputes arose. In dealing with this situation the apostle enumerates the following obligations:

I. Neither Party Is to Sit in Judgment Upon the Other (14:1-13).

This instruction applies to things which are indifferent in themselves. The passing of judgment in such cases is wrong, because:

1. Every man is responsible to God alone (v. 4).

2. Every man must decide for himself what is right for him to do (vv. 5-7). Concerning matters indifference in themselves, an action which may be right for one may be sinful for another.

3. Every man lives not unto himself, but unto the Lord (vv. 8, 9). The supreme purpose of Christ's death and resurrection was that he might be the Christian's Lord, both in life and death.

4. Every man must give an account to God (vv. 10-12). Every man must one day stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and render an account of himself unto God.

II. A Stumblingblock Should Not Be Placed in the Way of Another (14:13-23).

In many things the Christian has liberty so far as he personally is concerned, but that very liberty may become an occasion of stumbling to another. The following urgent reasons are given:

1. The weak brother for whom Christ died may be destroyed (v. 15). If it was worth while for Christ to die for a man, surely it is worth while that we should deny ourselves some privileges for his sake.

2. Good should not be evil spoken of (vv. 16-18). One's manner of life determines the measure of his influence over his fellow men. Such life will be characterized by:

a. Righteousness, or moral rectitude.
b. Living in peace among brethren.
c. Joy in the Holy Ghost, the usual characteristic of the saved man.

3. That which makes for peace and edification should be followed (v. 19). He who causes the weak brother to stumble through the exercise of his liberty destroys the work of God.

4. We should exercise faith in God and abstain from meats and wine which offend the weak brother (vv. 21, 22).

III. Personal Liberty to Be Abridged (I Cor. 8:9-13).

Love is to be the governing principle of the life. Love is more important than knowledge. This love will move one

1. To abridge his liberty for the sake of the weak brother (vv. 10, 11). While the one who has proper knowledge can eat meat with impunity, if his eating would cause his weak brother to stumble he should desist from eating.

2. To exercise liberty in such case is to sin against the brethren (v. 13). Sinning against our brother for whom Christ died is to sin against Christ. The great question in all our acts should be "Will they harm our brethren?" This obligation is enforced by three important considerations.

a. The fate of the weak brother (v. 11). It may cause him to perish. Such a possible loss shows the responsibility of our actions. b. The relation of the man to his slayer (v. 11). He is his brother. c. What Christ did for the weak brother. Christ died for him. If Christ was willing to die for the man, we ought to be willing to deny ourselves our personal rights for his sake.

Purpose

The longer I live, the more deeply am I convinced that that which makes the difference between one man and another, between the weak and the powerful, the great and indigent, is energy, invincible determination, a purpose once formed and then death or victory.—Nowell Buxton.

The Right

Do the right and your ideal of it grows and perfects itself. Do the wrong, and your ideal of it breaks up and vanishes.—Martineau.

Light on Age-Old Mystery

Mummy of Baby, Perfectly Preserved, Unearthed in New Mexico, May Lead to Solution of Great Riddle of the Pueblo People.

The pick of a lonely gold prospector a short time ago unearthed a treasure on the Jemez Plateau, in New Mexico, which brings one step nearer the solution of the great riddles of the deserted pueblos there and in the Chaco canyon, says the Kansas City Star. Great mystery has always surrounded these prehistoric ruins in the district northwest of Santa Fe.

Where did those ancient peoples go? What drove them from their pueblos, so well built and so strong? One day they were there, 11,000 of them, living in 14 large towns in symmetrical pueblos four and five stories high. Then they were gone, leaving no word, no sign to say where.

The prospector found one mute little messenger to throw a bit of light on the mysteries which surround the customs of these Tewa peoples. Instead of gold, he uncovered a carefully wrapped bundle from the loose soil. With trembling fingers he began to loosen the outer covering.

The prospector found a softly woven blanket lined with feathers in a perfect state of preservation. Within that was another blanket, the downlike feathers duplicates of those in a modern baby's pillow. When that was opened there lay before the prospector the perfectly preserved mummy of a two-year-old child.

There he lay, with an ear of corn in his hand, a little pottery bowl over his face, just as he had when he was buried about 1,600 years ago. His hair was touseled as any child's would be in sleep, and his tiny hand grasped the ear of corn as if, tired, he had fallen asleep.

The prospector hastened to the authorities with his treasure. It was they who fixed his burial date as about 350. The priceless find was minutely examined, all its history searched out by the signs which only expert archeologists understand. Then it was put on display at the Museum of New Mexico, in Santa Fe.

Only four such mummies have ever been found, and this seems to be the most interesting specimen of all. So proud are the archeologists connected with the museum that they are carefully preparing a report to be printed in learned scientific journals. Meanwhile they zealously guard the child against photographers until they have made their weighty reports and safely lodged him in the archeologists' Hall of Fame.

Already the word has gone around among the native Indians, and many of them, resplendent in their silver and turquoise rings, armbands and necklaces, have come to view the little mummy. They have walked by with impassive faces.

"A pity," they say in their strange, expressionless voices, "a pity to take the little child from his grave where he has rested so long." Some seem to be afraid bad luck will follow those who leave him there in a glass cabinet sleeping his timeless asleep before the eyes of strangers.

Many scientific explanations have been advanced as to the cause of the departure of the Tewa peoples from their homes. Some say a pestilence wiped them out. Others that an enemy annihilated them. But the theory which seems verified, after the intense drouth of the last summer, is that the ground level of their water supply sank during some terrific great drouth and drove them in desperation to seek other homes.

However, no man can say definitely, for here the scientists run against a blank wall at every turn. The Tewa peoples, though living in a high state of civilization, had no written word. There are no old tablets to decipher, no Rosetta stones on the New Mexico mesas. On every hand in these ancient pueblos there are riddles, but the greatest of all is the location of their burial ground. Up to the present none has been found for this large prehistoric community of Chetro Ketl in Chaco canyon.

Feast of Raw Peanuts Upset the President

Calvin Coolidge was browsing about the basement rooms and corridors of the White House, a short time after taking office, when he spied a large sack of peanuts near a door leading to the rear grounds.

This discovery interested him at once. He always had a passion for any kind of nuts, especially peanuts. This huge bag was open at the top and looked most inviting. He gazed upon his find for a second or two and then helped himself liberally. He filled his two coat pockets.

Later in the morning, while at his desk in the executive office, he rang for his secretary and told him he felt sick and directed that his engagements be canceled. He went to his bedroom, suffering with pains in the stomach. His physician made him drink plentifully of castor oil, and in a few hours he was feeling more like himself.

Upon inquiry the President discovered the peanuts he had been eating were raw. He did not know that the nuts to which he helped himself were for the squirrels. For years a sack of raw peanuts had been kept on hand for the policemen and gardeners to fill their pockets before going to their duties in the grounds. It was in this way that the squirrels were fed.—Boston Globe.

TIRES MAY LOOK ALIKE ON THE OUTSIDE ON THE INSIDE THEY ARE DIFFERENT

HEAT on the inside created by friction is the main cause of blowouts. Firestone Tires are different on the inside—they are built with the patented extra process of Gum-Dipping that soaks every cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber, preventing internal friction and heat. No other make of tire is Gum-Dipped.

Firestone performance records again emphasize the undisputed evidence that Firestone Tires are not only blowout-proof, but give greatest protection against skidding. There are three questions and answers that will solve the problem of what tires to buy:

QUESTION 1—"Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—Recent tests by a leading University show that Firestone High Speed Non-Skid Tires stop a car 15% quicker than any other of the leading makes. For eight consecutive years Firestone Tires have been on the winning car in the dangerous Pike's Peak Race where a skid means death. This is undisputed evidence that Firestone gives car owners greatest protection against skidding.

QUESTION 2—"Are they blowout-proof?"

ANSWER—Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have the most amazing records for being blowout-proof of any tires ever built. In the gruelling 500-Mile Race at Indianapolis, May 30th, every one of the 33 cars was equipped with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Not one of the 33 drivers had any tire trouble of any kind.

Ab Jenkins drove his 5,000 pound car on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires over the hot salt beds of Utah, 3,000 miles at 127.2 miles per hour, with temperatures as high as 120°, without tire trouble of any kind. These are most amazing proofs of blowout protection ever known.

QUESTION 3—"Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

ANSWER—Firestone High Speed Tires not only give you more than 50% longer wear, but also lowest cost per mile due to the tough, wear-resisting tread built with higher shoulders and a wider, flatter contour. This rugged tread is held securely to the Gum-Dipped cord body by Firestone's patented construction of two extra layers of cords under the tread, a special construction feature not used in any other tire. Unequaled mileage records by thousands of car owners add undisputed evidence of longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed Tires

YOUNG PEOPLE TO GET GOVERNMENT HELP IN PROGRAM

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A $50,000,000 program for training young people and supplying them with jobs was put under way last Wednesday, June 26th, by President Roosevelt.

Officials estimated that the plan would take care of half a million young men and women between 16 and 25. Upward of the same number are to be helped by the Civilian Conservation Corps.

"The yield on the investment should be high," Mr. Roosevelt said in announcing the program.

The new plan was divided into four sections designed to:

Give young persons work in private industry.

Train and retrain them for private employment.

Allow them to finish high school and college.

Give them work relief on youth projects.

Directors Named

Miss Josephine Roche, assistant secretary of the treasury, and Aubrey Williams, assistant to Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, were put in charge of the new program.

Miss Roche declined for the time being to amplify the presidential statement, but said that the program would get going very soon. Williams was out of the city.

A little later, however, a statement was issued at his office quoting him: "Of necessity at the moment detailed plans are not complete. However, it is certain that we will be well under way in 10 days and, I hope, in full swing by mid-July."

The money for the work was allocated from the work relief fund.

In outlining the plan, the following rates of payment were set: $15.00 a month for youths on work relief; $6.00 a month for those in high school; $15.00 a month for those in college.

In fixing the scale, Mr. Roosevelt said: "I have determined that we shall do something for the unemployed youth because we can ill afford to lose the skill and energy of these young men and women."

Under Miss Roche and Williams, who will head the national setup, was put a national advisory committee to be comprised of representatives of labor, business, agriculture, education and youth.

Youth Divisions Set

Along with this, in each state a youth division was to be established, headed by a state advisory committee to be appointed by the national advisory organization. Similar representation was to be had on the state advisory groups to that comprising the national committee. A state director also was to be named in each state.

This director would mobilize industry, commercial, agricultural and educational forces to employ and help youths without jobs, using both public and private agencies. Other youth committees would be appointed where necessary.

The program was designed to cover all young men and women not regularly in schools and not employed. The CCC, in contrast, has stressed taking young men whose families were on relief rolls.

Employers would be asked to apprentice the youths under arrangements worked out locally. This would cover not only the field of private employment, but public works.

The president specified, also, that where young persons were apprenticed to government service it would be "of the nature of field work for classes to be formed to train youth for public service."

To a large degree, the working out of the problem was placed in the hands of the local committees to be set up, although much information and many suggestions will be put into the hands of these groups by the national organization.

In carrying out the program, it was specified that the facilities of factories, industries, plants and public libraries should be used. With training classes wherever necessary or possible. The reemployment offices would cooperate in placing youths in jobs.

"An immediate program should be developed with the view of finding employment in industry for as many of the graduating class of 1935 as possible," the statement said. "This for its immediate effect upon youth morale, as well as its obvious practical desirability."

A national census of youths between 16 and 25 was another plan approved for giving work to persons in that age group.

Corn-Hog Farmers To Get Checks Soon

AUBURN, Ala.—Present indications are that the first 1935 corn-hog payment checks will be distributed the latter part of July, according to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

"The first payment represents $7.50 per head on the adjustment of 10 per cent in hog production and 15 cents per bushel on the production estimated for the acreage retired from corn production," the report said.

The second and final payment will be made as soon after January 1, 1936, as possible. "This installment will cover the balance of $7.50 per head in the hog adjustment and 20 cents per bushel of corn, less the prorata share of the local administration expenses.

MRS. MAYO PARDUE HAMMOND DIES AT KEYSTONE, JUNE 30

KEYSTONE, Ala. — Mrs. Mayo Pardue Hammond, wife of Maurice W. Pork Can Be Cured During Hot Weather

AUBURN, Ala. — Pork can be slaughtered and cured just as safely during the hot summer months as during the cold winter months, according to facts established by the Alabama Experiment Station.

As told by Prof. J. C. Grimes, head of the animal husbandry department, the proper method for saving meat during the summer months follows:

"Kill the hog and cut the carcass as wanted. Rub salt over meat. Place it in water-tight barrel. (Each 300-lb. hog or equivalent will require one ordinary barrel). After meat is placed, crack and place over it 200 pounds of ice for each 100 pounds of meat. Let it stay 24 hours. Take it up and rub it with a curing mixture composed of 12 pounds of salt 3 pounds of sugar, and 3 ounces of saltpeter. (Each 100 pounds of meat needs 50 pounds of this curing mixture). After rubbing meat with it, repack it in iced brine in barrel. Pour remainder of curing mixture over it. Cover barrel with cloth or boards. Let it set 25 days for hogs weighing 200 pounds or less; and 30 to 35 days for hogs weighing more than 300 pounds, depending upon the size. Take it out, wash with warm water, hang and smoke."

THOUSANDS DUE TO GET JOBS IN RELIEF WORK OVER NATION

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The New Deal headed Monday into a month of policy-making that Harry L. Hopkins says will "make or break" the $4,000,000 000 work-relief program.

Within the next 30 days a hundred thousand or so were scheduled to get jobs while some hundreds of thousands of others already on emergency relief work will have their pay checks signed by the "Works Progress Administration" instead of FERA.

But more important than the extra jobs was the decision on the type of projects to be carried out.

July 1 finds the $4,000,000,000 pretty well parcelled out.

$1,000,000,000 or more for the relief administration, $72 000,000 for tre Civilian Conservation Corps, $500,000,000 for highway, street and grade crossing elimination and at least $300,000,000 to help set up again some of the 1,000,000 farm families on relief.

Frankly acknowledging the similarity between the old Civil Works Administration and an estimate $2,000,000,000 of works progress administration activities, officials still insisted that the works projects would be worth while. But they qualified the statement with a remark that states and communities must contribute—as they have contributed under the CWA and the old work-relief program—if "good" projects are to be available.

600 ARE PRESENT FOR CONFERENCE AT MONTEVALLO

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The second annual regional conference of the Progressive Education Association held at Alabama College, came to a close Saturday, June 29, with the discussion by Dr. W. W. Beatty and Dr. Alice V. Keliher of "The Administration of the Progressive School."

Ralph E. Wager, of Emory University, presided at the meeting. The speakers considered the following questions: Administrative problems in initiating progressive practices in public schools; adjusting the curriculum to the child whose individual rate of progress is faster or slower than the average; methods of recording and reporting to parents children's school progress and how to make faculty meetings and teachers' meetings a vital part of the school program.

A summary of the conference proceedings was given by the presiding officers at noon Saturday.

The conference program committee included Miss Norma Smith, regional director of the Progressive Education Association; E. G. McGehee, of Montgomery; Dr. M. L. Orr and A. C. Anderson, of Montevallo.

More than 600 attended the session, representing 16 states. The features of the general programs were the addresses by Ralph E. Wager, of Emery; Ralph Boothby, of New Orleans; Dr. Keliher, of Hartford, Conn.; Dr. W. W. Beatty, of Bronxville, N. Y.; Dr. O. C. Carmichael, of Alabama College; P. O. Davis, of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and Dr. M. L. Beck, of Ala. Polytechnic Institute.

State Cotton Farmers Receive $2,000,000

AUBURN, Ala. — Approximately 70,000 Alabama cotton growers have received more than $2,000,000 in the first rental payment of the 1935 cotton adjustment program, and an additional 80,000 will receive over $3,000,000 within the next few days.

In announcing these figures Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the State Extension Service, reports that practically all 1934-35 cotton adjustment contracts have been cleared to Washington from the State office, except a few held up on technicalities.

U. S. TO INCREASE FIGHTING FORCES BY 60 THOUSAND

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The nation offered jobs in its armed services Monday to 60 000 young Americans.

The increase will bring the active national defense forces to its greatest strength since the immediate postwar years, officials said.

Made possible by recent congressional action, army enlisted personnel will be increased from 118,000 to 165,000; navy from 82,500 to 93,500, and Marine Corps from 14,900 to 16 000.

In addition, 600 new cadets are being sought for West Point, 250 officers for the Marine Corps, and navy line officer strength is to be swelled from 5,499 to 6,531. This increase does not include the regular midshipmen appointments for Annapolis or the cadets for West Point, nor provisions for some increases in officer flying personnel authorized in the next 12 months.

The new strength was authorized by Congress in appropriating $860,682,549 for national defense in the new fiscal year which began Monday. This is the largest defense fund voted by Congress since the World War period. The navy received $458,684,379 and the army $401,998,170.

Recruiting stations were opened Monday for enlistments. Instructions have gone to the army and navy high command from the White House not to seek recruits from the Civilian Conservation Corps, which is in the midst of a drive to increase its personnel from 300,000 to 600,000. President Roosevelt made it clear that he did not want the CCC used as a "feeder" for the military services.

Enlistments and training of the 47,000 army "rookies," the 11,000 navy and 1,100 marine "boots" are expected by War and Navy Department officials to be completed within six months.

The army plans no new units, but will use the additional men to bring existing outfits up to full peace time strength. The navy will distribute its new personnel on new warcraft going into commission during the next 12 months. Additional marine personnel will be used to build up the "fleet marine force" to peace time strength and for detachments aboard new heavy cruisers.

Army enlistments are to be for three years, Navy and Marine Corps for four years.

Entrance requirements for cadets at West Point were relaxed by Secretary Dern in order to obtain the 600 additional number authorized by Congress. Congress made the increase only and because of the shortage of time, enough youths have not been found to fill the vacancies.

Revival Starts July 24 At Wilton Church

WILTON, Ala.—There will be a series of meetings held in Wilton beginning on Wednesday, July 24, and lasting for ten days. Dr. J. O. Colley, Superintendent of the Orphans Home at Troy, Alabama, will be in charge of all services. Your presence is requested.

Terraces, Cover Crops Protect Alabama Soils

AUBURN, Ala. — Terraces and cover crops are two essentials in controlling soil erosion in Alabama.

"Since our soil is the measure of all farm wealth, it is imperative that we stop erosion and this can be done by a well-designed terrace system and a well-planned rotation which includes cover crops, both winter and summer," says J. B. Wilson, extension agricultural engineer.

17 CANNING PLACES NOW IN OPERATION IN SHELBY COUNTY

Canning is well under way in seventeen centers. Furnaces have been enlarged and repaired and pressure cookers as well as automatic sealers are being used in the program this summer. Approximately one hundred and seven women are on work relief and these women can for themselves at the centers where they take their vegetables which they have raised in addition to helping other families on relief with their canning. Eight hundred and forty eight packages of garden seed have been distributed to families on relief rolls. Non-relief families may can at the centers if they purchase their cans from a merchant and give one can in twelve as toll to the Relief Administration to be used among needy families next winter. Centers are operated at the following places:

Town:	Supervisor:
Shelby	Miss Mary McGibboney
Calera	Mrs. Marion Jones
Columbiana	Mrs. Lida Wood
Montevallo	Mrs. John Brownlee
Wilton	Mrs. Sam Lindsey
Maylene	Mrs. William Hyde
W'ville and H'ville	Mrs. A. Daniels
Vandiver	Miss Amilou Bass
Vincent	Mrs. E. W. Bell
New Hope	Mrs. E. Clyde Bishop
Helena	Mrs. Clara Roy
Saginaw	Mrs. Lula Carden
Chelsea	Mrs. C. H. Holcomb
Coalmont	Mrs. Hubert Carroll
Pelham	Mrs. Jessie Wilson

In addition to the Canning program, three Handicraft Shops are still in operation, though twelve have been closed at the approach of the canning season. In these shops the following wide variety of articles have been made for distribution among families on relief rolls. All materials used are of good quality and should give the families excellent service.

Town:	Supervisor:
Columbiana	Miss Ada Williams
Shelby	Mrs. Mary Jones
Calera	Mrs. Flora Johnson

The following report shows the out-put of these shops to the present date: Comforts, 3,031; Terry towels, 1,800; Huck towels, 3,010; Sheets, 2,459; Pillow cases, 3,242; Print dresses, 425; Cooking caps, 100; Cooking aprons, 44; Hot pot holders, 50; and Blanching sacks, 100.

The Relief Administration regrets that Mrs. Mary Teague who has so ably directed the Women's Projects during the past year has resigned to join her husband, Mr. William Teague, at Kingsport, Tennessee. Mrs. Mayme Horn has been named as her successor. Mrs. Horn graduated at Auburn with special training in Home Economics and is well equipped to carry on this important work in the County. (Signed)

GRACE ROWLAND, Director,
Shelby Co. Relief Administration.

Kewahatchie Honor Roll Is Announced

The following persons of Kewahatchie Sunday School made the Honor Roll for June by attending every Sunday:

Adults—Forrest Lovett.

Advance—Mattie Lou Vick, Pete Vick and Jesse Hughs.

Intermediate — Esther Gardner, Marie Bentley, John Moore and Charles Moore.

Juniors—Bernice B. Bentley and Nickson Moore.

Sunbeams — Pauline Lovett, Joe Lovett and Marie Lovett.

Supt. and Secretary—Quilla Hand and Lonnie Hand.

NORTH ALABAMA FARMERS SAVED 1,000,000 POUNDS OF CRIMSON CLOVER SEED

AUBURN, Ala.—North Alabama farmers this spring saved over 1,000,000 pounds of crimson clover seed to plant this fall as a winter cover crop, says J. T. High, district agent.

Farmers of DeKalb led by saving 500,000 pounds with Blount coming second with 100,000. Other leading counties include Jackson with 75,000 pounds, Marshall, 75 000, Etowah, 50,000, Cullman, 40,000, and Calhoun, 35 000. Each of the other counties in north Alabama saved a large quantity of seed with indications that they will within the next few years produce enough seed for their winter legume needs.

Nye Committee Points Need of Protecting Defense Funds From Shipbuilders—Congress Divorces Tax-the-Rich Bill From Nuisance Tax.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

SENATOR NYE of North Dakota and his committee on munitions do not have a very high opinion of American shipbuilders and they feel that strong legislation is needed to keep them from confusing "public defense needs with their private pocketbooks." Therefore the committee, in a preliminary report, asks that laws be enacted to do these things:

Senator Nye

1. Prevent "collusion" in bidding for navy construction jobs.

2. Prevent American patents from getting into the hands of foreign powers.

3. Limit profits to 5 per cent of the total cost to the government, in cases where the government assumes the risks of the enterprise, or to 10 per cent where the government does not.

4. Require that shipbuilders' "lobbyists" register with the government and disclose their income and expenditures.

The committee finds, in the matter of collusion, that there was "telepathy" among shipyard officials so that in bidding for many contracts each concern was able to get the contracts it wanted at profits that ran as high as 36 per cent. It says the navy has been at the mercy of the shipyards in preparing plans for war vessels and also in determining what were fair prices.

Construction of naval vessels is declared to be more costly in private yards than in government yards.

"While the evidence is not all in," th report says, "the indications are that the private yards cost the government from one to two million dollars more per cruiser than the navy yards."

The committee charges big shipbuilders with breaking up the Geneva naval limitation conference in 1927 and immediately launching a price-increase campaign that "made profits of 35 and 25.4 and 36.9 per cent on the cruisers."

LEGISLATIVE administration leaders, for a while in a frenzy of anxiety to hitch the President's tax-the-rich program to the resolution extending the so-called "nuisance" excise taxes, thereby speeding it through the Washington legislative factory in four days, suddenly disclaimed any intention of such procedure, and let the $500,000,000 tax extension ride along unappended. Congress will consider the new taxation program during early July.

This program is expected to produce some $340,000,000 in new revenue, principally from inheritance and gift taxes, increased taxes on the highest income brackets, and corporation taxes graduated from 10 per cent to 17½ per cent.

The program has been held up as a sweetmeat to placate the sugar palate of Louisiana's Kingfish. Actually, a wealth of $340,000,000 shared among 120,000,000 Americans would amount to about $2.83 a head—all of which would be applied to a public debt of $29,000,000,000 and a budget of $8,500,000,000, anyway.

The net taxable worth of the 133 estates which paid taxes based on a valuation of $1,000,000 each in 1933 was $284,000,000. If the government had taxed these estates 100 per cent, seizing them entirely, they would have been worth only $2.37 a head to the American population. If the government confiscated all income of more than $1,000,000 in 1933, it would have taken an army of trucks loaded with small change to distribute it, for each American would get only 45 cents. And the general opinion of administration leaders in the senate was that the taxes obtained from the rich might possibly eliminate the necessity of the "nuisance" taxes after another year.

YOUTH between sixteen and twenty-five will be served $50,000,000 for a nation-wide job hunt and further training of young men and women to hold jobs after they get them, through President Roosevelt's new "national youth administration," itself administered under the works-relief program by Miss Josephine Roche, assistant secretary of the treasury, and Aubrey Williams, assistant to Harry L. Hopkins, works-progress administrator.

The new organization will endeavor to:

1. Find employment in private industry for unemployed youth.

2. Train and retrain for industrial, technical and professional employment opportunities.

3. Provide for a continuing attendance at high school and college.

4. Provide work-relief projects designed to meet the needs of youth.

The average payment for youths on relief work will be $15 a month; those going to high school would be given $6 a month, and those attending college, $15 a month.

The problem of what to do with the youth who finishes school, supposedly equipped to make his real start in life, and finds what few jobs there are are given to older and married men and women, as well as the youth who is unable to finish school because of poor circumstances, has been one of the most discouraging aspects of the entire depression.

LIKE most Utopias, the new one in Alaska's Matanuska valley has been reported a nest of discontent; the disillusionment apparently was manifest even quicker than usual in this case. Minnesota, Michigan and Wisconsin farm families who made up a large share of the recent expedition to begin life anew in the North Pacific territory drafted a list of grievances for the FERA trouble shooter, Eugene Carr.

Many of them said the project was misrepresented, that the land is poor and that housing is not what they were led to believe it would be. Neither are medical service, school facilities, seeds disbursed for planting, the climate and prices for groceries measuring up to advance word-pictures. There is considerable jealousy existent over the distribution of farm land. And to top it all off, the Utopians want government pay for their work.

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON, once ambitious to direct the $3,000,000,000 public works program, was named to direct a comparatively small part of the President's now $4,000,000,000 works-relief schedule. As director of works-relief in New York city, he will co-ordinate the program in that area.

Gen. Johnson

With the famed fighting jaw determinedly set, he revealed the four conditions under which he accepted the new job:

He will get no pay, only $7,800 for a year's expenses. (He got $6,000 a year for this purpose during most of his time as keeper of the Blue Eagle.) His job will end October 1, unless he and the administration agree that it shall continue. He will devote a minimum of four days a week to his official duties. And he will consult with Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia as far as possible, but will be responsible to Harry L. Hopkins alone.

NEW YORK'S Harlem and its kindred negro populations throughout the land resounded in jubilation, with chicken an' ham in every fryin' pan and juniper juice flowing freely, as Joe Louis, the first great brown hope of pugilism since Jack Johnson, established himself as a real threat to the world's heavyweight boxing championship.

Showing ring generalship far beyond his brief professional experience, boxing ability conspicuous by its absence from the heavyweight ranks since the days of Corbett, and a wallop like the kick of a cotton-belt mule, the dusky Detroiter cut Primo Carnera, Italian human skyscraper, to ribbons for five rounds, knocked him down three times in the sixth, and was declared the winner by technical knockout in a bout at the Yankee stadium.

"LABOR policy in a democracy is not a program conceived by a government. It is a program of action which the people who earn their living as wage earners and those who employ them in profit-making enterprises must work out together."

So asserts Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins in her annual report to congress, and she sets forth these six specific duties of the government in this respect:

1. To do everything in its power to establish minimum basic standards for labor, below which competition should not be permitted to force standards of health, wages and hours.

2. To further peaceful settlements of controversies and relieve labor of the necessity of resorting to strikes in order to secure equitable conditions and the right to be heard.

3. Through legislation and fostering co-operation between employers and workers to make every job the best that the human mind can devise as to physical conditions, human relations and wages.

4. To encourage such organization and development of wage earners as will give status and stability to labor as a recognized important group of citizens having a contribution to make to economic and political thought and to the cultural life of the community.

5. To arrange that labor play its part in the study and development of any future economic policies.

6. To encourage mutuality between labor and employers in the improvement of production and the development in both groups of a philosophy of self-government in the public interest.

OF SPECIAL interest to the criminal-lawyer who is more criminal than lawyer will be the news of Atty. Louis Piquett's conviction in Chicago. He was found guilty of having harbored and concealed Homer Van Meter, right-hand man of John Dillinger, during the summer weeks of 1934 before both these public enemies were slain by "G-men."

DESPITE Germany's promise never to engage in unrestricted submarine warfare, France entered an immediate and strong protest to the reich's bilateral pact with Great Britain, permitting Germany to increase naval tonnage. Capt. Anthony Eden was hurried over to Paris to explain the British action and justify it. Premier Laval told him that the French national doctrine was and would continue to be that organization of collective security must precede any legalization of German rearmament.

Capt. Eden then went to Rome and Mussolini told him flatly that he sided with France and could not approve the manner in which the Anglo-German accord was reached without consulting Italy and France.

No more success did Capt. Eden have in trying to get Il Duce to submit to a compromise allowing Italy certain concessions in Abyssinia in return for the guarantee that there would be no war with the African monarchy. Mussolini refused to talk about it. Great Britain was faced with two remaining choices: To influence the Abyssinian government to accede to Italian demands in toto or simply give up and let the apparently inevitable war go on.

FOR some reason that isn't entirely clear an attempt was made to blow up the American embassy in Mexico City. A bomb made of dynamite and percussion caps was hurled from an automobile into the embassy garden where it exploded, tearing a hole in the garden wall and breaking a window in the private office of Ambassador Josephus Daniels. No one was injured and the damage was slight.

Josephus Daniels

Mr. Daniels said the incident was "of no importance at all" and declined to make a complaint, but the acting secretary of foreign relations, Senor Cenceros, called to express regret and extra police and detectives were placed about the embassy.

CONGRESSMAN MARTIN DIES of Texas has before congress a bill the enactment and enforcement of which would evoke cheers from millions of tax-weary citizens, for it provides for the deportation of about 6,000,000 aliens who are receiving dole or holding jobs that should be held by citizens who are on the relief rolls. A campaign to get congressional action on this measure has been started by 153 organizations estimated by Mr. Dies to represent 5,000,000 people, and he says at least 150 congressmen have promised to support the bill. Outlining the provisions of the measure, Mr. Dies said:

"First, it bars all immigration of pioneer immigrants who do not have relatives in this country.

"Second, it makes mandatory deportation of 3,500,000 aliens estimated of illegal entry.

"Third, it gives about 4,000,000 aliens legally in this country 12 months in which to become citizens, or go home.

"Fourth, all aliens must secure Labor department permits to work and permits would be issued only when employers show they can't find United States citizens to do the job.

"Fifth, it provides for gradual reunion of families not likely to become public charges when the economic situation is improved."

CITIZENS everywhere were urged by Atty. Gen. Cummings to assist the federal government in "cracking down" on bucket shops which are swindling the public out of millions of dollars. He declared that a nation-wide chain is operating. Most of their victims are doctors, lawyers, professors and business men, he said.

Atty. Gen. Cummings

"We know the names of the ringleaders," said Mr. Cummings, "but it will take co-operation of both the public and legitimate brokers to put them where they belong—behind the bars."

Most of the victims believe that they have lost their money legitimately, he said, and are afraid of complaining to federal officers because they are in debt after they have been "cleaned."

SECRETARY of the Navy Swanson asked bids from private yards on 13 vessels and was prepared to negotiate for 11 more, launching the navy's 1935-36 construction program within 20 hours after receiving the required funds from congress. Included in the program are: Two new cruisers of 10,000 tons each, equipped with six-inch guns and at least four airplanes apiece; one aircraft carrier, three heavy destroyers, twelve light destroyers and six submarines.

HERE is something to make the men chuckle. At a conference in Atlantic City the National Women's party adopted resolutions advocating equal rights before the law for men and women, equal pay for equal work, equal domicile, property, and guardianship rights, and "equal alimony in cases of divorce and equal consideration for men in cases of breach of promise."

DEATH for four of the leaders in the Spanish revolution of last October was decreed by the military tribunal at Oviedo. Thirty-six others were sentenced to life imprisonment and seven to twelve years. Sixteen were acquitted for lack of evidence.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington. — Whether President Roosevelt's new tax program for big inheritance levies is put through at this session, or goes over until next year, there is little doubt of its eventual enactment.

The answer to that is simple. It is just that there are, and probably would be in almost any upset which might occur, enough votes in both houses of congress to impose high taxes on big fortunes.

This fact is realized now pretty well by holders of these same big fortunes, so the most important thing at the moment is what they will do to circumvent the effects, or soften the blows, that are certain to come.

One of the most serious aspects affects such institutions as the Ford Motor company. There are many others, though all of them are smaller, but the idea is the same in every case where a big business is owned almost exclusively by one small family.

No one is authorized to say, of course, what Henry Ford will do, as he sees this thing coming. But the opinion of shrewd business men as to what he will be forced to do is interesting.

The problem would be what Edsel Ford could do if his father died suddenly and the government demanded, for example, in both estate and inheritance taxes, say 80 per cent.

How could the cash be provided with which to pay this tax? Obviously by doing what Henry Ford has fought against all his life, and fought against successfully, by refusing to have securities of his company sold through Wall Street.

If, for instance, in view of the certainty of heavy inheritance taxes, Ford should decide not to have such a terrific problem put up to Edsel, some day, for immediate decision—perhaps at a most inopportune time—the thing to do would be to sell to the public shares of his stock, or bonds in his company.

Simple Solution

If the stock and bonds were on the market, had a recognized value, and were being constantly traded in, the problem would be comparatively simple. Enough securities could be sold to pay the taxes. This would not entirely eliminate the possibility that there would have to be a great sacrifice of values. The public would know that these stocks and bonds must be sold in a very short time, and the probability is that the price would decline to far below normal. It would be strictly a buyers' market.

This sort of thing has been illustrated time and again in smaller enterprises. In fair sized cities, say of around half a million people, it often develops that everybody "in the know" realizes a large block of some local stock must be sold. Always the price declines in advance, and the person who must do the selling for one reason or another nets far less than the actual value of his securities.

In fact, one of the reasons many investment bankers have always advised clients to deal only in securities listed on the New York Stock exchange has been that—merely because of its bigness—there was less of that sort of thing possible than in the case of securities in smaller enterprises, where the interest in buying was confined to a small territory.

But in the real big cases, such as Ford would be, New York would become just as bad as many of the smaller communities are now for small enterprises.

Wall Street Knew

President Roosevelt's recommendation of high inheritance taxes was made directly against the advice of nearly all his congressional advisers.

Within two hours after he had told newspaper correspondents that there just might be a message to congress during the day, though he declined to say what it would be about, Senator Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, and Chairman Doughton of the house ways and means committee, denied to reporters any knowledge of a move by the White House to obtain higher income taxes and inheritance taxes.

Which would seem to prove that the two chairmen mentioned, heads respectively of the committees in house and senate which would handle the legislation desired by the President, still hoped until the message actually arrived that they had dissuaded the President.

But, what is really of great interest to newspaper men in particular and the public in general, the tip on which these two chairmen were questioned came directly from Wall Street.

In fact, smart brokers operating on the New York Stock exchange knew almost the precise pattern of the President's tax plan at the very moment the President was declining to take newspaper men into his confidence as to what his message would be about!

There have been many leaks of information in Washington. There have been evidences again and again that speculators on Wall Street had advance information as to what the administration would do. There is nothing new about this. There have been many investigations, one of the most interesting of which, and incidentally one of the most typical, being the famous "leak investigation" by the house rules committee back in Woodrow Wilson's administration.

On that occasion news that the President would make a move to obtain peace in Europe—this was in the late fall of 1916—before the United States got into the war—was known in Wall Street, and occasioned a terrific crash in the stocks of companies manufacturing munitions for the allies. Thomas W. Lawson of Boston, of frenzied finance fame, charged that certain people had made millions on advance information. Bernard M. Baruch was put on the stand, and admitted making half a million the day the news broke, though he convinced the committee that he acted on news from London, not Washington.

Pinned on Reporters

But the point is that at the end of that investigation some five or six newspaper men were pilloried as the real source of the leak. Some of them lost their jobs. Some were just reprimanded. All were in disgrace. The whole thing was construed as a terrific reflection on newspaper ethics.

Everybody in Washington knew there had been a real leak—that the telegrams sent by the newspaper men thus besmirched were just an alibi—in short that Thomas W. Lawson in essential was right.

But this administration, having watched the Lawson and other leak investigations, is taking no chances. This was evidenced by the fact that at 11 a. m., on June 19, the President would not admit what his message that afternoon would be about.

Yet hours before the stock market closed this writer and several others were working desperately to confirm tips from Wall Street reporters in their organizations that the President was about to propose high inheritance taxes and big advances on the higher brackets on income taxes!

And if readers will pardon a humble confession, the Washington reporters were not able to confirm the report! But the smart Wall Street operators knew. You can draw your own diagram of what that means.

Relief Plan in Peril

The $1,100 per man limitation which President Roosevelt has imposed on the work-relief program, as far as the selection of projects is concerned, not only promises to force a general blow-up in the whole scheme, but to make a lot of trouble, politically and otherwise.

For instance, the big water project for central California, for the San Juaquin and Sacramento rivers. Recently Senators Johnson and McAdoo called on the President. They urged him to lift the $1,100 ban on this project. The President insisted that he had only $4,000,000,000, and that this $4,000,000,000 must provide work for three and a half million men. Hence each project must put a man to work for every $1,100 spent.

The senators urged the President to consider that purchases of materials, machinery, etc., would provide work far in excess of the jobs actually provided on the site of the project. But the President was unmoved.

Later on, however, he had a qualm, and wrote Public Works Administrator Ickes, inquiring whether the $1,100 would actually ban the project, and suggesting a restudy of the whole situation to determine this point. Ickes himself would not "fudge" on the figures. But he gave some of his subordinates a chance to juggle them.

At last accounts the assistants declined to pull the chestnuts out of the fire. They made lengthy reports calling attention to the value of the project, and to the tremendous amount of employment it would provide indirectly. One of them even called attention to the fact while most of this indirect employment would be outside the state of California, some of it would be inside the state. That would be cement.

Curious Paradox

Which brings up a rather curious paradox in the mental processes of the President and some of his advisers—particularly Harry Hopkins. (It must always be remembered in this connection that Ickes himself has no sympathy for this policy—he approves this particular California project, and is keen for providing employment indirectly.)

The country has been divided for relief work purposes into some three hundred odd districts. Apparently the administration is trying to conduct them as though they were water-tight compartments. The number of unemployed in each has been surveyed, and the idea is to provide sufficient employment in each to take care of that situation.

This policy does not take into account the fact that a district which happens to be big in steel manufacturing would not need work relief if enough work relief projects requiring steel should be approved. In that case the unemployed men in the steel district would have jobs automatically provided for them—jobs paying much better wages than work relief—giving them the opportunity to spend more money, and thus provide jobs for still others, etc.

All of which is in strange contrast to the President's bitter complaint against the Supreme court decision in the NRA case. For he talked of the country's being relegated to the horse and buggy days, and harped on the point that with increasing speed of communication and transportation, nothing could happen in Maine that would not affect Oregon.

There is the sharpest division among his advisers as to this $1,100 per man limitation, and observers are predicting that the whole work-relief program will bog down in the next few months simply because of the impossibility of finding enough projects worth doing where the cost per man employed will come within $1,100.

Lesson for July 7

MOSES (LEADER AND LAWGIVER)

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 24:3-8, 12-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord.—Psalm 33:12a.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Moses Brings a Message From God.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Laws God Gave His People.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Patriot.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Religion in National Life.

I. Moses Prepared (Exod. 2:1-22).

1. His birth (vv. 1, 2).

Both his father and mother were of Levitical stock. At Moses' birth his mother was assured that he was to be the deliverer of the chosen people, and she was confident that God would somehow save him from the hand of the cruel king.

2. His preservation (vv. 3, 4). While his mother had faith, she did not ignore the proper use of means. Perhaps the story of how Noah and his family were saved suggested the expedient of the ark of bulrushes.

3. His education (vv. 5-10). Moses was educated first at his mother's knee. Here his mind was filled with the Word of God and acquainted with the Jewish hopes and prospects. He was further educated at the Egyptian court where he became acquainted with all the wisdom of the Egyptians.

4. His exile and marriage (vv. 11-22). Moses was obliged to take his flight from Egypt at the age of forty years because he prematurely attempted to enter upon his work as the deliverer of his people (Acts 7:25). While in exile, God taught him and qualified him for his work. During this time of rejection he secured a bride from among the Gentiles. Jesus Christ, his great antitype, while now in the place of rejection by his brethren, is getting a bride, his Church, from among the Gentiles.

II. Moses Called to Deliver His People (Exod 3:1-14).

1. The Lord spoke from the burning bush (vv. 1-6). It was while keeping the flock of his father-in-law in the desert that the Lord appeared to Moses in the burning bush, which symbolized the indestructible people of God.

2. Moses commissioned (vv. 7-10). In this commission God showed his active interest in his people. He assured Moses that he had seen their affliction and heard their cry. It was because of his grace that he obligated himself to deliver the people.

3. Moses' objections removed (vv. 11-14). Four objections were offered, each one of which God met and removed.

a. Personal unworthiness (v. 11). b. The difficulty of the people to understand Moses' relationship to God (vv. 13, 14). c. Unbelief on the part of the people (4:1). d. Lack of eloquence (4:10).

III. Moses the Deliverer.

1. From Egyptian bondage (Exod. 12:29-36). The culminating blow was the death of the first-born. There was death that night in every home through Egypt where the blood was not found. This is typical of the coming day of God's wrath when all who are not resting under the shadow of Christ's blood shall perish.

2. At the Red Sea (Exod. 14:1-3). Hemmed in on either side by mountains, the Red sea in front, and pursued by the Egyptians from the rear, God interposed, enabling the Israelites to cross dry shod.

IV. The Giving of the Law (Exod. 19-24).

1. The covenant proposed (ch. 19). This is the beginning of the theocratic kingdom. The Lord through Moses proposed to the people that on condition of their obedience he would constitute them his peculiar people (vv. 5, 6). To this the people heartily responded, engaging themselves to obey him (v. 8).

2. The content of the covenant (ch. 20). This embraces the Decalogue or Ten Commandments, setting forth obligation Godward and manward.

3. The Statutes of Moses or Secondary Laws (chs. 21-23). These laws pertain to a. Servitude (21:2-11); b. Personal safety (21:12-32); c. Property (21:33-22:15); d. Conjugal fidelity (22:16, 17); e. Miscellaneous laws (23:1-9); f. Set times of Jehovah (23:10-19). g. Personal piety (23: 20-23).

4. The covenant ratified (Exod. 24). When the law had been duly set forth, the people were called upon to accept its obligations. The law was reduced to writing. The people were then called upon to commit themselves to personal acceptance of their responsibility. The covenant was then sealed by blood.

Secret of Happiness

"The real secret of happiness is to be in love with your job; to do work that you like to do; that interests you; that you believe in." That is, let us add, not only the secret of happiness, but the secret of success.

Revenge

We cannot honor our country with too deep a reverence; we cannot love her with an affection too pure and fervent; we cannot serve her with an energy of purpose or a faithfulness of zeal too steadfast and ardent.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Van continues his social attentions to Gail.

"I thought it was the limit!" said the usually elegant Edith.

"It didn't seem to be."

"I wonder if you'd know the limit if you saw it, Gail," the younger sister said, with a sophisticated, fond smile.

"Oh, Edith, get off your foot!" Gail wanted to say. But she could not be mean to Edith tonight, when Edith had finished up the dishes, and stayed at home. So she smiled, too, and went on with her undressing. Her mood began to change; everything was all right.

"How long was Phil gone?"

"Oh, not long. 'Bout an hour."

"He didn't—" Gail paused.

"No, he didn't have time to see anybody. I don't believe he's so crazy about Lily Cass," Edith opined.

"He and Dick had to go over to the Iron Works, didn't they?"

"Yes. And, by the way, Dick's sleeping here, because he and Phil want to get up at five and go over and see an installation—or something—at Milpitas. They're going in Dick's car."

"Dick's car! Since when has he—"

"Isn't it killing! It's quite decent-looking, too. You know old Benstein, of the second-hand place down near the hill?"

"I know the place. Yes, and I kind of know the old man, too."

"Well, two cars collided out on the highway near there about three months ago, it seems, and old Benstein bought them—they were wrecks—for about fifteen dollars apiece. So he sent for Dick, it seems, and told him if he'd put the touring car in order he could have the roadster. Dick did Benstein's first, and he's been puttering over his own for about six weeks. So last night he drove it in from Stanislaus, and put it in Joe Foster's garage, and Joe looked it over, and he says it's perfect, and he offered Dick two hundred dollars for it."

"Dick's so darn admirable," Gail said indifferently, opening her book, "that you expect him to break out rail splitting 'most any minute! I can just see him sweating over politics some day, and being on the losing side every time! 'Honest Dick Stebbins for governor!' But I like old Dick!"

"Oh, so do I," the younger sister agreed eagerly.

She went away, and Gail lay musing, her open book in her hands. The memory of her parting with Van, in the deep black night gloom at the gate, kept returning to buzz about her like a midge, and spoil all the other recollections.

She put out her light, but her thoughts milled and milled unceasingly. What had happened to the gay, companionable mood of the earlier evening? What had made the parting so labored, so artificial?

"Why is it," Gail asked herself savagely, "that I can get along so beautifully with girls, and act like such a fool with boys? If he'd been a girl, tonight, I would have gone on talking, laughing, putting off coming into the house. I would have kept saying, 'Listen, I have to go in.'

"Oh, well, what difference does it make! We'll all be dead in a hundred years!"

And so restlessly off to sleep, oddly baffled and dissatisfied after this marvelous day on which the dream had come true.

The next day she and Edith had real trouble to think about and to discuss as they walked to work.

In the first place, Sam had told them at breakfast that he, Sam, had been driving some boy's car without a license and had been fined fifteen dollars by Judge Gates.

"Oh, Phil paid it," Sam had said in his confident, little-brotherly manner.

"How could Phil pay it?"

"Oh, he worked overtime all last month, you know. He had something coming to him."

"You oughtn't to have done it, Sam. You're such a fool!" the older sister had said reproachfully, affectionately. She repeated the phrase to Phil, when he came in late to report his expedition with Dick.

"You can't say that, Gail. It's natural for a kid to want to drive a car. Most kids Sam's age," Phil had reminded her temperately, "have their own cars."

So reasonable, so generous, such a rock of strength about a thing like this, it had been staggering to his sisters to have him add, with a little self-consciousness:

"I was thinking, when we were having Dick and Van Murchison to supper last night, why not ask Lily Wibser some time? She's an awfully sweet little thing—she's had an awfully rough deal."

Edith had felt every fiber of her being stiffen; Gail's hands had begun to tremble as she had said pleasantly, confusedly:

"Well, of course—if she'd like it, Phil."

"Why shouldn't she like it?" Phil had asked in a level, challenging voice.

"No reason why! Except—hasn't she rather young children?"

"Yep. She has three kids." Phil had been refilling his coffee cup.

"I don't think she'd come!" Gail had said, uncomfortable but determined.

"You might try!" Phil's voice had been level, composed. He had returned to his newspaper with no further reference to the subject.

His sisters, in utter consternation, had spoken since of little else.

"She's simply mesmerized him, that's all! It's just too horrible!"

"Gail, we couldn't ask her to the house!"

"I don't think we could."

They parted on the dubious note, deeply worried, as they had been worried so many, many times before about Sam, Ariel, Phil in turn, about family finances, social complications.

"Just when I was—sort of—looking forward to Sunday-night suppers," Gail offered in parting, when they came to the Calle.

"Yes, I know!" Edith answered quickly.

"What on earth can we do, Edith, if Phil says anything more?"

"Well, have her, I suppose!"

"But she's simply—she's simply not respectable!"

"I know."

"I mean, everyone knows what those Wibsers are, and the Cass boys are just gangsters!"

"I know," Edith conceded again anxiously.

They went their ways. Gail's thoughts went to Van, however, at intervals during that day and the next day. She began the girl's calendar: "It's only one full day since I saw him—it's only two full days—it's only the morning of the third day."

"I Don't Believe He's So Crazy About Lily Cass."

CHAPTER IV

It began to seem like a dream to her that he and she had been laughing over the library counter last Saturday night, and that he had come to supper with the Lawrences, and that she had gone down the highway, beyond Dumbarton bridge, to Old Aunt Mary's for a late supper and dancing.

Edith asked, delicately, lightly, if there had been any telephoning, during the day, and Gail became expert in careless replies.

And then quietly, indifferently, "Oh, yes! Van Murchison was in. It seems Mrs. Chipp is having a house party down at their place in the Santa Cruz mountains a week from this week-end, and she wants me to go!"

"What!" Edith ejaculated, incredulous. "Oh, Gail, aren't you excited?"

Gail laughed a little protestingly.

"But yes I am," she admitted honestly, "terribly excited! But of course they only want me because Van does. He probably asked his aunt to ask me!"

"Oh, for heaven's sake!' Ariel said impatiently and unexpectedly, in her husky tones. "For heaven's sake, what would you want her to ask you for—because mamma was a church member? You know very well you're not an intimate friend of hers. Why should she ask you? I'd much rather go a place because a boy wanted me than because his mother did!"

And laughing helplessly and a little shocked, Edith and Gail admitted that there was something in this view.

"I have everything," Gail said. "I have my blue velvet; I have my Christmas slippers; I have my white hat. I'll do my old linen up myself! It'll be fine for roughing—walking or anything. And I'll wash my sweater!"

"There'll prob'ly be tennis!" Ariel suggested.

"Oh, probably!" Gail was deep in dinner preparations; her tone sang.

"Did she come in, Gail, or did she write a note?"

An instant chill. Then Gail said casually, "Neither, my dear. She sent a message by Van."

There was a silence. Edith stood distressed and disappointed in the center of the kitchen; Ariel looked up alertly from her book. Gail went on busily with her cooking.

"Well, she will write?" began Edith, on an upward inflection.

"She may!" Gail agreed indifferently.

"Well, you won't think of accepting unless she does write, Gail?" Edith persisted unhappily.

"My dear Edith, we are living in the Twentieth century, not in the good old days of Pamela and Evelina."

"Well, I'm very much surprised at you!" Edith said, trembling. Dinner was served in a sulphurous silence.

Phil, hungry, grimy, and tired, noted at once that something was wrong, and his first question brought the whole thing down upon him in an avalanche.

Gail was flushed and angry. Edith reasonable and cool. They talked at once, and Phil frowned faintly, smiled faintly, as he looked from one face to another.

"Phil, isn't it ridiculous in this day and generation to expect a person to send you an engraved invitation—"

"I didn't say an engraved invitation!"

"Because, I mean, everything's done so informally now, and people telephone invitations to weddings!"

"No, but listen, Phil! We've always held up our heads, and been known as girls who weren't cheap, who wouldn't jazz—haven't we, Phil? It's all we have—it's us," Edith, her eyes suddenly wet with tears, went on shakily.

Philip had championed Gail all her life, and she adored him as her unfailing authority. It was therefore like a blow in her face to have him say, judicially, over his pipe:

"I'm not so sure but what Ede's right, Gail. You aren't sure that Van Murchison—he's an awfully nice kid, and he's most amusing and all that, and he means well enough—but you aren't sure that this kid ever spoke to his aunt at all. How do you know—"

"Oh, listen, listen!" Gail said, managing a laugh, but inwardly seething with fury. "He didn't ask me to go to China! He asked me to go for two nights to Los Gatos—and I'm going! That's all there is to it!"

There was a full minute of dead silence during which her angry voice hung in the air. Then Ariel expelled a long, sighing breath, and Phil shrugged philosophically.

"You're of age," he said briefly.

Nothing more. The girls, as they cleared the table, avoided each other's eyes and presently began to talk lifelessly of other things.

Phil went out without another glance or words for his favorite sister. When Gail and Ariel chanced to be for a minute alone in the kitchen, Ariel seized the opportunity to say eagerly:

"Stick it out, Gail! If every one felt the way Edith does, no one would have any fun at all! We'd all be old maids!"

Ariel's sympathy was very sweet. But it did not have the value of Edith's approval. On the contrary, there was something disturbing in this suggestion of a general mutiny against the Lawrence way of doing things.

Ariel had arranged with a boy friend that he should call her on the telephone at eight o'clock, and she should answer his call with a pleasant, dutiful "Oh, yes, Miss Hemmet?" Miss Hemmet was her mathematics teacher. She would then say to Gail, "Gail, I'm going over to Miss Hemmett's, and then I'm going to meet the crowd at the corner and go down to Sticky Dobbins' for some ice cream. I asked Phil, and he said, 'All right.'"

It was a risky game she was playing, but after all it was a game. Edith was playing no game at all, and Gail was demonstrating more forcefully every instant how little she knew of the rules. Better anything than to spend one's evening darning the fraternal socks, as Edith was placidly preparing to do, or patiently to settle down to helping Sam with his correspondence school aviation work, like Gail.

The telephone rang.

"Take it, freshman!" Gail said to her younger sister. But Ariel needed no prompting; she was already halfway to the hall.

"Oh, thank you, Miss Hemmet. I will!" her sisters heard her say. She came back to her work with her transparent skin exquisitely flushed, and her strange eyes alight. "Gail, Miss Hemmet wants me to come over. And Phil said we could go to Dobbins' afterward."

"Oh, that's all right. Go ahead!" Gail said absently. Ariel faded from sight silently, was gone.

Later Dick Stebbins looked in at the kitchen door.

"Peanuts, anybody?"

"Phil's gone," Gail said.

"I'll follow him up." But Dick came in instead. Gail noiselessly escaped into the dining room and secured her little playing cards. She came back to the kitchen table and began to play.

Edith matched socks thoughtfully, frowning at their stripes and selvages. The gas sang, and Dick stood up and lowered it.

Gail's thoughts rocked to and fro deliciously; she was writing a story. A woman—very beautiful but entirely unprincipled—carrying on a love affair under her husband's very eyes. . . .

"Gail's going down to the Chipp place in Los Gatos next week-end," Edith said, out of a silence.

"'Sat so?" Dick asked, looking up.

Hobbies Found Helpful in Nervous Troubles

Plaster modeling has cured a clerk who was recovering from a nervous breakdown. Painting proved the salvation of a factory worker who had a similar breakdown.

Work, it has been found, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly, is an excellent antidote to nervous troubles, but the work must be of the right kind. This has been discovered by the Institute of Medical Psychology, where crafts ranging from rug-making to fretwork are being taught to nervous sufferers by volunteer experts.

Dressmaking, lino cutting and printing, raffia work and embroidery are other occupations which have proved their medical value.

"Similar results," it was stated, "have occurred among neurotic children. One shy girl of seven, who rarely spoke in the presence of strangers, was encouraged to draw. Gradually she began to chatter while she worked, the occupation apparently providing her with a stepping stone to the world of reality and to contact with other people."

Scientific occupational therapy is the name given to this form of treatment.

Pimples Completely Gone

After Using Cuticura Soap and Ointment

"My face broke out with pimples that came from surface irritation and were quite large. It itched and burned and at night would itch so badly I would scratch, and the pimples finally turned into eruptions. My face was disfigured for the time being; I looked as if I had the measles.

"Then I read about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. I got great results so I bought more, and I used only two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one box of Cuticura Ointment and the pimples were completely gone." (Signed) Miss Mayme Michelsen, Weeping Water, Neb.

LOWER COST PER TON MILE

DUE TO FIRESTONE EXTRA CONSTRUCTION FEATURES

QUESTION No. 1—"Will the non-skid tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

ANSWER—The patented construction feature of two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread makes it possible for Firestone to use a wider, flatter tread with higher shoulders, that puts more rubber on the road. This, combined with the scientific non-skid design, gives greatest non-skid safety and traction ever known.

QUESTION No. 2—"Is the tire body protected against destructive internal heat, the chief cause of premature tire failure?"

ANSWER—Every cord in Firestone Tires is soaked and saturated in pure, liquid rubber by the patented Gum-Dipping process. This process, not used in any other tire, soaks every cotton cord and insulates every strand, preventing internal friction and heat, giving extra strength, longer life, greater dependability.

QUESTION No. 3—"Will the tread give me long wear at today's higher speeds?"

ANSWER—A new and tougher tread compound developed by Firestone gives you longer wear at lower cost per mile, even at today's higher speeds.

Steel Finding Way Into Home Building

AUBURN, Ala.—With timber being used much faster than it is being replaced, Alabamians are turning their attention to buildings constructed of steel, and to the use of Alabama mined and manufactured products.

To illustrate the wide variety of buildings which may be constructed of steel, the "Tennesteel Homestead" has been established two miles south of Birmingham on the Montgomery Highway.

Saturday, June 22nd, has been set as the formal opening date for the Homestead, at which time visitors will observe a cottage, garage, poultry house, barn, and fences constructed of steel. After that date the project will be open to the public at all times.

"Tennesteel Homestead will be more than a show place, illustrating the new steel trend in small buildings," said an official announcement. Truck and feed crops will be grown to illustrate the advantages of basic slag another Alabama-manufactured product recognized and recommended by agricultural authorities throughout the South as one of the most profitable of all soil conditioners and stimulants to growth and crop yields.

COLUMBIANA SOLILOQUY

By BILL SIMS

Since this is the first of the month and the majority of us have just received those little slips of paper that come around the first of every month. In case you don't know what I'm talking about, they are the monthly bills. So I have decided to write a short column this week to relieve the strain, which I know must be colossal. Imagine trying to read little Willie's column and balance the family budgets at the same time, preposterous!

Believe it or not, but Lawyer Ellis was seen in one of his most unusual "hurry" moods. He was ankling down the main drag the other p. m., and stopped long enough to hold a lengthy chat with a very very charming lady. "What's the matter Lawyer, losing ye ole speed?"

If weather conditions permit I know of many a watermellon, and a lot of ice cream that will be consumed today, July 4th, and likewise many a tummy ache, when all of us go picniking on the various river banks. There is also to be a dance at the Airport the 4th, so come out and dance to the smooth, soothing music of Fred Waring and his Pennsylvanians—excuse me boys, I meant the Rhythm 'Ristocrats. You know it confuses me to distingush between the two orchestras, of course Freddy could'ent compete with L. B. Jr.'s trumpet, which is the genuine Clyde McCoy — (Thank goodness Clyde dos'ent read this column).

Now folks if your news paper is'ent printed correctly this week, I'll explain the reason why, and I'm sure you will excuse him. You see, Mr. George Richardson, our printer, works very hard, in fact some nights he pounds out news until the wee hours of the morning. Monday the sweet'est thing this side of heaven (in George' opinion) blew into town, so little Georgie has gone gaga. Remember George, just keep cool and don't get excited.

Now if you will excuse me, I'll leave you with columns of love, your smalltalk correspondent, who just found out "That the lad who had the most difficulty describing the shortest distance between two points, grew up to be JIM SEALES, our local taxi-driver. —Bill Sims.

Excess Cotton Acres Will Be Destroyed

AUBURN, Ala. — Farmers who have overplanted their allotted cotton acreage will be asked to remove the excess froc cultivation or else forfeit their contracts and all benefit payments received, reports Walter L. Randolph, secretary of the State Allotment Board.

Committeemen are at present checking the cotton acreage. They have been instructed to measure the fields with all possible accuracy.

Sell Scrub Bulls Now, Advises Burns

AUBURN, Ala.—By using pure-bred bulls out of high-producing cows, Alabama dairymen can improve their dairy herds at very smaller cost, states F. W. Burns, extension livestock specialist.

"The cooperative bull association is one method which enables dairymen to adopt a low-cost, long-time herd-improvement program", he says.

"Remember that your pasture herd depends on your present bull and if you are still using a scrub bull you had better sell him while prices are good and cooperate with your neighbor in putting a production-bred bull in your community", he writes the dairymen of the State. "Your county agent and dairy department at Auburn will be glad to assist you with this necessary and worthwhile work."

Forest, Park Acreage Is Increasing Rapidly

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Alabama's system of State Parks and State Forests is becoming a leading feature in the development of the Commonwealth, according to compilations being prepared by the State Commission of Forestry with the assistance of the office of the Comptroller. Figures compiled through March 31 by Examiner J. C. Ard indicate that the State Park system included at the close of that period some 15,650 acres. State Forest areas for the same period totaled 4,269 acres. In the latter connection, all unused State lands are State Forests by general statute, but the figures stated comprise only those areas specifically developed and administered for such purposes.

The excess of acreage in the State Parks as compared with the State Forests is due largely to the fact that the National Park Service system of cooperation with the states enables the latter to comply with the Federal requirements as to Emergency Conservation Work more readily in the case of Park areas than for State Forest tracts. Undoubtedly the State Forest acreage will increase quite rapidly in the comparatively near future.

Of the total acreage in the State Park system, some 10,855 acres were acquired by donation from public spirited citizens. Most of the remainder of the Park acreage was necessarily purchased, much of it at a very low rate per acre making it practically equivalent to a donation.

Payments Increased On Diseased Cattle

AUBURN, Ala.—The government has increased from $20 to $25 the maximum indemnity payment that may be made for dairy and beef cattle reacting to the official tests for tuberculosis or Bang's disease.

The payment was raised because of higher values and partly because of more rigid sanitary requirements involving expense to cattle owners in controlling Bang's disease and complying with the designated means of preventing further infestation, reports Secretary Wallace. Although $25 is the new maximum amount, actual payment is governed as heretofore by the appraised value of the animal.

In the case of purebred cattle the maximum indemnity of $50 remains unchanged.

Ways To Control Lice And Mites Are Given

AUBURN, Ala.—Lice and mites, two harmful poultry pests which do over a million dollars of damage to Alabama poultry flocks annually, can be controlled by poultrymen and farmers giving their poultry houses and flocks a little care.

John E. Ivey, extension poultry specialist, advises that mites be controlled by, first, "cleaning the house thoroughly, removing all litter, droppings, and nest material." He said that the second step is to "spray the interior of the house, especially the roosts and nests, with some material which penetrates the cracks and crevices where the mites hide and breed.

"There are a number of sprays for this purpose," he advises. "The coal tar or creosol spray or used crankcase oil will help if painted around the roosting quarters and nests.

"Another satisfactory spray for mites is made by mixing one ounce of common coap, one tablespoonful of 40% nicotine sulphate, and one gallon of lukewarm water. Use any of the above spray materials liberally."

Mr. Ivey states that lice are easier to control because they stay on the birds. "To rid the flock of lice put one or two drops of black leaf 40 (40% nicotine sulphate) under the wings and on the thighs of each bird. This individual treatment is best done at night after birds have gone to roost. Usually one individual treatment will kill all the lice on the birds and will last long enough to kill those hatched from eggs on the feathers at the time the treatment is administered. With this method used one ounce of black leaf 40 will treat approximately 125 birds."

Culling Poultry Is Found Profitable

AUBURN, Ala.—Careful culling of the poultry flock will increase the income at the present time and will make the fowls more profitable during the coming fall and winter, says John E. Ivey, poultry specialist of the Alabama Extension Service, who advises farmers to give their flocks a good culling between now and November.

As a rule, hens which molt late in the season are the best layers, he says. He also states that good layers usually have good length and breadth of body, with a wide span between the pelvic or lay bones, and soft, pliable skin in the abdomen. The abdomen is hard with a narrow span between pelvic bones of a poor producer.

The comb and wattles of a laying hen are large, red and of a glossy appearance. The comb of a hen which has ceased laying is small, contracted, dry and covered with a white scale.

Yellow color in shanks and beat at this time of year is an indication that the hen has not laid recently—for the color fades as the hen lays. If the color has faded out the hen has usually been laying heavily.

Bag Worms Found Throughout State

AUBURN, Ala.—Arborvitaes are being attacked by bag worms, announces Prof. J. M. Robinson, head of the entomology department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, who recommends that farmers and gardeners take immediate action in controlling the pest.

"If only a small number of trees is attacked they can be hand-picked," he says. "If spraying is deemed necessary use 4 pounds arsenate of lead and 4 pounds of hydrated lime to 50 gallons of water; or if dusting is desirable mix at the rate of one pound arsenate of lead to 5 pounds of hydrated lime." One application should control the worms, but if it does not, further applications should be made as needed.

Social and Personal Mention

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

JULY 5TH, 1935.

In years gone by, newspapers of July 5th were always packed with accounts of the hundreds of injuries that had occurred on the previous day from Fireworks and Explosives. Many deaths were reported, and innumerable cases of blindness and maiming. Property loss customarily ran far into the thousands. Fortunately, many communities have now out-lawed fireworks and have learned that Independence Day can be celebrated just as effectively without endangering the lives of the citizens.

A timely slogan suggested by the National Board of Fire Underwriters: "Don't Disturb The Peace", seems very appropriate.

If you have the urge to shoot off fireworks, it might pay you to think that one little accident may cause blindness, loss of limb, a dangerous burn, and perhaps death. A loud explosion from fireworks may be FUN —but they are not worth the gruesome price we sometimes pay.

So, it is—"Watch your step"—time today! Take it easy! Do not speed up the old motor and try and pass the other fellow without giving him any warning. Watch for curves! Stop, look and listen for the locomotive! Slow down! Relax!

According to figures compiled by the National Society for Prevention of Blindness, 29 persons lost their lives and 3,083 persons were injured last Fourth of July in the United States on account of celebrations. Let's plan a day filled with happiness —but temper the happiness and sanity!

Walter Head, prominent young business man of Bessemer, Alabama, has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head in Columbiana. Mr. Head was for a number of months connected with the Democrat staff of workers, and we personally enjoyed a rambling chat concerning "ups and downs" incident to the newspaper game "away back when" "The Voice of Democracy" was a tiny little "squeak", and far removed from the lustry "bray" you now hear each week in this newspaper office. Hurry back Walter, it really isn't so bad after you learn to "take it". Bitterness does not last long, fortunately, and wonderful things like Music, Friends and Newspapers (?) linger on forever.

P. O. Davis, Director of Extension Work, of Auburn, was the guest of A. A. Lauderdale on Friday. While in Columbiana Mr. Davis paid a thoughtful call to the Democrat office, and we personally appreciated the "break" from the days rather monotonous routine. Reminiscing with this friend of long standing was the high spot of the week for "yours truly".

Mr. and Mrs. Felton Goodwin, of Birmingham, spent the week-end in Columbiana with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Goodwin. Mr. Goodwin is another "home town boy" who has made good in a big way in the Magic City—he holds a responsible position with the Internal Revenue officials. Wonder what the Magic City would do without Shelby County boys? Someday we shall attempt to count the number of citizens we now have in Birmingham. Fact is, the personnel of Columbiana has changed more than any place we know, and we honestly meet more people whom we know from Columbiana in Birmingham, than wepossibly see in a week right here. Thats the sign we are "growing"—"progressing" etc.——and we heartily welcome the new comers. Try and find any little place the size of Columbiana with a more charming citizenship! It is one of those things that can't be done!

Mrs. R. D. Crim, of Longview, sends in a renewal subscription to the Democrat, and with it words of encouragement which happily begin a new week. She states the Democrat has become an "essential article" in her home and she would not "give it up for anything". Thanks a lot little lady—we shall be delighted to continue our journalistic pilgrimage into your home where we are so cordially welcomed.

R. M. Hollis, of Sterrett, is another life long Democrat, and former member of the Democratic Executive Committee, who proves his personal interest in this weekly of ours, by sending in seven renewal subscriptions Monday. Mr. Hollis is in the neighborhood of 80 years old, his friends tell us here, and we doubly appreciate his efforts in his community in our behalf. We sincerely hope to have the privilege of welcoming him into our office when he visits Columbiana again, and personally extend our gratitude for this loyalty.

Several hundred names will have to be stricken from the long list of Democrat subscribers if the subscription is not paid up! We sincerely hope to hear from you this week.

County Court was in regular session all day Monday, Judge Len C. Walker disposing of a number of cases docketed.

The Board of Revenue held a regular meeting on Monday, July 1, Chairman John Lyon, presiding.

Columbiana is going "air minded" and commercial planes continue to soar and roar above us. So far, we have kept our little "ears" close to theh ground and our pedal extremities firmly planted on the hectic pavement—but you never can tell what minute we will take Odell Garirison up on an invitation to fly with him and snatch an interview on our way. It must be rather thrilling, flying through space, clutching for a cloud, a moon beam, or a bit of star dust. Suspect we shall soon be "chasing rainbows" on the Milky Way. We are rather intrigued by the idea presented, and would not mind travelling this very minute somewhere East of the Sun and West of the Moon.

Dr. H. W. James, of Alabama College, spent Tuesday in Columbiana.

"Buddy" Tinney, former resident of Columbiana, now making his home in Tarrant City, spent several days in Columbiana visiting relatives and friends.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats played to a large number of enthusiastic dancers and visitors on last Saturday night at the Airport. One of the best dances of the season was enjoyed and they were urged to stage a special dance on July 4th—so, meet your friends at this popular place and dance to the melodies of these music makers who are really becoming quite "top notch" in their individual interpretations of the modern tunes of the day.

YAMAKITA has undergone a thorough draining and scrubbing as far as the Swimming Pool goes, and will be ready for the large crowd of picnickers on July 4th. Swims are 15 cents each and a lovelier pool would be hard to find.

Mr. and Mrs. P. O. Luck and Miss Ruth Luth have returned from a trip to Pensacola, Mobile, and other points along the Gulf Coast. Mrs. Luck (Mr. Luck's mother), of Enigma, Georgia, accompanied them home and will be a guest in their home for several weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Head, of Montevallo, and Miss Sarah Head, of Livingston, Alabama, spent Monday in Columbiana, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head. Mr. Head has just returned from a vacation spent in Florida, and looks "just great". No one has ever left Columbiana and been more sincerely missed by Personal Mention, than this friend of ours whose cheerful philosophy and friendly interest helped us over any "bump" we happened to encounter, and made every effort seem worthwhile, no matter how futile the result. We were delighted to have the happy privilege of again welcoming the trio to Columbiana.

"The Flapper Grandmother", a Wayne P. Sewell production, will be staged in the High School Auditorium on July 11 and 12th. This musical comedy is sponsored by the Rhythm 'Ristocrats and a large crowd is expected to be present.

Miss Elizabeth Horsley, of Dothan, spent the week-end with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Horsley.

Mrs. Billie Mullen (Evelyn Ellis), of Dothan, is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Ellis in Columbiana.

Mrs. Wailes Carter and Loren Carter have returned from St. Vincent's Hospital where they were operated on for appendicitis.

We are missing our good friend, J. B. Turner, Sr., who has been confined to his home for several days due to illness. About the most pleasant part of the newspaper racket for us. is the "social" part of the game—and when friendly souls like Mr. Turner and others, who have a habit of stopping by the office for a daily confab, are "knocked out", the day does not seem one-half so worth-while.

Miss Charlie Verne Tinney had as her guest the first of the week, Miss Mable Peters, of Deatsville, Alabama.

It has been suggested by a prominent wide-awake business man of Columbiana who is an ardent baseball fan, that each town which has a team playing in the Shelby County League, contribute a certain amount toward a silver Loving Cup or a Pennant and present it to the winning team at the end of the season. This seems to us an excellent idea, one that will furnish competition enough to make the games more interesting. Let us hear what you think about it!

Rob Head, son of Dr. and Mrs. Pike Head in Bessemer, was a visitor in Columbiana on Monday.

If there is anything more delicious than ripe peaches iced, with sugar and cream—well, we haven't found it! And right here we gratefully acknowledge a lovely basket of peaches which was left on our desk one day last week. Just who this donor was, we can only guess from a chance remark—but "someone said" that—"A good looking distinguished gentleman with a blue shirt and a snapped down Panama hat left them while you were out". The only fellow we can think of who answers this description is Chairman John Lyon. We wonder IF he did! If this REALLY happened we are prepared to believe in the New Deal, and mark this tribute up as the first honest-to-goodness thing to WARRANT it. Will you SIGN for it President LYON, or are we all wrong about it again? At any rate, you are all right 'cept when you ROAR at me about something—and that's not very often. Let us know about this little matter. We do not want to accuse you of something you did NOT do, but we certainly want to find the fellow who added this delicious desert to several meals for us. He is a "peach" of a fellow whoever he is!

Mrs. Earl Wood left Tuesday morning for Pineapple, Alabama, where she will coach a play.

Thrilling escapades and air rides continue to hold the high spot in Columbiana. Bolin Cooper of the Columbiana Savings Bank, and Tom Tinney, young son of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Tinney were strolling around the Airport on Tuesday afternoon when a Fairchilds plane flew down, and the pilot cordially extended an invitation to accompany him to Montgomery. No sooner said than done and pronto—the trio land in Maxwell Field, caught a bus and came home before anyone in Columbiana knew they were gone. That's pulling a fast one! Mr. Cooper stated he knew it was "crazy" but the thrill was worth it. He further stated if he had the "kale" he would buy one immediately. So watch out! Several prospective owners are in the market and the Airport may become a privat Hanger for Columbiaan citizens who prefer to pilot their own little air ship.

DOES YOUR HUSBAND WEAR AN OVERCOAT IN SUMMERTIME?

"FOOLISH!" you say. Of course; but is it any more foolish than cooking during midsummer weather on an old fashioned stove?

Actually it's lots worse to stay indoors and cook on a blistering, sizzling midsummer day than to wear an overcoat outdoors in July or August. If your husband doesn't believe it, let him try it sometime.

We Know How to Spend
Only the Electric Chair
Anglo-French Rift
Surprise for Blue Eagle

Uncle Sam is learning to spend. A few lines tell you that the Bankhead bill, making the government guarantee a loan of one thousand million dollars to help tenant farmers buy their farms, is passed. No fuss or excitement about it.

Arthur Brisbane

Senator King wanted to cut the one thousand millions to two hundred millions, but was "shouted down."

Do you recall the excitement when Theodore Roosevelt wanted to build the Panama canal for two or three hundred millions?

Now "one billion" is almost "small change."

Some young criminals, apparently, can be adequately managed only by the electric chair. In their case it seems useless to talk of reform, or "another chance." They are distinctly of the rattlesnake class.

Consider a twenty-five-year-old machinist, captured in Peoria, who confessed to murder when the clothing of a dead girl was tossed into his lap. "Yes, I did it," he sobbed. This young murderer kept a diary, which in one month recorded 18 attacks on young women. The electric chair should cure his sobbing.

In the lute of Anglo-French friendship and understanding there comes a rift, wide enough to let a coach and four drive through. England, dealing directly with Germany and Hitler, now rejects the French suggestion of a "consultative pact," which would compel Britain to consult France before reaching any important diplomatic conclusions.

That ought to interest this country, which agreed to consult everybody on earth before building more ships, or tilting its big guns to the most effective angle.

It is stated, bluntly, by British officials: "Britain is placing greater stress on friendly co-operation with Germany, closer consultations with the British dominions, and a steady drift toward co-operation with the United States."

News from the Department of Commerce would surprise the recent deceased Blue Eagle, and others: "Business shows sharp upturn throughout country since death of Blue Eagle."

This is the skeleton announcement; the details show retail sales increasing, in spite of abominable spring weather, in some of the big cities.

Union labor demands that all United States railroads be nationalized, owned by the people, run by the government. Reason? Private owners do not know how to run them. The roads would be bought, not confiscated, presumably, which would mean twenty to thirty more billions of national debt.

Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Laura La Plante—surely you know her—after work on the set near Monte Carlo's gambling room dressed up and presented themselves for an evening's entertainment.

The doorkeeper said bluntly: "You work in Monaco, so you may not enter the gambling rooms. That's the rule." To their amazement they did not enter the gambling rooms, although young Mr. Fairbanks is said to have threatened to buy the whole institution.

Monte Carlo wisdom is in that rule. The Casino spreads money among Monaco's inhabitants, but will not take the inhabitants' money, and so avoids trouble.

Another wise ruler is Mr. Bradley, who owns the tourists' "wide open" gambling house at Palm Beach, but will not allow natives to lose in his place. When you gamble, you know, you lose. If you do not know it, try.

Mussolini has a habit, annoying to Britons especially, of digging up past history. He is expected to tell the British: "I want a protectorate over Ethiopia, with a free hand, and I invite you to remember what happened to Germany's colonies after the war. You promised to give Italy her share if she joined the allies, which she did. The war ended, and you British gobbled up all the German colonies worth having."

Sheriff Miller of Martinez, Calif., knows that the weakest thing in superstitious man is his mind. Attack that and you have him. Anacleto Torrest said he had not killed Area Cabrera. In a locked drawer in a cell occupied by Torrest the sheriff concealed a loud speaker, muffled to make it sound ghostly, and continually Torrest, not knowing whence it came, heard a voice saying in Spanish: "You killed me. I am Area's ghost. You had better confess. You know you killed me."

Torrest thought it unwise to ignore the advice of a ghost and confessed accordingly.

The 4th of July PARADE

The Day We Celebrate

GOOD old freedom and equality have been with us so long in these United States—and who shall deny that we have them?—that it has become a "property of easiness" and we are prone to forget, with all the Independence days we have observed since that far day of the first one born of the spirit of '76, just how it all came about. It has been some time since we have heard a "Fourth of July Oration" or heard the "Declaration of Independence" read at the fair grounds. So, let's take a moment's pause and do a little looking backward and recover, perhaps, a few forgotten thrills, advises a writer in the Kansas City Star.

The hall in which our freedom was born is still standing there in Independence Square, Philadelphia, little changed with time. Some of the chairs the delegates sat in and the desk upon which the president of the congress wrote his "John Hancock" are there. Portraits of the signers look down from the walls. But who today can recall the actual happenings of those fateful years of June and July, 159 years ago, when our independence was in travail? What actually happened on July 4, the subsequently dedicated day? When was the immortal document proclaimed to the nation? Was the great step taken amid a tumult of shouting and bell-ringing and firing of cannon, as it came to be celebrated in after years?

Glorious in legend as was that first Fourth 159 years ago, it was a day of deep and cautious solemnity. They were not noise-makers who assembled to launch a new nation "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." The day fell upon a rainy Thursday. In Philadelphia's old statehouse there was no stately ceremony. No crowds were waiting, ouside as yet to hear "the joyful news." In fact, there was an atmosphere of grave uncertainty in the hall as to the fate of the great charter of American liberty. There were a good many minds that were not fully made up as to the wisdom of the declaration.

To state the historical truth, by the record, independence had already been declared July 2, two days before. It was on that day that Richard Henry Lee's resolution, introduced in the congress some weeks before, was passed by a bare majority, declaring "that the United Colonies are, and of Right ought to be, Free and Independent States, and that they are Absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them, and the State of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved." In effect that action was a severing of the political tie between the colonies and Great Britain. Why, then, is not July 2 the "day we celebrate?"

Because those fathers of the Republic recognized the gravity of the step they were about to take and that it meant war and bloodshed. They were practical, methodical and just men, and men bred in the parliamentary usages and constitutional law. They recognized that more than a mere resolution was necessary to justify their action to the world, and that "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind required that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation." They were determined not to go before the world as mere "revolutionists and rebels," but statesmen representing a just cause and a new ideal of government "with the consent of the governed."

So, July 4 became the day we celebrate because it was not until then that the congress was ready to go before the judgment of the people and of other nations with a candid statement of the causes that impelled them to the severance of the ties that had long bound them to the mother country. The act was not consummated without long and careful deliberation. The idea of independence had been long a-borning. The fashioning of the great document that bade defiance to the king and proclaimed a new nation was not as smooth and easy a task as it may appear from a reading of the beautifully engrossed transcript in the archives at Washington now accepted as "the original Declaration of Independence."

The idea of a declaration of independence had its birth 15 years prior to July 4, 1776. James Otis, the "fiery-tongued orator," sounded the first note in the state house at Boston in 1761. Nearly a month before the writing of the formal declaration, Richard Henry Lee, as spokesman for the Virginia delegation in congress, introduced his resolution which, so far as the record was concerned, finally became the formal declaration. It precipitated a serious debate, for there were many who "were not ready for the question." On June 11, a committee was appointed to prepare a suitable declaration of causes, in support of Lee's resolution, composed of Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston.

Reading Declaration of Independence From Balcony of State House.

The task of formulating the causes and writing the document fell to the facile pen of Thomas Jefferson. But it was not finally accepted wholly as Jefferson wrote it. Many passages were stricken out and several amendments attached to it. But on July 4, Jefferson's final draft of the "form of announcing the fact of separation" was formally adopted and ordered printed and distributed to the assemblies, conventions and councils of safety throughout the colonies. This printing had only two signatures—those of John Hancock, president, and Charles Thomson, secretary of the congress. On July 19, congress ordered the declaration to be "fairly engrossed on parchment," and it was not until August 2, 1776, that the great sheepskin was unrolled in the presence of the Continental Congress. Fifty of the fathers signed the document on that day. Six did not affix their signatures until a later date. And one, Thomas McKean of Delaware, did not sign it until five years later.

But with the signatures of Hancock and Thomson, the document became official, so far as the outside world was concerned, on July 4. On July 8, Washington had it read to the army, and to the public from the balcony of the statehouse, a day that became one of public rejoicing.

Weight of Liberty Bell

THE Liberty Bell, which is still preserved in Independence hall in Philadelphia, weighs 2,080 pounds.

"Give Me Liberty Or Give Me Death"

THE orator had a definite place in the building of America. In the Eighteenth century oratory was a fine art and not the lost one that it is today. Therefore, writes Elizabeth Ellicott Poe, in the Washington Post, the place that Patrick Henry held and holds in the affections of the people for the part he played before and during the American revolution is one that cannot be too highly estimated.

Hanover county, Va., which has given many notable men and women to the Old Dominion's Hall of Fame, has every right to be proud of the achievements of this Henry of Studley. As early as 1763 he was sounding the keynotes of freedom in unmistakable tones. He was a country lawyer who had made an early marriage rather foolishly and was struggling to keep a growing family in the necessities of life when, in 1763, he became aroused in behalf of what was known as "The Parsons' Cause," concerning the right of the clergy to receive the same price for their tobacco as other Colonists. In 1765 Henry was elected to the Virginia House of Burgesses. From time he took his seat he introduced act after act defining the rights of the colony, especially in the matter of the obnoxious stamp tax and, against great opposition, carried all of his resolutions through the sheer force of his logic and his eloquence.

This made Patrick Henry the leader of the colony, in many senses of the word.

Patrick Henry came rightly by his love of freedom, his historical sense and powers of oratory. For he was a cousin of the historian, William Robertson, of Scotland, and of the mother of Lord Brougham. His mother was a Winston of that noted English family and his father saw to it that he had a classical education and every possible advantage in the way of proper learning.

In 1774 Henry was foremost in the call to form a Continental congress. George Mason, author of the Bill of Rights, himself an author and patriot of more than usual ability, said of Henry: "He is by far the most powerful speaker I ever heard. Every word he says not only engages, but commands the attention, and your passions are no longer your own when he addresses them. But his eloquence is the smallest part of his merit. He is in, my opinion, the first man upon this continent, as well in abilities as in public virtues, and had he lived in Rome about the time of the first Punic war, when the Roman people had arrived at their meridian glory, and their virtues not tarnished, Henry's talents must have put him at the head of that glorious commonwealth."

Of course, it was in his great speech, familiar to every schoolboy in which he shouted for all to hear—kings and commoners alike—"Give me liberty or give me death" that he rose to his supreme heights of eloquence and achieved for himself undying and deserved fame.

It is said that many of his predictions as to the future of the federal government read like prophecy in the light of subsequent history.

Too Much Expected of "Ideal" Man or Woman?

What happens when the most beautiful girl weds the ideal man? They are, of course, the leading characters in every adolescent's dream. The trouble is that in real life they don't often seem to get together, remarks a commentator on events and things.

But for once they have. A reader sends us the following item from a newspaper, which reads like a fairy tale:

"Northwestern university today was the scene of what undergraduates believed was just about the most perfect college romance anybody could ask for.

"The engagement of the young lady, voted the campus' 'most beautiful' and 'most popular' coed, to the man selected as the university's 'ideal man,' was announced."

"Do you think," asks the reader who sent in the clipping, "that they have more chance for happiness than the ordinary couple?"

I am sorry to pour cold water on romance. But in my opinion this favored couple starts with a handicap.

The "most beautiful girl" and the "ideal man" will expect a great deal of each other. If the rose-colored glasses of love can find perfection in the ordinary run of us—which it is difficult to live up to in the hard, revealing light of every day—how much more complicated the task of those who have aroused even greater expectations?

The most beautiful girl cannot remain enchanting for every hour of every day; the "ideal man" will have moments of being downright human—which will seem pretty terrible to the girl who takes him on the word "ideal."

Success in marriage so often depends just on the matter of viewpoint. The relationship of what we have got with what we expected plays a no less part than the actual fundamental qualities of the people involved. That is why marriages of fairly mature people, neither of whom has been coddled into expecting all life's plums to fall into their laps, are so often more successful than the great romances.

From the bottom of our hearts, good wishes for the most beautiful girl and the ideal man. Also warning that their happiness will be not gratuitous, that they will have to work at least as hard for it as the rest of us.

Ancient Greece's High Stage of Civilization

New discoveries in Athens besides being of scientific value start thoughts that show the comparative unimportance of the recent revolution in Greece, says Pathfinder Magazine. A cemetery dating back to 1500 B. C. and containing numerous undisturbed and perfectly preserved skeletons was uncovered 50 feet below the ancient Athenian senate adjoining the Acropolis. Two thousand years before the burial of these bodies, which had been interred for 2,500 years, Greek civilization emerged from the Stone age. By the time these particular old Greeks lived civilization in Greece had struggled upward against countless reverses to a high stage. The ruling class of the time lived in well-made, sanitary buildings, with bath chambers, windows, and sliding doors. They rode horse-drawn chariots on paved streets, and were entertained by bull-fights, boxing, and armed combat. Art had risen to a high level and close commercial intercourse was carried on with Egypt. And about three centuries after these now skeletonized men and women had ceased to live came the war with Troy. Then came the Dorian invasion at the beginning of the Iron age—more wars—ups and downs in civilization—conquest by Rome, and the following collapse. Thus the recent revolt was hardly an incident in Greek history.

Missed Accustomed Toil

Honest Tom, a horse, liked his work so well that he refused to retire. After many years of coal hauling in Tredegar, Wales, the animal was placed by his master on a farm, ten miles away, to rest. A few days later Tom reappeared at the mine. He had found his way alone, jumping fences and breaking at least one mountain gate. He had returned over a road which he had traversed only once when he was being taken away.

Summer Months Best To Cut Winter Wood

AUBURN, Ala. — Slack seasons during the summer months offer excellent opportunities for farmers to harvest the next winter's wood supply, says Lyle Brown, extension forester, who declares that wood cut during the hot summer months will dry out by Fall and have much higher fuel value for its weight than if used green.

"In cutting wood during the Summer there is no danger of bugs in cutting hardwood, but care should be exercised if pine is cut to see that all the tree is used, even to the larger limbs, and the small ones should be piled and burned," he advises. "This will prevent the attack of pine beetles which will attack freshly-cut trees and spread to live ones. Using the entire tree is a good practice, anyway."

THE SAME COUNTRY

By ROBERT V. FLEMING
Vice President, American Bankers Association

There is a growing appreciation, both on the part of the people and the Government, of the earnest and sincere efforts being made by bankers to aid in recovery. It is desirable that we miss no opportunity to foster public understanding of the bankers' problems. We are living in an age of complex and upset economic conditions. Our affairs are closely inter-related not only within the confines of our own borders but extend to other countries throughout the world.

R. V. FLEMING

The Greatest Difficulty

I think the greatest difficulty we have to overcome in America today is due to our impatience with the progress we are making towards recovery. We must realize that while the Government can help by directing some measures for relief and recovery, we must help ourselves by doing our share to give impetus to the Government's efforts. We have the same country and basically the same businesses, factories and people we had prior to the depression, and business initiative must step forward if real recovery is to be achieved.

The theory we often hear expressed that banks create business activity is wrong. Banking can only make a supplementary contribution to business activity. Bankers have the facilities and the desire to extend credit, but business must initiate activity by seeking the credit which is readily available to all worthy borrowers.

Let it be said for business, however, that business men are as eager as bankers to contribute towards recovery. I think some of the trouble lies in the fact that too many legislative measures have been proposed for reform which leave an uncertainty in the minds of business leaders as to their eventual outcome and effect. Consequently, they hesitate to expand until the probable effects of such legislation are known.

MAKING IT HARDER FOR BANK ROBBERS

Mechanical Devices That Impede the Work of Bandits Described by Bankers Association Official

The impediments which the hard working bank robber now meets in plying his trade among small as well as large banks are described by James E. Baum, Deputy Manager American Bankers Association in charge of its Protective Department, in an article in "Banking" published by his organization.

"Protective equipment will minimize if not prevent loss," Mr. Baum says, "such as the silent automatic type of alarm, approved tear gas systems, several styles of bandit resisting enclosures and timelocks, or safes equipped with timelocks, which can be set for intervals of a few minutes.

"The silent automatic alarms operate in the beginning of a holdup and through actions carried out by the bank employees in obedience to the bandits' own commands. They are adaptable to the smaller banks which continue to be easiest targets for bank robbery.

Tear Gas Systems

"Tear gas systems have their advantages as self-contained protective units where outside aid is inconvenient or too remote from the bank to be effective. One objection to the use of tear gas in preventing holdup is the need of pressing a lever or button to discharge it. Although this necessary action seems too much to expect of the victims in a crisis where their lives are in jeopardy, the fact remains that tear gas systems have defeated bank robbery. Its deterrent value is also important.

"Different styles of bandit resisting enclosures are available. The lock manufacturers also produce timelocks which can be set to open at intervals of five minutes or longer. These locks are especially adapted for attachment to small safes or chests for safeguarding surplus funds while the bank is open for business."

Stock of Central Banks Usually Privately Owned

Of all the central banks at present existing there are only four whose stock is owned by the government. The newest central bank is that of Canada, which opened its doors only a few months ago after a most exhaustive study had been made of the experience of all nations with the result that the stock of the Bank of Canada is privately owned.

Agriculture and Industry

Returns for the first quarter of 1935 for industrial corporations publishing quarterly reports show net profits 21 per cent more than for the same in 1934. The total farm value of all important crops, exclusive of livestock, rose in 1934 to $4,782,423,000, as compared with $4,114,265,000 in the previous year and $2,882,195,000 in 1932.

LOAFERS WARNED THEY CAN'T GET PAY FROM W. P. A.

Workers assigned to projects in the Works Progress Administration program will be advised that upon receipt of their first pay check, their relief days will end, and further, that loafing on the job will not be tolerated.

Thad Holt, director of the WPA, July 8th released a copy of a statement which was read to all workers as they began their jobs on projects Monday and as others are assigned to work through the reemployment office.

The statement emphasizes the requirement of "a full day's work for every day you are on the job" and that eligibility for relief from Federal funds will cease with their first pay checks. It also advises that workers will be expected to accept private employment offered through the National Reemployment Service.

The qualifications for administrative personnel—or those employed in clerical and supervisory capacities—were listed by Director Holt, the rules being designed to prevent, insofar as possible, any political preference or nepotism.

The qualifications for administrative personnel are:

1. Qualified for position according to classification of Federal Works Progress Administration.
2. Will not be a candidate for public office within a year, and not at present a public office holder.
3. Not related by blood or marriage (closer than first cousin) to person already employed on PWA administrative pay roll.
4. Not related to public official in locality employed.
5. Able to make bond in position requiring it.
6. Registered with National Reemployment Service.

Definite regulations have been formulated by President Roosevelt for the assignment of workers to projects in the Works Progress Administration. These regulations, Mr. Holt emphasized, are to be observed to the letter.

They define among other things who shall be eligible for work, the pay they shall receive.

The major regulations governing assignment and eligibility of workers follows:

1. All workers must be registered with the National Reemployment Office and only thos regestered will be called. All work assignments and classifications will be made by the National Reemployment Service and by no other agency.
2. The initial allotment of workers will be those whose names were on relief rolls in May.
3. Each worker will work 140 hours a month.
4. Monthly wages will be paid upon a definite scale as follows:

Counties where largest city has a population of 100,000 or more, according to 1930 Federal census, unskilled labor, $30 a month; semi-skilled, $49; skilled, $68; professional or white collar workers, $75.

In counties where largest town is between 50,000 and 100,000 population, unskilled labor, $27; semi-skilled, $43; skilled, $58, and professional, $64.00.

Counties whose largest town is between 25,000 and 50,000, unskilled, $25; semi-skilled, $38; skilled, $50, and professional, $55.

Counties where largest town is between 5,000 and 25,000, unskilled, $22; semi-skilled, $32; skilled, $42, and professional, $46.

Counties where the largest town is less than 5,000 population, unskilled, $19; semi-skilled, $27; skilled, $35, and professional, $39.

5. Workers will be paid every two weeks.
6. Until the first check is received, workers will be continued on relief rolls.
7. No person under 16 years of age can be employed.
8. Only one member of a family may be employed.
9. A full day's work will be required of each employe.

Barbecue For Shelby County Is Planned

The Farmers and Business men of Shelby County are planning a picnic for July 25th, 1935. An attractive program is now being arranged. Watch this paper next week for further details. The place will be announced later—also the program.

SHELBY COUNTY TO GET MONEY FROM U. S. FOR SCHOOLS

J. L. Appleton, County Superintendent of Education, received a telegram on Monday from Congressman W. B. Oliver in which he stated the President had approved the allocation of $51,500 for the construction and repairs of schools throughout Shelby County.

The above good news represents the successful culmination of some hard work on the part of Supt. Appleton and his Board of Education in an endeavor to improve the schools of Shelby County and make them more comfortable for the children of the County.

Supt. Appleton stated that work would begin immediately on this worth-while project. Several hundred men will be called in to assist in the building of the new schools.

U.S. CCC CAMPS GET 19 SHELBY COUNTY BOYS AT LAST CALL

The following boys were enrolled in CCC Camps at the last call:

Joseph William Bramblett; Allen Hubbard Cost, Jr.; William T. Elliott; Eddie Leon Eubanks; Robert Horton; Lawrence W. Kelly; Mack Kirkpatrick; Joseph Franklin Lanningham; Carey Leighton McNair; Willie Edgar Ozley; Gordon Ferris Thomas; Roland Arnold Walker; Wm. Arthur Abernathy; Grover G. Cornwell; Wm. Frank Davidson; Avery Butler, colored; Curtis Corbin, colored; Robert Miller, colored; and Fred Taylor, colored.

Boys from relief families between the ages of eighteen and twenty-eight who pass the physical examination are eligible for camp under the present rules.

Within the past two years about one hundred and fifty Shelby County boys have been enrolled in CCC camps. They have been sent to camps in Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Mississippi and Tennessee.

Best Woman Speaker Will Be Given Trip

AUBURN, Ala.—The champion speaking farm woman in Alabama be given a trip to Chicago this winter to attend the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Contests are being conducted throughout the state by county councils of home demonstration clubs to find the best speaker in each county. After the county winners have been selected, district speaking contests will be held at which time three speakers will be selected from each of the three extension districts of the state. The nine winners in the district contests will participate in a state-wide contest to be held at Auburn during farmers' week late in July. The winner of the state contest will be given the trip to Chicago.

The women are preparing their own speeches on the subject "The Farm Home and the World Today."

Farmers Vote For Four AAA Programs

AUBURN, Ala.—Of the 2,918,678 farmers who voted in the cotton, wheat, corn-hog and tobacco referenda, 2,511,109 voted for continuation of the Agricultural Adjustment programs and only 407,983 voted against the programs.

STATE WOMEN WILL MEET JULY 13TH AT ALABAMA COLLEGE

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — Arrangements are complete for the conference of business women of Alabama at Alabama College July 13th, the final day of the second annual Student Career Conference here, announces Dr. Hallie Farmer, chairman of the committee in charge.

Registration will be held from 8:30 to 10 a. m. in Palmer Hall, the general program beginning at 10 a. m. Miss Rochelle Rodd Gachet, research chairman of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Birmingham, will serve as presiding officer. Following an address of welcome by President O. C. Carmichael, Lewis L. Stookey, director of public school music at Mobile, will sing.

Dr. Katherine Vickery, of the Alabama College faculty, will speak on tests for the business woman, and Miss Helen M. Voorhees, of Mount Holyoke College, will discuss professional hurdles in the feature talk. Miss Voorhees is leader of the Student Career Conference.

The general session will be resumed after lunch with three speakers scheduled, Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, of Alabama College, on "Reports on the Interviews;" Mrs. Mollie C. Walker, of the Women's division of the National Reemployment Service on "Employment of Professional Women in Alabama," and Miss Edna Orr, of Auburn, on "Occupational Opportunities for Women in Alabama."

A number of business women of Alabama have already registered and a large attendance is expected. It is the first time that this phase of the conference is being held in connection with the meeting of high school seniors on careers open to them. Last year Alabama College started the career conference program in the state, inviting Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse to be one of the speakers.

Delinquent Tax Payers Now Being Compiled

The list of delinquent tax payers in Shelby County is now being compiled in the Tax Collector's office for publication within the next few weeks.

The list of names of tax payers who have not paid their taxes for the year is about in line with the number of delinquents which were on the tax books at the same time last year.

Beat 13 in Shelby County is the banner beat. The records show all taxes PAID. There are no delinquents.

SUMMER TERM OF CIRCUIT COURT TO BEGIN ON JULY 22

The non jury Civil cases of the Shelby County Circuit Court have been set for trial on Monday, July 22nd. The Crimminal non jury cases are set for trial on Tuesday, July 23rd.

On Wednesday, July 24, pleadings will be settled and the Equity Docket called.

The Jury Term of the Circuit Court, heretofore held in September, will begin on Monday, August 19th, and all Civil Jury cases are on the docket for this week. The Criminal cases are set for the week beginning on Monday, August 26th.

The Grand Jury will be in session during this term of the Court.

The Summer Term of the Court has been called for August, instead of September, to accomodate the farmers who will not be engaged in gathering their crops at this time.

Executive Committee: Judge Claude Grayson, Mobile; Judge J. W. Strother, Dadeville; and Judge J. Russell McElroy, Birmingham.

Members of the Judge's Association met in executive session for the purpose of organization, and for introducing a bill calling on the Legislature to restore their salaries from the present $4,000 level to theh $5,000 a year they were paid before the Lapsley-Lusk act temporarily cut their remuneration.

Heart Drifts

DOMESTICITY

He sees me walking docile and serene
About my household tasks—I cook and clean,
For I have roofed his domicile with peace,
And daily let love's pigeons have release.

He would stand in hurt surprise, I know,
If I should take a loaf of bread and go,
Singing across the meadows, brown and bare,
Taking the path that leads to Anywhere.

And all the dust that I should ever find
Would be in little roads that twist and wind,
And all the mending I should ever do
Would be to stitch with thorns a rent or two.

He would ask the neighbors bitterly,
If four brick walls, a well, an apple-tree,
Were not enough for any woman born,
And gold was something anyone should scorn?

My heart may feel a feathery force of wings—
But duty ties it here with apron-strings!

REVERIE

I once was a dreamer of beautiful dreams
Woven with roseate braid;
I laugh, oh, laugh, when I think of them now,
Those wonderful dreams that I made.

Those dreams have vanished like the dreams
That spring in the mind of a child;
Yet fragments of them arise, even now
Making my heart more mild.

Along the way I've had little time
For the dreams of that distant day;
The sweetness of them lingers till now
And I'm glad it has been this way.

—(Wilson)

GROWTH

Toward what far end
I move, I do not know,
And just as long as I may go
On with the trend
Of things, I do not care—

Learning all that I can grasp
At any time and anywhere,
Doing what is to be done,
From sun to sun—

Accepting gratefully the clasp
Of any joy, and if pain comes,
To try and bear it gallantly
In mind and heart,

For either happiness or sorrow
Is each a part
Of growing toward a finer morrow—
For growing through both good and ill
Means PROGRESS—never standing still!

PRIZES TO BE GIVEN FOR BEST GARDENS IN SHELBY COUNTY

Master gardeners are to be chosen soon from the relief gardeners in Shelby County. The best gardens are to be selected by a point system suggested by the Rural Rehabilitation Division of the Alabama Relief Administration, Montgomery, and the owners of the best gardens are to be awarded prizes contributed by merchants and business men all over Shelby County.

The Shelby County Relief garden program has proven to be one of the most successful and helpful divisions of the county relief work. Much of the credit for this successful work is due to the five supervisors who are directly responsible for garden work done. The Shelby County supervisors are as follows: Mr. J. D. Ruffin, Helena; Mr. A. L. Busby, Calera; Mr. A. C. Arant, Calera; Mr. A. R. Cooper, Columbiana; and Mr. Robert Miller, Montevallo. Supervisors were placed in these districts because they are not provided with transportation and it is necessary that they work where the people are not so scattered.

The reports turned in each week by the garden supervisors show rapid progress in the garden movement of the County. Not only have more gardens been planted, but the quality of each has been constantly improved. Plans are now going forward for the planting of fall gardens, and indications at the present time are that these fall gardens are going to help many families to reduce the food budget.

The following contributions have been made for the prize to be awarded the master gardeners:

Jeter Mercantile Company, Montevallo, $1.00 seed or tools.

Montevallo Cash Store, Montevallo, one bushel irish potato seed.

Lucas Grocery Company, Montevallo, 100 pounds of fertilizer.

McGaughy Brothers, Montevallo, $1.00 garden seed.

F. W. Rogan Hardware Company, Montevallo, one garden fork.

F. F. Brasher Grocery Company, Shelby, one pint fly spray.

Shelby Cash Store, Shelby, one pound of coffee.

J. E. Bates Grocery Company, Shelby, 50 cents in merchandise.

Grady's 5c and 10c Store, Columbiana, one lady's or man's straw hat.

Columbiana Drug Company, Columbiana, one quart Rex fly spray.

Columbiana Cash Store, Columbiana, one 95c sack of flour.

T. R. Walton's Store, Columbiana, one garden hoe.

Columbiana Hardware Co., Columbiana, one garden trowel.

Max Lefkovits, Columbiana, one work shirt.

Baker's Cash Store, Columbiana, one pound of coffee.

A. P. McGhee Grocery Co., Columbiana, one peck of seed irish potatoes.

Yellow Front Cash Store, Columbiana, one straw hat.

Columbiana Savings Bank, Columbiana, 50 cents.

Davis Drug Company, Columbiana, 50 cents in merchandise.

Mr. Guy Roberts, Calera, 50 cents.

Mr. B. B. Swatts, Calera, 50 cents cash or seed.

J. H. Johnson Hdw. Co., Calera, 20 cents worth of turnip seed.

S. M. Tomlin Grocery Co., Calera, 60 cents worth of turnip seed.

P. Baer Grocery Company, Calera, one peck irish potato seed.

Calera Cash Store, Calera, one peck irish potato seed.

Cowart Drug Company, Calera, one pound of turnip seed.

Holcombe Mercantile, Calera, 50 cents worth of seed.

House Democrats Defy President—Lobbying for and Against Utilities Bill to Be Investigated—Senator Glass Bests Eccles.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REVOLT in congress against alleged dictatorial attempts of the administration reached a climax when the house, by the decisive vote of 258 to 148, rejected the "death sentence" in the utility holding companies bill as passed by the senate and demanded by the President. The record vote came on a motion to substitute the house bill placing utility holding companies under regulation of the securities and exchange commission for the senate bill which prescribed the dissolution of the holding companies of more than first degree beginning in 1940.

Rep. Brewster

The adoption of this motion killed the "death sentence." After substituting the house bill for the senate bill, the perfected measure was passed by a vote of 322 to 81.

Immediately after this action, the house voted unanimously for an investigation of alleged lobbying by both the supporters and the foes of the utility measure. During the debate on the bill it was frequently charged that the capitol was swarming with utility company lobbyists, and then came two serious accusations against the other side. Representative John H. Hoeppel of California, Democrat, asserted an unnamed administration lobbyist had offered to get California's relief allotment increased if Hoeppel would vote for the bill as the President wanted it. This didn't greatly impress the house, but later Representative Ralph O. Brewster of Maine, Republican, charged that Thomas G. Corcoran, a young brain truster who is co-author of the administration bill, had threatened cessation of construction of the $37,000,000 Passamaquoddy dam project in the congressman's district if Brewster should vote against the "death sentence."

Mr. Brewster said he did not believe the President was aware that such tactics were being used by his aids or would countenance them, and Rankin of Mississippi and Moran of Maine defended Mr. Roosevelt. But the President's contact man, Charles West, and Postmaster General Farley's lobbyist, Emil Hurja, had been so active among the house members that the resentment of the lawmakers was aroused and they gladly directed that the lobbying charges be investigated.

WHAT would be the final fate of the utility measure was doubtful. Senator Wheeler of Montana, after a call at the White House, said he was confident a satisfactory bill would come out of the conference, and if one did not, the measure would be allowed to die. In either case the war on the holding companies is likely to be made a major issue of the next Presidential campaign, and administration leaders are predicting that the Democratic congressmen who dared to vote against the "death sentence" will be defeated at the polls. These "doomed" men number 166, as against 131 Democrats who stood by the President.

Republican leaders were jubilant, professing to see in the episode the beginning of a real uprising against the President and his New Dealers; many neutral observers looked upon it as only a battle between the two lobbies in which the victory went to the utilities lobby.

IN THE battle between Senator Carter Glass and Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the federal reserve board, the former has, at this writing, scored the most points. The astute Virginian extracted from the Eccles-Currie banking bill most of the radical provisions that would have led to government or public ownership of the federal reserve system, and, indeed, practically rewrote the measure. Then his subcommittee handed it on to the senate banking and currency committee, which promptly gave the bill its approval, without a record vote, and after making only two minor changes.

Sen. Glass

Governor Eccles and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau expected to be called before the committee and were prepared to tell why the bill would not suit the administration, but the committee didn't give them a chance.

As passed by the house, the banking bill would give autocratic powers over the banking system to a politically dominated federal reserve board; and the party in power would have the authority to force the twelve reserve banks to lend unlimited amounts to the national treasury. Under the bill as rewritten by Glass, reserve board members are to be appointed for 14-year terms and are to be discharged only for cause; chief officers of the reserve banks are to be chosen by their directors, subject to reserve board approval, for five-year periods, and the reserve banks need not buy additional government bonds unless they choose to do so.

INVESTIGATION of the administration of the Virgin islands by a senate committee was certain to be lively. The very first witness heard, Charles H. Gibson, was threatened with jail by Secretary of the Interior Ickes for removing official documents from the files. Mr. Gibson, who was government attorney for the islands until Ickes ousted him, had testified rather vaguely against the regime of Gov. Paul M. Pearson.

Gibson testified that Governor Pearson had exceeded his authority under the law, was unpopular with a large section of the population of the islands, and was not frank in his administration. To support his testimony Gibson introduced several letters which were the documents to which Ickes alluded.

GEN. HUGH JOHNSON assumed his new office of federal works relief administrator for New York city. "Robbie," his ever present secretary, fended off the reporters for a day, but let them in then, and to them the general wailed:

"I hate this thing! It isn't helping anybody, anywhere. When the source of money is cut off we'll be right back where we started. It's disheartening to sit here, knowing that when the funds are gone, the jobs will be gone."

ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS announced that on July 29 a school would be opened by his department in Washington for the purpose of training state, county and city police in law enforcement theory and practice. A twelve weeks' course will be given to selected officers, the instruction being free.

REPUBLICAN senators were advised that former President Herbert Hoover will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination in the Presidential race of 1936.

Herbert Hoover

They were advised that Mr. Hoover would make the formal announcement some time this summer. He is staying out, it was said, because he intends to remain in private life and has planned his future career along that line. For his active criticisms of administration policies the reason was given that, although he does not "choose to run," he thought the party needed some sort of direction; now that his candidacy is shelved, it is expected that his political utterances will be clothed in less authority.

The informers, however, assured the senators that Mr. Hoover would get behind the party's candidate and enter the campaign for him, and that he thinks, with unification growing, the Republican prospects are looking brighter day by day.

WORLD war veterans from both the Allied and the Central powers met officially in Paris and debated ways in which future wars may be averted. They denounced as enemies of their own countries those who would seek to foment a new war, and passed a resolution declaring: "The respect for treaties being the basis of international relations, this confidence can be durable only when international accords and the resulting obligations are mutually and sincerely respected."

The meeting was held under the auspices of Fidac. The American delegates included S. P. Bailey, Winona, Minn.; Julian W. Thomas, Salt Lake City; Bernhard Ragner, McKeesport, Pa., and Harold L. Smith, Coatesville, Pa.

BURR T. ANSELL, a young attorney whose father, Gen. S. T. Ansell, is suing Senator Huey Long for libel, was enraged when Long intruded on his party at a Washington hotel and took a swing at the Kingfish. One of the senator's companions seized Ansell's arm and the young man says Long then ran away.

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, whose New Deal program was not well received by the British government, has resumed active participation in politics, "reluctantly," but with expressed determination to "go on with it." The little Welsh veteran statesman addressed the national convention of the peace and reconstruction movement, and asserted the menace to peace and the economic confusion throughout the world are growing worse.

JAPAN'S beautiful inland sea was the scene of a terrible disaster that cost 104 lives. The steamer Midori Maru, crowded with holiday passengers, collided with a freighter in the foggy night and sank almost immediately. Rescue boats picked up 91 of the 166 passengers and 56 of the crew. All the victims were Japanese.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE proclaimed the establishment of an AAA adjustment program for the 1935 rye crop which will include benefit payments of amounts not yet disclosed. Representatives from 16 rye growing states met in Washington to discuss the program and outline plans for its operation.

Farmers from the principal wheat producing states met with AAA officials and gave their approval to a tentative flexible plan for the payment of benefits to wheat growers.

CAPT. ANTHONY EDEN, England's journeyman trouble shooter, electrified the British Isles by announcing that Great Britain had offered to give Haile Selassie, emperor of Abyssinia, a generous strip of British Somaliland to replace territory acquired by Italy, if the Italian government would promise not to wage war against the domain of Africa's "Conquering Lion of Judah."

Nothing doing, said Premier Mussolini, who has turned a deaf ear to all Britain's proposals of an Italo-Ethiopian compromise. He was reported as intending to go right ahead with his plan of a four-years' war to effect the complete pacification of the African empire. He insists that there must be more room in Africa for overpopulated Italy to expand.

Mussolini has threatened to "remember" the nations which have offered to furnish Abyssinia with arms, and they have withdrawn or modified their offers. The African emperor pleaded:

"If we are in the right and if civilized nations are unable to prevent this war, at least do not deny us the means of defending ourselves."

The British parliament was no better pleased with Eden's "offer" of land than was Italy, and the colonial secretary, son of former Prime Minister MacDonald, had a hard time explaining it.

Then Italy heard that the British government was considering a proposal to invite other nations to join in an economic blockade of Italy to check her aggression on Ethopia. Rome was astonished by this report but didn't seem in the least alarmed. Neither were the Italians frightened when they learned officially that Ethiopia had asked the United States to study means of persuading Italy to respect the Kellogg pact outlawing war. The emperor himself made the appeal to W. Perry George, charge d'affaires at Addis Ababa.

ANDRE CITROEN, famous for years as "the Henry Ford of France" because he built most of that country's low cost motor cars, is dead. And probably he was happy to pass on, for his vast enterprises had collapsed and his once huge fortune was gone.

THE federal government began a new fiscal year with intentions of spending more money than in any previous year of peace. Mr. Roosevelt announced that he would spend $8,520,000,000, of which $4,582,000,000 will go for "recovery and relief." He expects the treasury to collect $3,991,000,000. No, it doesn't add up. The deficit for the new fiscal year will be $4,528,000,000, it is estimated.

The fiscal year just passed came to an end with the public debt at a new peace-time peak of $28,665,000,000, still some shy of the $31,000,000,000 the President estimated a year ago. To finance the new budget, he had counted in part upon the $500,000,000 extension of "nuisance" taxes just passed by congress, but not upon the tax-the-rich program which the New Dealers hope to jockey through some time in August. Estimates have it that this will net another $340,000,000.

The expenditure for the past year is only $7,258,000,000 instead of $8,571,000,000 forecast at the start of the year. The deficit was $3,472,347,000 instead of the proposed $4,869,000,000.

If the expenditures outlined in the 1936 budget reach the estimated total, the public debt on July 1 next year would stand at $34,239,000,000.

During the next year the President expects to spend $4,880,000,000 for relief and for the employment of 3,500,000 idle workers. A general upswing in business would improve the revenue expected by the treasury. The President counted on $3,711,000,000 coming in during the 1935 fiscal year. Receipts proved to be $3,785,000,000.

THE week's peak in crime was reached when Detroit police found Howard Carter Dickinson, prominent New York attorney and nephew of Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, lying dead in a ditch beside a lonely Rouge park road with a bullet through his head and another through his chest.

Dickinson, a law associate of Charles Evans Hughes, Jr., had been in Detroit on business of the $40,000,000 estate of the late William H. Yawkey. Apparently, he had driven to Rouge park while on a drinking party after business hours. His companions on the ride, who were William Schweitzer, Detroit underworld character, and three burlesque-show girls, all of whom he had picked up at his hotel in the motor city, fled the scene and were traced to Fort Wayne, Ind., where they were arrested.

After several days of grilling by police, the four confessed they had plotted the murder to rob Dickinson. Sweitzer admitted firing the shots. Their loot was $134.

DETERMINED that what goes up must stay up, Fred and Al Key, endurance fliers, broke the world's time record for keeping a plane aloft, landing after 653½ hours in the air at Meridan, Miss. They passed the unofficial endurance record of 647 hours, 28 minutes and 30 seconds set in 1930 by Dale Jackson and Forest O'Brien at St. Louis.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—Grave concern is felt by high administration officials over the lack of eagerness of so many people, all over the country, to get off relief rolls, even when fairly good jobs are offered. It is impossible to obtain accurate figures about this phase of the situation, all the bureaus, administrations, agencies, etc., being very much publicity shy about this disturbing development.

It is known, however, that reports from all over have been received, and that President Roosevelt's hopes of getting everybody off the relief rolls as speedily as possible have run up against a very stiff resistance.

In many cities young men eligible for the CCC camps are refusing to take the examinations. In one large city families are insisting they do not want their boys to be trained as soldiers—that they hear beer is sold at the camps—that their boys would have to associate with low characters.

Professing entire ignorance of the situation in that city, the CCC officials here insist they do not believe the objections cited by the parents are genuine. They say that the talk about military training was very widespread when the camps were first started, but that it broke down of its own weight a long time ago. They believe the sole and only reason is unwillingness to get off relief rolls.

In other cities, in fact in most cities, enrollment in the CCC camps has been way below what was expected, and the answer is believed by officials here to be just unwillingness to get off relief. But in every instance officials say to inquiring reporters from the city in question: "Please don't mention that you talked to me about this."

Incidentally the Veterans' bureau has been having its troubles along the same line.

A Real Problem

The whole question brings up the point whether the United States is now going through what England went through a few years back. In England the dole brought some interesting consequences, and, as they occurred before the depression hit this country, there was quite a self-righteous feeling in this country that Britain was bringing her troubles on her own head by pampering the dole collectors.

Then came the depression, and the New Deal. Whereupon it became progressive in this country to insist that it was the duty of the government to take care of the cold and hungry, and reactionary to point to Britain's troubles on the same sort of problem.

Now it is being realized that it is a problem involving fundamental traits of human nature, and that the United States is not very different in the character of its people from Britain. No one, not even the most bitter critic of the administration on Capitol Hill, is advocating that people should be allowed to starve or freeze. But a very interesting mental transformation is becoming apparent in New Deal circles.

For example, a high official of the Federal Emergency Relief administration was told that his agents in a large middle western city had threatened to take families off relief if they refused to permit their sons to go to the CCC camps, or if able-bodied men in the families refused to take jobs which were offered.

"I have not heard about that," he said shortly. "You see it is a purely local problem. The man on the ground handling the relief situation has authority to handle the matter in any way he sees fit."

"You mean if he turns families off the relief rolls for such reasons as that, it is entirely up to him?" he was asked.

"Exactly," he replied.

"Would the local officials make a report to headquarters here about it?" the questioner persisted.

"Nothing of the kind need be reported," he replied.

And his whole manner indicated, what some of his underlings told the writer in confidence, that he did not want any such reports!

Cut Huge Fortunes

President Roosevelt's objective is to reduce all large fortunes to a maximum of $7,000,000—all large incomes to a maximum of $60,000 a year. He said this in a conversation a few days ago with a very rich Democrat, who incidentally had been a big campaign fund contributor, and the gentleman is still sputtering about it.

In another most interesting conversation with a Wisconsin man who had backed him when Roosevelt really needed backing, in the pre-convention days, the President advised his caller to "go back to Wisconsin and make your peace with the La Follettes. They are our kind of people."

Which of course is purely corroborative of what the President has been saying about his tax program—that it has two objectives, a better social order, as well as revenue.

Meanwhile business men as a whole are aghast at the prospect, for they see in the drive against bigness almost surely further boosting of the rates to apply against all corporations which have big earnings.

Most business men do not agree with the wisdom, entirely aside from their selfish interests, of this policy. Most of them admit that there is some merit in the contention so often made in private conversations by Justice Brandeis against bigness in privately owned corporations. Frequently, they admit, many of the faults which characterize all large scale government operations creep in when a corporation attains unwieldy size. They even admit that instances can be cited where the mere size of the corporation increases the cost of whatever unit it may manufacture, or the item of service it may render.

Take the Automobile

But they insist that for the most part these instances are the exceptions, and not the rule. A favorite illustration of the reverse is the automobile. Anyone who knows anything about manufacturing admits that if the automobiles of this country were produced by say 200 manufacturers of fairly even size, the cost per automobile to the purchaser would be more than double.

The best illustration of this is the Ford car now manufactured by a fairly good sized plant in Strassburg, France. That car costs the purchaser in Paris about $1,700. This is not due to the protective tariff, for the car is made in France. Actually of course, if the cars were made in the big Ford plant at Dearborn, they could pay 100 per cent tariff and still save the purchasers a good deal of money. It is the French quota system on imports which forces their manufacture on a small scale at Strassburg.

Manufacturers contend that if Ford cars were produced by separate plants of small size in this country, each owned by a different owner and operated independently—in short if the policy desired by the administration in this use of the taxing power against bigness were forced into effect—the cars would cost purchasers in this country more than the $1,700 charged in France. For it so happened that wages in the Strassburg plant are lower than in the Dearborn plant.

All of which helps to explain what some critics of the plan mean when they insist it is a "distribution of poverty" not a "distribution of wealth."

One Real Danger

Only one phase of the huge "share the wealth"—level off the big fortunes" and "pass prosperity around"—taxation program of President Roosevelt seems in any real danger. This is the sliding scale tax aimed at big corporations. There seems no doubt whatever that the big levies on inheritances, and the boosts in the upper income tax brackets, will be approved by congress substantially as desired by the President.

Already a trickle of protests has begun arriving from holders of common stocks in the big corporations. A few of them have already realized that heavier taxes on the companies in which their savings are invested hits them, and them alone. For the bondholders, and the preferred stockholders, will continue to get their interest and dividends, if they are earned. Additional taxes will hit the equities, not the debts, of these corporations. Except of course such as are not earning enough to pay dividends at present, and have no prospect of paying any in the near future.

If the big companies should do anything like as thorough a job in rousing their stockholders as the utilities did, there is little doubt that this phase of the program would be in serious danger. For there is nothing like the spontaneous appeal to this levy that there is to the proposal to tax big fortunes, both when in estates and in incomes.

Some lawyers are contending, however, that the big inheritance taxes are unconstitutional. They contend that the object of the tax is not to raise money for the needs of the government, but is purely social in character, with the object of leveling off fortunes. This, they contend, runs counter to the Constitution.

Not much attention is apt to be paid to this by the senators and representatives. "Soak the rich" has always been a popular slogan, politically, and the theory that it is good politics to vote for such legislation is strongly held.

Question of Politics

Lots of men in both house and senate will vote for these levies who do not really approve of them. Hence the comparative certainty that they will pass. Opposition to them might prove very hurtful at the next election.

The opposition is based chiefly not on any theory that it is a bad idea to cut down the big fortunes—though there are a few who insist that many big fortunes have proved far more beneficial to the public at large than if the same amount of money had been spent by the government—but on the old Mellon theory of efficiency.

Andrew W. Mellon, when secretary of the treasury, frequently contended that lower percentages of taxes for the high brackets would bring more money into the treasury than higher percentages. He pointed to the fact that every time taxes were reduced on big incomes, receipts from big incomes increased. Critics of the Mellon regime always insisted that the reason for this was merely that it occurred during a rapidly rising tide of prosperity.

As there was undoubtedly such a rising tide during that period, there is no conclusive method of demonstrating that Mellon was right. But there is a strongly held view that he was. This theory—and it is the one entertained today by many men in congress who will vote for the new levies despite their views—is that when tax rates are too high, ways of evading them will be found.

Those holding this view insist that those with big incomes are either smart themselves, or have smart lawyers, and that they will have no scruples whatever about finding methods of evading both inheritance and income levies if they regard them as confiscatory.

U. S. AGENTS SEEK TO SOLVE STRANGE GEM TRANSACTIONS

Scotland Yard and Other Foreign Police Are Aiding in Investigation.

New York.—Sixty star federal "G" men are digging into the ramifications of the international jewel-theft and recovery ring which has stolen millions of dollars' worth of gems in recent years, and bribed officials.

Scotland Yard and the German, French and Italian police are co-operating, in addition to the detectives of nearly every large city in the United States, Canada and Mexico. Jewelry stolen in one country frequently turns up thousands of miles away.

Sitting in the center of the excitement is Noel C. Scaffa, mystery man of the diamond-and-ruby world, who as a private detective has recovered nearly two million dollars' worth of stolen jewelry.

New Federal Law.

It was the passage of a new federal law, making it a crime to transport stolen property from one state to another, which resulted in the campaign to wipe out the jewel-theft racket.

Fantastic beyond belief are the operations of the jewel-theft ring, according to Adams. He said:

"The gang sometimes goes out and buys up entire communities — the police, the district attorney and the courts. It is easy to understand how they can do it in small towns, for the value of a single necklace is often greater than the entire pay roll of the officials of the community."

First, he says, the jewels which are to be stolen are located, and the thieves make certain they are in a "right town." They contact political chiefs who control police, and the prosecutor's office in some cases.

Avoid Murder.

They always try to avoid committing murder, for that causes such a sensation that they are arrested sometimes despite their "pull."

After the jewels are taken, the thieves lie low for a while. Then they contact a trustworthy man who will get in touch with the insurance companies, or with some detective or adjuster. Adams added:

"The insurance companies are always willing to pay a reward running between 10 and 15 per cent of the insured value."

Adams cast some light on a number of thefts in "impossible" situations—such as from a locked apartment, or the loss of jewels while traveling. In some such cases the person purposely "loses" his jewelry as to collect insurance.

Auto Jack Is Used to Help Man's Broken Back

San Antonio, Texas.—A common automobile jack is a useful surgical instrument in the treatment of broken back, Dr. Sim Driver of Dallas told the Texas Surgical society here.

A person suffering from a broken back, Doctor Driver explained, is placed on a frame of metal splints with his feet tied down and a weight attached to his head.

An automobile jack is placed beneath the frame and the patient's back and slowly raised to the level of his extremities. Thus the ligaments of the backbone are enabled to draw the fractured pieces of vertebra into place and the patient can be placed in a plaster cast, the surgeon said.

Dr. Robert Moore, associate professor of surgery, told of a method of eliminating pain in heart ailments by severing a certain nerve.

Ghouls Rob Graves of Pioneers of California

San Jose, Calif.—Evidence that ghouls have been systematically looting the historic old Spanish cemetery at Almaden, one-time site of world-famous quicksilver mines, was discovered.

Several open graves were found with headstones destroyed and fences knocked down. Sheriff George Lyle has been asked to take steps to apprehend the grave robbers, who evidently are seeking jewels and other possessions buried with their owners in the old Spanish days.

The oldest grave in the cemetery is that of R. Quireposano, who died May 30, 1876. A pepper tree has grown directly through the grave, which is surrounded by a fence, and now towers high above it.

Absent-Minded Motorist Smashes Wrong Motor Car

Kokomo, Ind.—Guy Lawrence, Miami, parked and locked his car in the business district here, and when he returned he found two automobiles, identical in appearance.

He could not remember his license number and picked what he believed was his.

When the door lock wouldn't respond to his key he went to a locksmith and had another made. When that one failed, he picked up a stone and threw it through the windshield.

Then he discovered his mistake. He reported to police, paid for a new windshield, and set himself to the task of memorizing his license number.

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Van continues his social attentions to Gail, but the girl feels she is making no progress in gaining his affections. Phil suggests, to the girls' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Van asks Gail to go with him for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt.

—7—

"Um-hum," Gail affirmed, nodding. She was grateful to Edith for taking it as a matter settled. Dick continued to regard her with an odd, an almost contemptuous, smile.

"You like all that sort of thing, don't you?" he now asked.

"Well, I don't know that I like it especially. I don't know much about it," Gail answered, slightly nettled. "Never having been on a house party of this sort, I couldn't say I liked it or didn't like it," she went on pointedly.

"Meaning that I don't know what I'm talking about?" Dick asked, with a not-quite-good-natured laugh.

"Well—" Gail said, with a shrug which indicated that he was at liberty to put that interpretation upon her words if he would.

The man laughed, and sprawled a placating great hand across the table.

"Aw, don't be mad, Gail."

"I'm not mad."

"Yes, you are! But what do you care what I think of the Murchison outfit? They don't."

"I only think, when you don't know a person, and that person has never done one thing against you—" the girl commenced stiffly.

"It's only that I get such a kick out of it," Dick murmured, subsiding.

Gail tried her best to feel sorry for him.

Later she told Edith positively that she would not go to the Chipps' house party unless she heard directly from Mrs. Chipp.

"Oh, I am so relieved, dearest!" Edith breathed gratefully.

"No, it's not worth while," Gail said. She grew a little bitter, thinking about it. "It would be the best time I ever had, and if mamma had lived, or papa, I should take all this sort of thing as a matter of course," she said, with dignified resentment. "However, I can't—as Phil said, I can't put myself in a false position!"

"Gail, she will telephone you!" Edith predicted fervently.

"I don't know." Gail was tired and blue.

They were still talking at one o'clock when Phil came upstairs.

"I put the lights out. Everyone in?" he asked.

The sisters exchanged a look.

"Ariel must be! She went with the gang down to Dobbins' at about nine," Gail stammered. "She said you said she could, Phil!"

"I said if she'd be back early!" Phil exclaimed. He crossed the hall, opened a door, and returned with an anxious and angry face. "Where is she, d'you suppose?" he asked.

"Well, she must be—oh, this is perfectly terrible, Phil! She must be still down there. We could telephone—"

"Listen, she can't get away with this!" Phil interrupted. "It's after twelve. Dobbins' closes at midnight."

"Maybe one of the boys started to drive her home!"

"Maybe she decided to stay at the Lovelaces'!"

"Tut-tut-tut-tut—" Gail began on a weary note, flinging the bedclothes aside as Phil ran downstairs to the telephone and Edith fled to her room for more clothing.

Gail was all but dressed, and Phil returning from downstairs three minutes later, when Ariel appeared in the upper hallway, clad in pajamas and an old Japanese jacket of brilliantly colored cotton, with a pillow dangling in her hand and her soft, taffy-yellow hair in confusion.

"What's the excitement?" she demanded, looking like anything in the world rather than a girl who had been tearing, scared and chilly, across open country roads in a roadster exactly three minutes before. "It was so hot I thought I'd sleep down on the side porch, on the old sofa. But it's so lumpy—"

They all broke into excited laughter, reproaches. She should have told them!

Ariel, looking sleepy, warm, bewildered, vanished into her room with a yawn. Nobody followed her to discover the clothes flung wildly here and there just as they had fallen when she had torn them off, or to kiss the cheek that was still so cold from night wind. Indeed, among the three elders in Gail's room there was even a feeling that injustice had been done little Ariel, who had run down to the drug store so innocently for a soda, after her lessons were done, and who had been home and in bed for almost three hours.

Phil produced two small round well-wrapped cakes of violet soap, and presented each girl with one.

"Peace offering," he said humbly, but with a little laugh in the corner of his eyes. "I was sort of—oh, rotten, about Gail's visit!" he said. "My dear old girl, Ede and I'd trust you to go with anyone you like to China—you know that. Why, we depend on you. You're the thing that has held us together all these years. You're the guardian angel of the Lucky Lawrences!"

Gail's heart swelled to bursting; she could not speak.

She made up her mind that she would not consider the Los Gatos week-end, unless some formal recognition of the invitation came from Mrs. Chipp. But this heroic mood oozed away when Friday passed, and Saturday passed, and there was no sight of Van, and no word from him. Gail bore it as long as she could, and then telephoned suddenly, reluctantly, on Sunday morning to the Chipp house to ask for Mr. Murchison.

A woman's voice, slightly amused, slightly surprised, very sophisticated, answered her. Van Murchison was with friends in Burlingame, and who was this, please?

Gail dared not reveal her identity. It was Mrs. Chipp herself, she suspected; it might have been the solution of her whole problem if she had been able to ask, easily, cheerfully, "Are you expecting me on that house party next week, Mrs. Chipp?"

But she could not do it. Instead she mumbled something that might have been a name and might not, and hung up the telephone with her heart pounding and her cheeks red. Moving about the quiet Sunday kitchen, busy with the eternal dishes and chairs, bread box and pudding bowls, she raged at herself for her cowardice.

"What's the Excitement?"

"You fool! How I hate you! You poor fool!"

She gathered the dishes expertly. Wandering back and forth between sink and dresser, she put them one by one into a shining line on the shelf, soliloquizing as she did so.

"Burlingame, eh? I imagine I'd hate it. How can I say that?—I don't know anything about it! But I imagine—or rather, I should think a boy would hate it. I wish I hadn't telephoned. She didn't know who I was, though!

"Well, why shouldn't I telephone her? No harm done!

"Suppose she does tell him some girl telephoned, and he suspects it's me? What of it? Everybody is telephoning everybody else all the time."

Edith came in, flushed and pretty, from church.

"It's boiling out. It's going to be a marvelous day. What a day for a picnic!" with a long sigh, as they wandered through the great dim front hallway and looked through the opened front door into the mellow greenness of the garden.

"I know." Gail sighed, too.

They were halfway upstairs, loitering. A voice spoke from the doorway behind them.

"Any swill this morning, ladies?"

And instantly the day burst into bloom. Edith tactfully retreated to the upper regions; Gail came out on the front steps, in her dark blue kitchen apron. Van stood there grinning up at her.

He seated himself on the steps; Gail, in a wicker rocker, had her elbows on her knees, her hands hooped over her face.

It was heaven, sitting out in the shade wth this big, tweed-clad young man. The violence of last week's hopes and fears had all faded away; it was enough to sit here together, without past or future.

"No golf today?"

"Oh, I could have played. But I don't play very well. The other fellers were all too good. Besides, my aunt wanted me; my cousins from Sacramento are here. It'll be rotten."

Gail laughed unsympathetically.

"We might take our supper and go up to the old dam at Cabin River," she said, as unexpectedly to herself as to him.

"How d'you get there?"

"End of the trolley line. And then walk."

He stayed about an hour, and they laughed continuously. So joyous, so unstrained, was this particular meeting that Gail presently could say, "What's this house party next week-end?"

"Oh, the usual thing!"

"Down at the Chipps' place?"

"Yep. Up in the Santa Cruz mountains, back of Los Gatos."

"How many will there be, Van?"

"Oh, about a dozen."

She couldn't—somehow—bring him to anything definite about the invitation. He seemed to feel that that was settled.

But Gail was in wild spirits when he went away, none the less. He had said, "I take you," in reference to the house party. His aunt must be perfectly cognizant of that. And she, Gail, had talked to him easily, unaffectedly, in her old gingham, and he had wanted to come and find her, and her jealousy of his Burlingame friends had been silly, and everything was all right again.

Dick Stebbins turned up with his reconstructed roadster and the picnic suddenly became a glittering reality. Edith and Gail, as they so loved to do, plunged into a glory of preparations, eggs boiling frantically; blackened old coffee pot stored with small packages of sugar, matches, mustard, pepper, and salt; cream poured back into a fat bottle, and secured with a thick cap of paper and a rubber band.

When Phil came in the usual picnic uproar set in; they couldn't all go in Dick's car obviously, but those that rode going could walk-and-trolley back. Phil thought he might borrow Jim Slake's car—it was an awful looking old thing, but it did move.

Gail flew up and downstairs, in and out of doors, tying strings, wiping oily fingers, tying dingy old tin cups on a string. At four they were all off.

They picnicked on the grassy plateau two hundred feet from the dam, looking down at the world, listening to the ripple and chuckle of the creek hidden in the redwoods behind them. The grass smelt of dew and pungent tar-weed; the redwoods were caught in solemn shade. Gail sat with her back braced squarely against a massive oak, Phil lay stretched with his head against her knee. The others were still eating in a desultory, protestant manner.

Suddenly, from where he lay like a dead body in the grass, Sam's young boyish voice rose pure and strong:

"There's a long, long trail a-winding . . ."

They all sang, even Ariel cutting herself off in the middle of a word to join. They sang for half an hour.

And when they got back to the dark old close odorous house, at ten o'clock, there was a message pinned on the kitchen door. It read:

"Crooks! Why didn't you wait for me?"

It was signed "V. M."

So that this was one of Gail's completely happy evenings. The day had been full of pleasantness and content. Everything was exactly as it should be.

Monday passed. No word from Van. No sign of Van. Gail began to hope fervently that the week-end party would be postponed. Her brain—her heart were sick of the constant surging back and forth of hope and fear.

That night Edith asked lightly, delicately, "Any news of our swain today?" and quite suddenly Gail told the desired lie.

"Yes. He and Mrs. Chipp came in—just for a minute."

"Oh, Gail, darling!" Gail felt her heart turn a little sick as she saw her sister's generous pleasure. "Oh, that makes it all right!" said Edith. "What'd she say about the week-end?"

"Well, just—just that she expected me."

After all, they might do just exactly that thing tomorrow, Van and his aunt, Gail reflected uncomfortably. They might easily make the lie merely an anticipation. She tried, meanwhile, to minimize it.

"They only stayed for a second. He had probably parked the car right across the middle of the street!"

Ariel coming in, Edith instantly communicated the news, and then Gail knew it was too late to retreat. Innocent as the deception had seemed at first, it began to gather size and momentum like a rolling snowball.

She felt ashamed of herself all evening, jumpy whenever the telephone rang, nervous whenever the casual family conversation came back to her brilliant prospects for tomorrow.

The next afternoon Van stopped his flat, open, racy-looking roadster at the library at four o'clock, and Gail descended the steps. She looked charming in her old brown coat, the fox skin Mary Tevis had given Edith, her own brown hat, Ariel's best blouse with the frill, and new chamois-skin gloves charged that day at Muller's.

Van leaped out to take her suitcase; they were laughing, delighted to be together again, as they stowed it in the rumble. Then Gail was where every girl loves to be, sunk into the comfortable slanted seat beside the man she likes, off for a holiday.

One thing had especially disturbed her among many small disturbances; it had not been a happy day. There had been the consciousness of her untruth about the invitation to begin with. There had been the allied disappointment of the fact that Mrs. Chipp had not neutralized the lie by coming into the library or sending a note. But these were minor considerations when compared to the disquieting effect of a conversation Ariel had had with her older sister just before Ariel had gone off to school that morning.

TREMENDOUS TRIFLES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MILLION DOLLAR COW-PATH

IN THE 1850's, Dr. Jared Bassett owned a small farm in the heart of what is now Chicago's famous "Loop." He also had a favorite cow named "Bessie" for whom he built a barn. From it ran a path over which "Bessie" walked sedately out to graze along the road.

When Doctor Bassett sold some of his property, the deed contained a provision for a 10-foot easement over which "Bessie" could make her way unhampered between the road and the cow barn. Years passed. Both the good doctor and "Bessie" were dead. Forgotten was the provision for the 10-foot easement.

In 1925 a corporation acquired the site of the Bassett farm for an office building. Then . . . consternation! There was the will, and the provision for the path which gave the cow easy access to the green grass by the road. Under its terms the path could not be blocked. The matter was taken to the courts but the legality of the easement was upheld.

So the corporation went ahead with the building, keeping Bessie's path clear. They did, however, usurp her "air rights" (which she never knew she had, anyway.) Above the 18-foot level the building jutted out at right angles, covering the cow path and extending upward for twenty more stories. Set-back skyscrapers are common, but this is the only "set-out" building on record.

Today in the structure at 100 West Monroe street, there is a portal that is never closed. For the ghost of Bessie may want to come back some day and go from the barn-that-was to the road that is now busy Monroe street. The will says that she shall have that right. If that passage, 18 feet high and 10 feet wide, could have been included in the building it would have meant at least $12,000 to owners of the property in yearly rentals. But, then, Chicago could not have had a "million-dollar cowpath!"

WIDOWER TO WHITE HOUSE

OF ALL the members of the cabinet of President Andrew Jackson, the secretary of state, Martin Van Buren, had no wife. And largely because of that fact he became Jackson's successor as President in 1837. He had married Hannah Hoes in 1807 but she died in 1819. True to her memory, Van Buren had never re-married.

In January, 1829, Secretary of War John Eaton married Peggy O'Neal Timberlake. Immediately Vice President Calhoun's wife elevated her nose. Sniff—sniff! Peggy O'Neal was a tavern keeper's daughter. The scandal mongers were whispering that Peggy's first husband had cut his throat because she was untrue to him. Accept "that woman" as an equal? Never!

Other Washington wives also elevated their noses. "Old Hickory" Jackson was furious. Mrs. Calhoun and the cabinet ladies must accept Peggy. But they wouldn't and their husbands couldn't make them.

Calhoun wanted to be President. But his wife continued to snub Peggy and Jackson continued to fight for her. Now Martin Van Buren had no wife to embarrass his ambitions. The widower-secretary of state called on Peggy . . . He danced with her. He gave a dinner in her honor and "Old Hickory" was mightily pleased.

The row over Peggy went along and grew worse. The upshot was that the whole cabinet, including Van Buren, resigned! But in 1832 he became vice president when Jackson was re-elected, and President in 1837. Andrew Jackson had a hand in bringing that about.

"SEE A PIN—"

"SEE a pin and pick it up; all through the day, you'll have good luck." So says one of the maxims of our forefathers.

At first, it didn't seem like a lucky day for Jacques Laffitte, a young Frenchman who had come to Paris to get a job. He had a letter of introduction to the great Swiss banker, Perregeaux, and that won him an interview, but a very brief one.

Perregeaux told the young fellow very decisively that there was no place in his great institution for him at present and probably would not be very soon. He had better try elsewhere.

Curtly dismissed from the beautifully furnished office, Laffitte walked dejectedly out through the palatial courtyard. Suddenly he noticed a pin in the path before him. Somewhat absent-mindedly, he stooped down, picked up this trifle and carefully stuck it in the lapel of his coat.

He didn't know that Perregeaux was watching him from the window nor that the great banker, who was a stickler for economy and orderliness in his employees, had noticed him pick up the pin. But that evening a note was brought to Laffitte's lodgings. It was from Perregeaux. It said, "A place is made for you in my office that you may occupy tomorrow morning."

Laffitte became one of the great financiers of France. A pin was the tremendous trifle that started him on his career.

Still Love and Romance in Life

Proof of Inherent Nobility of Mankind Seen in Everyday Life.

"Hollywood—Sitting up on her portable bed, Margherita Rouse, an invalid, became the wife of Chester Conklin, film comedian. The marriage ceremony was read in St. Alban's church here.

"The unusual romance began two years ago when Miss Rouse, bedridden by arthritis for 23 years, was brought to Mr. Conklin's house with a score of other invalids for a concert.

"Soon after they met, Conklin suggested that Miss Rouse try again to become well. Her case is responding to treatments and she is now able to sit up and use her hands. Their physician predicts she will be walking within a year.

"Miss Rouse is forty-one years old; Mr. Conklin, forty-six."

Exultingly, a noted woman writer draws these conclusions from the foregoing:

"I read that news item just after leaving a group of women who were disgusted with life. They were disillusioned with the thought of nobility in human beings. They laughed at the ideas of love and romance. Romance, they said, was dead, and all love today a matter of self-interest.

"Most of our readers doubtless have their times of doubt about all those things, for it is easier to prove human selfishness and greed than to show examples of the inherent nobility in men and women. An economic depression is not the soil in which romance flowers where all who run may read, and modern sophistication has even given new connotation to the word 'love.'

"That is why I feel that nothing I could ever say to my readers would be as worthwhile as passing on that story of the forty-one-year-old invalid who became the bride of a well-known movie actor. Those facts have a message more potent than anything words could say."

WILTON NEWS

The fourth of July furnished the occasion for many happy gatherings including picnics, celebrations, outings and visits for our people.

Misses Margaret and Vista McClendon, Dorothy and Sara Jo Lacey, motored to Yamakita with a overloaded basket of picnic food and spent the day swimming, eating and hashing in the sun. Ask these young ladies the results of their sun baths. There are no regrets, the pleasure more than compensating, they say.

The Montevallo Skeet Club takes the lead with flying colors in celebrations. From early morning until set of sun, the constant firing attested that lots of somebodies were having heaps of fun.

Old friends visited the home-town, were: Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lucas, of Birmingham, who fourthed with Mr. and Mrs. B. G. Rhodes.

Many others who have not sent us their full reports, gathered with their friends and neighbors and made merry with the barbecued dishes.

Mrs. Frank Bassett spent several days last week with relatives in Fulton, Alabama.

Mrs. Sarah Nabors and Floyd Nabors are visiting relatives in Birmingham this week.

The Baptist Training Union's Study Course is in progress this week. Misses Mary Sanders, Alice Nolen, Irene Fancher and Lavada Ambrose are teaching the manuals.

Miss Mary Sanders, who has been studying at the Baptist Theological Seminary in Texas, the past year, has returned to her home for the summer.

Miss Edna Reeder, of Birmingham. spent last Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Reeder.

Mr. J. P. Logan, who was operated on for appendicitis in King Memorial Hospital in Selma last week, is resting well we are happy to learn.

Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Nail and Miss Morotha Milstead, of Dolomite, spent last Wednesday with Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Milstead. Mrs. Milstead returned home with them for several days visit.

Mrs. Mae Moreland's guests last Saturday, included Mesdames Raymond Gentry and David Allen, of Piper; W. A. Rogers, of Selma, and Misses Nancy Gentry, of Piper, and Glennie Gentry, of Dallas, Texas.

MILDRED WHITE WALLACE, Social Editor

"MAIN STREET"

"I have a small town soul;
It makes me want to know
Wee, unimportant things
About the folks that go
Past on swift journeyings,
I have a small town soul,
It makes me want to say,
'How are you?' and 'Good day'!
To everyone I meet."——

"It would be a dreary cut and dried existence to go through life without a sense of the importance of small happenings, and without a friendly interest—which goes much deeper than CURIOSITY—in casual acquaintances one meets along the way.

I have often wished I lived in a place where everybody knew everybody else. True, I might not care for it unless I could wander from it when I found close observation and interest a bit oppressive. But it would be nice to call such a place "home"—and to know that I could always go back to it." So writes our good friend and journalist, Lewis Follett.

We heartily extend an invitation to come to COLUMBIANA and make it the little restful haven you picture known as HOME. We can assure you that FRIENDLY interest is the paramount issue in the lives of the natives—and you will always have an audience to come back to and listen to the recounting of your travels—and unless you are really going somewhere, you will not have to put on a HAT unless you want to create a stir. We always grow curiously suspicious when a HAT is worn on Main Street without a reason.

The hum drum routine incident to a "small town" might, at times, prove irksome to one who calls himself a "wanderer", but we venture to predict, no matter where you roam, be it busy, bustling Birmingham, or hectic political Montgomery, you will agree with the writer that topping German hill is about the happiest experience along the way—for, it is from this hill-top you first glimpse the little Sleepy Valley—better known as friendly, comfortable, Columbiana.

"Here lie the things I prize
And hold of deepest worth;
Light of sapphire skies,
Peace of silent hills,
Shelter of the forest,
Comfort of the grass,
Shadows of the clouds that quickly pass,
And after showers, the smell of flowers
And the deep brown earth;
But, best of all, along the way
FRIENDSHIP and MIRTH"——

Robert Louis Stevenson found joy and comfort in the country, and "along the way" he must also have found the FRIENDLINESS and FUN we here in Columbiana enjoy. Come on over! We too, have known "wanderlust"—the "call of the open road"—the lure of the Gypsy Trails—but always return with gratefulness to this rustic retreat we have long called HOME. We shall happily welcome you to Main Street, and we personally guarantee you, despite the limited territory in which we move and have our being, that you will find plenty to "write about"—and perhaps continue to "wonder about"!

Monday morning found several hundred citizens of Shelby County in town registering for Relief Work under the new "set up". An optimistic note pervaded the atmosphere and everybody seemed to be on the "up and up".

Canning projects continue to go forward under the direction of Mamie Horn.

Dr. Pike Head, distinguished physician of Bessemer; Mr. and Mrs. Bill Head, and Bill Head, Jr., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Head, Sunday.

Miss Grace Lovingood and Mrs. McVoy, of Selma, were house guests of Judge and Mrs. Cage Head last week.

Lemerle Penn, of Alabama College, spent the week-end in Columbiana, the guest of the Rev. and Mrs. H. M. Hurst. She graciously consented to sing at the morning service at the Methodist Church and her lovely interpretation of the solo, "I'm A Pilgrim", was gratefully acknowledged by the large congregation present.

Judge W. W. Wallace and P. O. Luck spent Friday and Saturday in Montgomery attending the Bar Association.

"The Flapper Grandmother", a musical comedy will be staged at the High School Auditorium on next Monday night. Don't miss it!

Otis Robenstein, of Columbiana, is now in Buffalo, N. Y., where he holds a responsible position. Mrs. Robenstein tells us he is making $53.00 per week pipe moulding. Quite a lucrative position for this wide-awake and energetic young fellow.

Friends of A. P. Longshore, Jr., formerly of Columbiana, now making his home in Birmingham, will be delighted to learn of the signal recognition recently given him. He has been appointed North Alabama General Agent for the Commonwealth Life Insurance Co., of Louisville, Ky., and maintains offices in the Watts Building in Birmingham.

Mr. Longshore left Shelby County twelve years ago, and for the past three years has been connected with the Protective Life Insurance Co. He is the son of A. P. Longshore, of Columbiana, prominent attorney and former Probate Judge of Shelby County.

Harold Harlin is spending his vacation in Bowling Green, Kentucky.

Miss Delilah Curry and Mrs. Homer Bearden were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harper in Birmingham.

Mrs. Dixie Shealy has returned from a visit to Piedmont, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Baker.

You run no RISK when buying a FISK tire from Alvin Stinson. Go by today and let him retire your automobile. There is much satisfaction in knowing you have a year's guarantee and that you are not likely to have to "get out and get under" that automobile when attempting to catch a bit of air after working hours.

The Exchange Club of Columbiana will be hosts at a Fish Fry at Lokey's Ferry on Thursday afternoon.

Norman Lefkovits of Columbiana, and Carl Wooten of Birmingham, left in an airplane for Meridian Mississippi about dawn on Tuesday morning. They expect to see the "Keys" which successfully unlocked the door which led to the marking up of an all world endurance record for continuance flying.

Visit the Columbiana Leader and take advantage of the many bargains now offered in this dependable store. You store since 1896. Like an old tried and true friend, Max Lefkovits has proven his belief in Columbiana by remaining here through "sunshine and shadow" days. He can always be found on the progressive side of the question and stands emphatically for civic improvement and upbuilding of the town of which he has so long been a vital part. Visit his store today!

You will not be disappointed in the many attractive offers in the grocery line now on sale at Taylor's Cash Store. Mason Edwards is one of the most popular and universally liked young business men in Columbiana. He is making an excellent record as Manager of the Columbiana Store. You will find the entire sales force accomodating and prompt in their service. The stock of goods is fresh and complete. They deeply appreciate your patronage which has made possible their success.

The many friends of Mrs. Mims Roberts will be glad to learn she is rapidly convalescing after an appendicitis operation in Birmingham last week. She is spending a few days in the home of her brother, John Benton, and is expected home the latter part of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Head, of Anniston, spent Sunday in Montevallo and Columbiana, the guest of relatives and friends.

A. E. Norwood, of Calera, was a visitor in Columbiana on Monday. "Bud" says he is off for Mobile to attend the Legion Convention next week, regardless of "hot weather and high water".

Speaking of "hot weather", Howard Whittaker called our attention to his thermometer on the door of the drug store and it registered exactly 100 at 11:30 a. m. Monday. Along comes "Pop" Christian with the remark that he placed a thermometer in his back yard Sunday, and it shot up to 120 quicker than we can tell you about it. Just try and get away with one "hotter" than that. Well, here it is, James R. White declares he saw a man FRY two eggs on the pavement in Montgomery—just as "good as a stove could do it". You know the gentleman—dare you dispute this one? Personally, we believe it!

Mrs. Mack Fancher, of Selma, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Cage Head, in Columbiana.

Mr. and Mrs. William Teague, of Kingsport, Tenn., are spending a few days on vacation with their mother, Mrs. Rosa Teague.

Don't fail to see "The Flapper Grandmother" at the High School Auditorium on next Monday night.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats will hold their regular dance on next Saturday night, and this one bids fair to be the largest held at the Airport. Many visitors from Birmingham and other points will be present. This popular orchestra will play for the dance at Clearmont Springs on next Thursday night, and may possibly sign for further appearances during the summer.

Miss Ann Stott, of Vina, Alabama, and Miss Virginia Lokey, of Birmingham, were the feted guests of Miss Mary Elizabeth Lokey last week. A house party was given in their honor during their stay at Miss Lokey's Camp at Mardis Ferry. Guests from Wilsonville and Birmingham composed the party.

Mrs. T. J. Moon and Messrs Davis and Etheridge Moon, of Augusta, Ga., are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. O. F. Lokey this week.

War Possible, Four Kinds
10,000 Million Questions
Our Large Gold Pile

Russian newspapers, speaking officially, accuse Japan of stirring up trouble along the Russian border, to "bring on grave complications."

Arthur Brisbane

A protest carries Stalin's warning to Japan that a continuation of these incidents "may have serious consequences in the relations of Russia and Japan, and peace in the Far East."

If Russia and Japan should have a serious disagreement, Russia's equipment in the way of submarines and airplanes, all within 400 miles of Tokyo, would probably enable other countries to stop worrying about Japan's military plans.

England does not approve of Mussolini's plans in Abyssinia, and the question arises, Would England close the Suez canal, the short cut for Italian troops and supplies to Abyssinia? Will Italian airplanes be forbidden to fly over the Suez canal area?

The answer as to closing the Suez canal by Britain would probably be no. England would not voluntarily provoke hostilities with Italy. She really wants peace. But, how easily war could come—French against German or English against Italian or Japanese against Russian!

Germany undertakes to establish a "family tree" for each of its 66,000,000 inhabitants, which means asking, answering, writing down ten thousand million questions.

The sensible answer would be, "I descend from Adam, with heaven knows how many mixtures in my blood on the way up," but Hitler would not accept that. Young couples getting marriage licenses are questioned: "What were your eight great-grandparents like? Did they have any Negroid or Jewish blood?

"Were they fond of telling the truth? Did they have imagination, driving power?"

Ten thousand million foolish questions would seem to set a new record.

The "greatest" country in the world, supposed to be the most intelligent, owns some tons of gold, called "worth" nine thousand million dollars.

We do not use the gold, or even invest part of it in adequate national defense, that would protect it. We are afraid some one may come, with better airplanes and submarines than ours, and steal it; so the government will dig a deep hole, far from the coast, put in it a huge safe, and hide away the gold lump, that is used only to impress the financial imagination of the world and keep foreigners from knocking down our currency.

Dolores Anne Diamond, only four, surprised teachers in a Schenectady kindergarten. She said the games for little children bored her, and she could recite the alphabet backward.

Dolores was moved to the first grade, and could have gone higher. She has the intelligence of a child of fourteen.

Usually it is better for a child to develop slowly and normally. The infant prodigy is usually dull later. Perhaps little Dolores will be an exception, like Mozart, and, at eighteen, as wise as Hypatia, with a happier ending.

Lloyd George, in spite of his seventy-two years, returns to active politics. He hates the "arid atmosphere of political controversy" and returns to active politics only because he believes that world conditions are growing worse, and "from the point of view of peace are worse than before 1914."

Miss Koutanova, Russian, twenty-one years old, jumped 25,426 feet from an airplane without oxygen apparatus and landed in a cabbage field after turning over four times before her parachute opened. She claims the female record.

Russia is teaching millions of young people to use parachutes, the first step in curing nervousness in flying. Here we have only a small handful of excellent pilots, but the masses of our population know as little about aviation as they do about "geometry in space."

Mr. Werner Kahn, district leader of "Hitler Youth," says Nazi doctrines have become Germany's real religion, and "the time must come when entry into the Hitler Youth organization will take the place now occupied by Catholic or Protestant confirmation." Furthermore, the young gentleman says, "I declare to all enemies of Hitler Youth that the fuehrer is our faith and national socialism is our religion."

Millions of us go through life getting little sunshine, rarely if ever looking at the stars, our interests not unlike that of the entomologically interesting tumblebug, that spends its life in the field, rolling little balls of manure into a burrow. He doesn't even realize that there is a sun, or stars, and many men are like him, although they may "own fine country places."

ALABAMA NEWS

A resume of the more important events of interest gathered from all sections of the State.

A new concrete paved boulevard connecting Gadsden with Attalla has been approved by the State Highway Commission. Forrest Avenue will be extended from Alabama City to Attalla. It is now being paved from Gadsden across Black Creek to Alabama City. The extension will be started within 60 days.

Invitations to bring the 1936 Alabama American Legion convention to Huntsville have been mailed to approximately 150 officials of the organization over the state by the Chamber of Commerce and Better Business Bureau. The state convention this year is to be held at Mobile, July 15-17.

The State Bridge Commission has instructed its engineers to re-survey one of the proposed locations for a new Tennessee River bridge between Florence and Sheffield. This action led to the belief that the commission has chosen a definite site for the bridge.

Projects totaling nearly $13,000,000 and designed to provide work for 6,200 jobless persons by the last of July, with the number to be doubled by the end of August, were announced for Alabama by President Roosevelt, at a press conference in Washington.

All prisoners in Morgan County jail have been fingerprinted and the prints forwarded to the Department of Justice, and all persons arrested in the future and confined in Morgan County jail will be fingerprinted and their records sent to Washington.

Adoption of a two-year preliminary college course as the standard requirement for dental students in Alabama was announced by the State Board of Dental Examiners upon completion of the annual examination of candidates for dental practice.

Work will begin soon on the 16-mile road between Selma and Plantersville, a section of the highway to Birmingham. The $99,000 project will be financed by equal sums from three sources, the Federal Government, the state and Dallas County.

Construction has started on a high tension transmission line to supply power in the area extending from Wilson Dam to the site of Pickwick Landing Dam. Cost of the line, which will be 45 miles long, is estimated at $300,000.

More than $2,000,000 has been distributed to Alabama cotton growers in the first rental payment of the 1935 cotton adjustment program and over $3,000,000 additional is expected to be distributed within the next few days.

All persons convicted of felonies under the laws of any state or the federal government must register with police within 48 hours, according to provisions of an ordinance adopted by the Birmingham City Commission.

For building three new schools and an addition to another school, the Gadsden Board of Education will apply for $400,000 in Federal work-relief funds. The City Commission approved this move at a meeting recently.

The Alabama division of the Federal Housing Administration reports approximately $1,000,000 in long-term loans since it was set up less than a year ago, and applications are pending for an additional million.

A drive to collect approximately $75,000 delinquent personal taxes in Jefferson County has been started by Tax Collector J. W. Hamilton, who placed a deputy in the field to levy against such property.

Mayor J. M. Lile, of Leighton, announced that the Federal Works Progress Administration has approved a loan and grant of $31,750 to that town with which to install a municipal water system.

Remembering the time when he used to frequent the "ole swimmin' hole" without benefit of clothing, S. B. Howard, Florence city recorder, freed seven youths charged with bathing in the nude.

Invitations have been extended more than 800 persons to attend the First Laymen's Institute of the Gadsden district of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, July 10-12, at Gadsden.

State engineers will complete preliminary work, and operations will start soon on the 16 miles of the Selma-Plantersville link of the Birmingham highway.

Gov. Bibb Graves has granted permanent paroles to 79 convicts—prohibition law violators—who were released last Spring on temporary or "crop paroles."

Owners of the 1200 homes at Alabama City have been ordered by the City Commission to connect with the new $300,000 sanitary sewer system, just completed.

A total of 108 courses will be available in the correspondence studies offered by the extension division of the University of Alabama during the coming year.

Simplicity and Chic in Morning

PATTERN 9316

It's as fresh as the morning dew! And it was designed for all those clever women who like to put in a smart appearance at the very beginning of every new day. Three or four dresses made up by this pattern would solve all your house frock problems. And the expense will prove trifling. Moreover, this pattern has been designed so simply that to follow it will seem like a first lesson in sewing. The yoke and sleeves all-in-one with a bit of bodice fullness below, and the decorative pocket make this frock very smart indeed! Percale or gingham in gay plaids or small geometric designs would be effective. Add nobby cork or wooden buttons.

Pattern 9316 may be ordered only in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 3¼ yards 36-inch fabric.

SEND FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

Complete, Diagrammed Sew Chart included.

Send your order to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 232 West Eighteenth street, New York.

Novelty's the Word for Swim Suits

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

JUST what, do you suppose, "are the wild waves saying" in regard to the whimsical, colorful and sometimes amusing water sports fashions which are so merrily splashing, dashing, swimming, bathing, diving and floating and frolicing in ocean blue, or lake or river or new fangled swimming pool or wherever enthusiastic water fans happen to be?

Well, one thing is certain, if they are saying anything, they are undoubtedly holding an exciting conversation as to the trend to novelty which is so outstandingly characteristic of the latest in swim and beach suits. This is especially true in regard to media and materials, which are that novel they deny the theory that there is nothing new under the sun.

There's lace, for instance, which as a charming innovation, so far as bathing suits are concerned, has set the fashion world abuzz this season. Dilkusha, a youthful French designer of renown, conceived the idea. The lace makers obligingly followed along with a fabric that could be used with assured modesty and pleasing effect. Comfortable to swim in, attractive in appearance, lace threatens to be a leader in the race for beachwear popularity. In the picture, the suit to the left is fashioned of lace of firm dependable quality. Even the bathing clogs are of lace, closely woven and snug-fitting.

Another sensation is the debut of velvet as medium for the bathing suit. Of course the velvet has been processed to resist the ravages of water. Then, too, it is crinkled instead of smooth and shakes out and dries, moisture injuring its appearance not in the least. See the velvet suit pictured in the center of the group.

Knits will prove grand choices. While there is nothing new in the idea of the bathing suit which is knitted yet there is everything new in knitted effects as brought out this season. Their chief claim to novelty is in the daring and bizarre colorings and patterned effects instead of plain solid tones. The new print or jacquard knits are so spectacular that they easily add as much color to the beach panorama as do the gaily striped parasols and deck chairs.

The style tide in knitted suits is running strongly to the maillot, or skirtless swim suit, because it permits the greatest freedom of action and exposes a maximum of skin surface to healthful sun rays. Maillots are also most flattering to fine figures, which is another argument in their favor. A smart version of the maillot, in a jacquard knit with a deep U-back, halter neck and the fitted uplift (characteristic of the majority of 1935 suits) is shown to the right in the illustration. Huge bubble dots, alternating outline and solid, contribute splotches of striking color to its patterning. Among the beguiling combinations are white dots on a skipper blue ground, sulphur yellow on brown, rouge on glory blue and white on tropic green.

Many fashionwise water-fans will do their swimming and sunsoaking in skirtless or skirted, if you so prefer, one-piece suits which have backs formed by adjustable straps drawn together at the back in a ring or some other ingenious and attractive device surrounding the waist as a self belt, carelessly tied at the front to give the smart and casual touch.

BEACH TOWEL WRAP

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Immense bath towels with fantastic designs, fish, lobsters, and palm trees being their decorative motifs done in eye-appealing colors are being used at leading summer resorts as rugs and beach wraps. The picture shows how smartly and artfully they wrap themselves about scanty bathing suits. Measuring 38 by 72 inches as they do, these enormous bath-and-beach towels serve as ample rugs on sandy shores, lending color and tone to the scene.

NEWEST STYLES IN OUTFITS FOR BEACH

From tailored severity to lacy laziness, the newest beach clothes range, with in-between numbers of quaint pastoral quality and daring modern themes.

There's a gay nineties air about a swim suit of polka-dotted red lastex woolen with white ruffles around the top and bottom, and forming the shoulder straps, which cross in the back.

Then there is the English schoolboy outfit, so popular with beach lollers this season, which usually consists of tailor shorts and shirt of navy or polka-dotted twill, a matching ascot and a tailored white pique or linen jacket.

The Bavarian note is with us, too, in pastoral beach frocks of flowered glazed chintz, with lace bodices and sometimes even milkmaid aprons.

There is the Tyrolean trend, in gay chintz shirts and skirt-length slacks, with suspenders and gay belts. You wear these with a plumed Alpine hat.

Summer Prints Are Using Flowers as Big as Plates

Prints splashed with the biggest figures Paris has ever used—flowers the size of a large dinner plate—are next on the summer style scene.

Black or white crepes printed with huge plate-sized yellow and green sunflowers fashion slender gowns whose hemlines and trains are encircled by diagonal flounces. Their tops are sometimes without shoulder straps, leaving shoulders and back bare, the decollete often rimmed by a big ruche of the flowers cut from the material and strung with loops of horsehair ribbon. More prints, this time patterned in saucer-sized tulips, fashion other gowns cut along similar lines.

Gaudy Ornaments

Ornaments for afternoon and evening wear are gaudy and often introduce a contrasting color. Quaint jewelled belts are daring and sometimes have bracelets or other ornaments to match.

Lesson for July 14

NAOMI

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:14-22; 4:14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—A woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.—Proverbs 31:30.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Happy Family.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Making a Happy Home.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Living Our Religion.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making Religion Attractive.

In teaching this lesson it will be necessary to cover the entire book of Ruth.

I. Naomi's Sojourn in Moab (Ruth 1:1, 2).

On account of famine in the land of Judah, Naomi with her husband and two sons emigrated to the land of Moab. It is strangely inconsistent for a man whose name means "my God is King," who has a wife whose name is "the pleasant one," and who lives in a town which means "house of bread," to sojourn in the enemy's country on account of famine at home.

II. Naomi's Bereavement (Ruth 1:3-5).

After the death of her husband, her two sons married Moabitish women. In a short time, her sons also died. This is a dreary picture—three widows in the same home in a short time.

III. Her Return to Bethlehem (Ruth 1:6-22.

Having heard that the Lord had visited his people in Judah in giving them bread, Naomi decided to return to her home land. After she had experienced chastisement she returned.

1. Ruth accompanies her. When the time came for Naomi to go from Moab, Ruth and Orpah accompanied her for a distance. She frankly placed before them the difficulties which would confront them, and repeatedly urged them to turn back.

a. No chance to marry again. She reminded Ruth and Orpah that she had no more sons for whom they could wait.

b. Their heathen gods must be renounced (v. 15). She made it quite clear to them that idolatry could not be practiced in the land where God's people dwelt.

c. Though Orpah went back, Ruth stood the test. Her mind was fully made up. She was willing to accept as her God the One who was able to produce in his subjects the nobility of character she observed in Naomi.

2. Naomi's reception. Her arrival made a stir in Bethlehem. The people recognized her and perceived a marked change wrought in her. Ten years of such trials would make a noticeable change even outwardly, but the change was mainly inward. She asked that her name he changed to Mara.

IV. Naomi's Gracious and Tactful Behavior (Ruth 2, 3).

1. She remembered her wealthy kinsman (ch. 2). In the case of a forfeited possession, it was incumbent upon the nearest kinsman to redeem it. Boaz was a kinsman. It was necessary for both Naomi and Ruth to have food. Barley harvest afforded that opportunity. The divine provision was made for the poor when the harvest was gathered (Lev. 19:9, 10; 23:22; Deut. 21:19). The matter was talked over between Naomi and Ruth, and arrangement was made for Ruth to glean in the field of Boaz.

2. Naomi seeking rest for Ruth (ch. 3). This rest was to be in the house of a husband. Other things being equal, such is the only real place of rest for a woman. Naomi instructed Ruth as to her toilet preparations so as to be attractive and then also as to presenting her claim upon Boaz to perform the duty of a kinsman in redeeming the forfeited estate because of the sojourn in Moab. The redemption of the estate involved not only the ability to pay the price of the forfeited possession, but also the marrying of the woman.

V. Naomi's Reward (4:14-17).

1. Blessed by the women of Bethlehem (vv. 14, 15). The birth of a son to Ruth was the occasion of this blessing. It meant the perpetuation of the line of kinship, and looked forward to the true Redeemer, our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

2. She became the nurse for her grandson (v. 16). This not only provided her with a home and living, but with the opportunity of helping on the purpose of God in the coming redemption.

3. The baby given a name (v. 17). "Obed" means "servant of God." Ruth thus became a link in the ancestral chain of our Kinsman and Redeemer, Jesus Christ. The introduction of a Gentile into this line indicated the outreach of the redemptive purpose of God, which extends to the peoples of the whole world.

Progress

A marked characteristic of the progressive man is that he is always improving something somewhere. He has a horror of possible deterioration, and he knows the demoralizing, disintegrating power of familiarity with inferiority.—O. S. M.

Children

A child is trained much more by example than precept. Parents should therefore be most careful to act up to what they profess; and to let their actions be a reflex of their words.

Madness of Anarchism Seems to Be Passing

In the '60s, '70s and '80s, in Italy, Spain and, above all, Russia, the mad wisdom of the anarchist gospel had a strong hold on many people, and the history of the Nineteenth century is full of their bloody deeds. Now only small factions of the party still remain in Italy and Spain.

The real anarchist sees the only way to happiness through the destruction of all kinds of governments. To an anarchist a Bolshevist government is just as bad as a monarchy. If he could, he would gladly kill any high official who represented the principles of ordered government.

A real anarchist should not be confused with those sporadic madmen whose deeds we have witnessed in recent years. The murderer of Mayor Cermak of Chicago, Zangara, who confessed that he had an inner urge to kill the President, was not an anarchist but just criminally insane. So was the slayer of President McKinley or the wretch who killed Empress Elizabeth in Switzerland two generations ago.

The real anarchist is mostly a wide-eyed idealist who has acquired a queer little twist in some corner of his brain. Behind the explosions of bombs and the scattered remains of his victims he sees a new and better world rising. Fortunately for us, this strange specimen of humanity seems to be disappearing.—Harry Soderman in the Forum and Century.

MILNESIA The Original WAFERS MILK OF MAGNESIA WAFERS

YOU ALWAYS GET BETTER QUALITY AT NO HIGHER PRICE WHEN YOU BUY A FIRESTONE TIRE WITH FIRESTONE NAME AND GUARANTEE

TIRES may look alike on the outside, but on the inside where blowouts start, they are different. Firestone Tires are made blowout-proof by Gum-Dipping, a patented extra process which soaks every cotton cord and insulates every strand with pure liquid rubber. In fact, every 100 pounds of cotton cords absorb eight additional pounds of liquid rubber. This special process prevents internal friction and heat, the main cause of blowouts. No other make of tire is Gum-Dipped, yet you pay no more for Firestone blowout-proof protection than you are asked to pay for tires built without this patented safety construction feature.

The make of tires you buy for your car becomes a matter of vital importance when you realize that there were 882,000 automobile accidents in 1934 injuring 954,000 people and killing 36,000 and that 43,000 of these accidents were caused by blowouts, punctures and skidding.

Firestone High Speed Gum-Dipped Tires hold all world records on road and track for safety, speed, mileage and endurance. These records emphasize the undisputed evidence that Firestone Tires are not only blowout-proof but give greatest protection against skidding.

THERE ARE THREE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS THAT WILL SOLVE YOUR PROBLEM OF WHAT TIRES TO BUY

1 "Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

Recent tests by a leading University show that Firestone High Speed Non-Skid Tires stop a car 15% quicker than any other of the leading makes.

For eight consecutive years Firestone Tires have been on the winning car in the dangerous Pike's Peak Race where a skid means death. This is undisputed evidence that Firestone gives car owners greatest protection against skidding.

2 "Are they blowout-proof?"

Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have the most amazing records for being blowout-proof of any tires ever built. In the gruelling 500-Mile Race at Indianapolis, May 30th, every one of the 33 cars was equipped with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Kelly Petillo won the race and broke the record over this 26-year-old rough brick track without tire trouble—in fact, not one of the 33 drivers had tire trouble of any kind.

Ab Jenkins drove his 5,000 pound car on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires over the hot salt beds of Utah, 3,000 miles in 23½ hours, at an average speed of 127.2 miles per hour, with temperatures as high as 120°, without tire trouble of any kind. These are most amazing proofs of blowout protection ever known.

3 "Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

Firestone High Speed Tires not only give you more than 50% longer wear, but also lowest cost per mile. This is made possible by the tough, wear-resisting tread built with higher shoulders and a wider, flatter contour. This thick, rugged, scientifically designed tread is held securely to the Gum-Dipped cord body by Firestone's patented construction of two extra layers of cords under the tread. This is a special construction feature not used in any other tire. Unequaled mileage records by thousands of car owners add undisputed evidence of the longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed Tires.

KINGDOM NEWS

The Sunday School at Antioch Church continues to grow and plans have been made by the church personnel to add to the church three Sunday School rooms to be used for the primary children. This addition to the church has been a long time need and it is especially interesting to know that the children can look forward to a time when they can have class rooms of their own. B. B. Mooney, W. E. Armstrong and P. P. Anderson have been appointed by the church to act as finance and building committee and plans are for work to begin on these rooms in about a month. The Sunday School is doing fine work and uses the graded literature and six point record system. Members making the Honor Roll for the month of June—that is those who made the entire six points for the whole month, were: J. T. Lovett, P. P. Anderson, Mrs. P. P. Anderson, Marguerite Ingram, Joe Thomas Anderson, Fredrick Anderson, Miss Jewel Armstrong, Mrs. J. E. Lewis and Mrs. J. P. Miles. New officers and teachers elected by the church to serve in the Sunday School, are: P. P. Anderson, Supt.; Preston Wilder, Assistant Supt.; Mrs. P. P. Anderson, Secretary and Treasurer; J. T. Lovett, Bible Class Teacher; Mrs. B. B. Mooney, Adult Class; Mrs. Purser Miles, Intermediate Class; B. B. Mooney, Junior Class; Mrs. J. E. Lewis, Primary Class; and Miss Jewel Armstrong, Beginners Class.

Fhneral services for Clalde D. Nichols, of Birmingham, were held at the Williams cemetery on Thursday, July 4th. Mr. Nichols had been in ill health for some time and died in a Birmingham hospital. He was 47 years old. He will be remembered by many in this community as he at one time made his home here. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Beulah Acker before her marriage; two sons, Floyd and Jack Nichols; and three daughters, Mrs. D. C. Waites and Misses Gertrude and Jean Nichols.

Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Paine have named their little son, Bobby Ben.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Blatzer and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Herman and children, of Birmingham, spent Thursday here.

Wishes Other Costs Would Drop Like Electricity

Like lots of other Alabama folks, Mrs. A. R. Steele, of Huntsville, is delighted with the way her bills for electricity have steadily gone down while other living costs were going up. Recently she wrote: "In the times we are having today, I am sure you will be surprised to receive this kind of a letter, but I am tempted to write it, as I am very much satisfied with my electric bills from your company.

"I have an electric range, water heater and refrigerator, together with miscellaneous lighting and other appliances and I have used these appliances for the past seven years. Instead of my bills getting larger year by year, they have been materially reduced.

"If the price on some of the other things we have to use were reduced correspondingly things would be a whole lot easier." Adv. Alabama Power Co.

COUNTY PICNIC TO BE HELD ON JULY 25 AT SHELBY SPRINGS

On next Thursday, July 25th, we are having our county-wide picnic and want to urge all farmers and friends of farmers to begin now to make plans to spend the day together at Shelby Springs. These picnics are annual events and fine for renewing our fellowship and good will towards each other. Mixing and mingling with our neighbors, eating together, exchanging ideas and listening to good talks on interesting and timely subjects—all these things are good for us.

We have planned to have individual basket lunch; so you are not under obligations to feed anyone—just bring your own basket. There will also be barbecue on the ground for sale.

A good program of speaking, band music, singing, etc., has been arranged and I am sure everyone will enjoy it. Hon. R. J. Goode. Commissioner of Agriculture, Mr. Roland Turner, Head of the Agricultural Division of the Southern Railway, and other good speakers will appear on the program. A loud speaker will be installed, so that everyone will be able to hear the entire program.

If you do not have a car, arrange with someone who has, or make up a crowd to go in a truck or school bus, and come along and join us; you will enjoy the day.

Looking forward to seeing you at the picnic, I am

Very truly yours.

Shelby County Farm Agent

AGRICULTURE, INDUSTRY TO HOLD JOINT SESSION

AUBURN, Ala.—In an effort to bring about closer cooperation of Alabama's agriculture and industry, arrangements have been made for farmers and industrial leaders of the state to hold a joint session here during Farmers' Week, July 30 to August 2. The session will be held on Wednesday morning, July 31.

Outstanding leaders in agriculture and industry have agreed to speak to the joint session. R. J. Goode, state commissioner of agriculture and industries, will speak in behalf of agriculture, and J. L. Perry, president, Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company; Hugh Morrow, president, Schloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron Co.; and Ashton B. Collins, executive secretary of the Alabama Associated Industries, will speak for industry.

Dr. L. N. Duncan, president, Alabama Polytechnic Institute and director of the State Extension Service, reports that a large group of industrialists of Birmingham and other leading cities in the state, as well as more than 1,000 farmers and farm women, have expressed their intentions of attending the joint session.

MARY NELL GIBSON CALLED BY DEATH ON WED., JULY 10

Little Mary Nell Gibson, 12 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jim Gibson who live near Columbiana, died at South Highland Infirmary in Birmingham on Wednesday, July 10, 1935, after a brief illness

We take this opportunity to extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved loved ones. Although we feel keenly our loss, we know that she has gained eternal life.

Surviving Mary Nell are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jim Gibson, one sister and three brothers.

Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Elijah Horton and the Rev. E. E. Wells at Summerhill Church. Walton in charge of Interment.

COUNTY TO GET U. S. MONEY; WALKER NOTIFIED MONDAY

The following telegram was received by Probate Judge Len C. Walker from Senator John H. Bankhead and will be read with keen interest throughout Shelby County:

Washington, D. C.,
July 15th, 1935.

"Hon. L. C. Walker,
Probate Judge,
Columbiana, Alabama.

The President has just allocated the following amounts for Shelby County: $6,430 for Swimming Pool at Columbiana; $1,469 for Courthouse and Jail repairs; $18,677 for culvert and bridge construction; $16,088 for secondary road construction; and $10,635 for construction of Gymnasium at Alabama College for women. Congratulations. (Signed)

JOHN H. BANKHEAD."

The above scheduled improvements will begin immediately in the County, thereby giving employment to hundreds of workers now idle.

Two Are Injured In Road Accident

SAGINAW, Ala.—Russell Findley and Jim Cardwell, of near Saginaw, were seriously injured when they were struck by an automobile as they walked along the highway south of Saginaw, 22 miles south of Birmingham on the Montgomery Highway, early Sunday night.

Officers said the automobile failed to stop after the accident. A hasty examination revealed Cardwell suffered a broken leg and possible internal injuries. Findley was cut on the head, his shoulder was bruised badly and his leg was injured.

The two men, both about 25, were found on the highway by a passing motorist who took them to Saginaw. They were carried to Hillman Hospital in Birmingham in Ridout and Johns ambulances.

MRS. FRANK FULTON CALLED BY DEATH SATURDAY, JULY 13

Funeral services were conducted for Mrs. Frank Fulton on Sunday afternoon, July 14, 1935, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs T. R. Walton, in Columbiana. The Reverend D. Z. Wooley, T. K. Roberts and Henry M. Hurst were in charge of the service.

Mrs. Fulton was one of the most beloved young matrons in Columbiana, where she has lived practically all her life. For the past three years she has been a patient sufferer, and from lips of loved ones comes the tribute that those who knew her best, loved her most.

Her father, T. R. Walton, has the following to say of her:

TO EVA.

"She was sweet, we loved her so—
But, Jesus called, she had to go.
I know she's there in Mansion's bright,
We cannot see her—she is gone from sight.
Some day we'll see her, it won't be long
There with Jesus around His great white throne.
She suffered much, but always smiled
She knew she'd be with Jesus after a while.
She can't come back, this we know,
We are going to be ready when time comes to go,
Then we shall meet her in Heaven above,
Where all is sweet, and all is love."

Mrs. Fulton is survived by her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs T. R. Walton; one brother, Homer J. Walton; her husband, Frank Fulton; and son, Dick Fulton.

The Democrat joins a host of friends in extending sincere sympathy to the bereaved loven ones.

Farmers Profit By Growing Own Mules

AUBURN, Ala.—Alabama farmers can produce their own mules cheaper than they can buy them at present high prices, said Prof. J. C. Grimes, head of the animal husbandry department of the Alabama Experiment Station, who reports that "Last year Alabama paid at least one million dollars outside of the State for mules which could have been produced more cheaply at home."

The average farm mare can produce a colt each year and still do about as much work as the other stock, he points out. "If the mares are bred so that the colts will be dropped in the early spring a two-weeks vacation at foaling time is enough time off from their regular work."

Farm Gardens Need Shallow Cultivation

AUBURN, Ala. — Vegetable gardens should be cultivated often enough to keep down weeds and grass and thus prevent the loss of plant food and moisture needed by the vegetables, says Julian Brown, extension horticulturist, who advises that "all cultivation should be shallow, as deep cultivation destroys fine feed roots and injures the vegetables."

"The primary purpose of cultivation is to conserve moisture and plant food," he continues. "If the garden area is thoroughly prepared before cultivation will not be necessary. The hoe can be used to better advantage in many cases than the plow."

Cotton Program Doubles Benefits

AUBURN, Ala. — By providing price insurance in favorable years and crop insurance in unfavorable years, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration gives cotton farmers double benefits, says Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the state extension service.

"In favorable crop years," he says, "the operation of the program serves to keep down burdensome and excessive supplies of cotton which would depress the market, thus providing, in effect, actual insurance to producers against such prices as prevailed in the 1931-32 and 1932-33 seasons.

"In unfavorable crop years," he explains, "producers who suffer the loss of a portion of their crop through uncontrollable causes receive adjustment payments on rented acres, and parity payments on their production quotas, just the same as if they had had normal crops. In addition, they receive an income from the sale of their surplus tax-exemption certificates, the total sales of which last year amounted to more than $26,000,000."

Musical Comedy Set For Friday, July 26

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — The Women's Missionary Society of the Montevallo Methodist Church presents "Here Comes Arabella", a musical comedy with a cast of 60, at Palmer Hall, Alabama College, July 26, 1935, at 8 p. m. Admission 15 and 35c.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD FOR RUSSEL C. OAKES, JULY 12

VINCENT, Ala.—The funeral of Russel Crumpton Oakes, age 31, was held at the Harpersville Methodist Church, July 12th, with the Rev. J. N. Davidson officiating. He was accidentally electrocuted while in the employ of the Chicago Bridge and Iron Works in West Point, Miss.

He is survived by his father, B. F. Oakes, of Vincent; one son, Edwain, of Corsicana, Texas; seven brothers, George F., of Atlanta, James J. and Phillip, of Birmingham, Alvin L., of Houston, Texas, W. M Reuben and Estes Oakes, of Vincent; six of the above brothers acted as Pall Bearers. He is also survived by two sisters and a number of other relatives.

Other relatives attending the funeral were: Mrs. L. C. Atkinson, Miss Mildred Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Carder, Mr. Horace Peeples and Miss Eunice Peeples of Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. A. L. Oakes, of Houston, Texas; Gordon and John Oakes and Mrs. Arthur Brown, of Birmingham; Mrs. James Goss, of Cropwell and Mr. Wasson Harmon, of Pell City.

Willingham and Willingham, of Pell City, relatives of the deceased, were in charge.

Vegetables To Plant In July And August

AUBURN, Ala.—By planting various vegetables during July and August and giving them proper attention, farmers may have good fall gardens from which to harvest fresh vegetables needed in their homes during the fall and winter months.

This is reported by Julian Brown, extension horticulturist, who names the following vegetables to plant in various parts of the State during the next two months:

For south Alabama: Beans, sweet corn, cucumber, eggplant, garlic, gherkin, melons, okra, onions, pepper, potatoes, squash, and tomatoes.

For central Alabama: Beans, carrots, collards, sweet corn, cucumber, endive, garlic, gherkins, melons, okra, onions, peas, pepper, potatoes, squash, and tomatoes.

For north Alabama: Beans, cabbage, sweet corn, cucumber, endive, gherkins, kohl-rabi, letturce, peas, potatoes, and tomatoes.

CARD OF THANKS.

At this time we have not words to express our thanks and appreciation to friends and loved ones for their help and sympathy during the sickness and death of our daughter, Eva Walton Fulton. May God's richest blessings and Heaven's glory shine on all. (Signed)

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Walton.

SENATORS BL[illegible] & BANKHEAD ARE TO SPEAK AT AUBURN

AUBURN, Ala.—U. S. Senators Black and Bankhead are scheduled to speak to Alabama farmers and farm women who attend Farmers' Week here July 30 to August 2. Senator Bankhead will speak at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, on "National Farm Legislation," and Senator Black will speak Thursday afternoon on "The New Deal."

Governor Bibb Graves will address the farmers Wednesday evening when leading farm men and women will be recognized for their outstanding work in agriculture.

Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Mrs. Charles W. Sewell, administrative director of the Associated Women of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and Earl Smith, president of the Illinois Agricultural Association, have also accepted invitations to appear on the program.

Agriculture and industry will be brought closer together in a joint session of farmers and industrial leaders Wednesday morning. Speakers for the joint session include R. J. Goode, state commissioner of agriculture; J. L. Perry, president, T. C. I., Birmingham; Hugh Morrow, president, Sloss-Sheffield Steel and Iron Company, Birmingham; and Ashton B. Collins, executive secretary, Alabama Associated Industries.

U. S. Senate Passes Bankhead Tenant Bill

AUBURN, Ala.—The Bankhead bill providing government money for financing tenant farmers and sharecroppers in the purchase of land and homes has passed the Senate and is now before the House Agricultural Committee for consideration.

The bill would set up a corporation with an initial capitalization of $50,000,000 out of work relief funds, and an eventual borrowing power of $1,000,000,000 to make loans to farmers, farm tenants, share-croppers or farm laborers, to purchase small farms. They would have up to 60 years to repay the loans at low interest rates.

Program For Picnic To Be Held July 25

There will be a number of prominent speakers with us at our annual picnic set for next Thursday, July 25, including: Hon. R. J. Goode, Comm. of Agriculture; Mr. Roland Turner, Head of the Agricultural Division of the Southern Railway; Prof. Dowling, Supt. of Education of Tuscaloosa County; Music will be furnished by the Buck Creek Cotton Mills Band; and Prof. P. B. Shaw will be there in charge of the Quartette. Make your plans to come, and help make this the best picnic we have ever had.

(Signed) A. A. Lauderdale, Co. Agt.

Miss Ruth Luck left Wednesday morning for Mobile where she will visit Miss Zoe Neville.

24 STATES TURN TO SALES TAX TO GET NEEDED REVENUE

NEW YORK, N. Y.—A growing use of sales taxes by the states to meet current relief needs and avoid dangerous public debts is revealed by a survey of the National Industrial Conference Board showing exactly half the states raising revenue in this manner.

This represents an increase of 21 states since April, 1932, when only Mississippi, North Carolina and West Virginia had retail or general sales taxes.

Most of the laws of the last few years have been adopted as temporary measures designed primarily to meet the emergency. Many states are reported slashing their budgets to lift the tax burden off their citizens, while the Federal deficit continues to mount, leaving the tax load for the future.

The states utilizing sales taxes, and their classification, follow:

General sales taxes: Arizona, North Carolina and Washington.

Gross receipts taxes: Mississippi and New Mexico.

Gross income taxes: Indiana, South Dakota and West Virginia.

Retail sales taxes: Arkansas, Idaho, California, Colorado, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, North Dakota, Missouri, Ohio, Oklahoma, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming. On July 1, New Jersey and South Dakota were included in this group as well.

FEEDERS WANTING CALVES

AUBURN, Ala.—Because of the excellent results Alabama produced calves have given in feedlots, cattle feeders of the Carolinas and Virginia are making inquiry of extension livestock specialists here as to where feeder calves of good quality Hereford and Angus breeding can be found.

Home-Coming Day At Poplar Springs Church

Next Sunday, July 21st, is Home-Coming Day at Poplar Springs Baptist Church, located three miles southeast of Hanover, and the largest crowd ever assembled for a Home-Coming Day there, is expected. One former Coosian writes: "We will be there thirty strong from our community, bringing dinner and 100 song books. Push the Home-Coming Day event". Another community in another county is expected to have at least fifty representatives present.

There are many ex-Coosians in Shelby County. We would like for them to be present and thhey are hereby cordially extended an invitation to come and be with us. This invitation includes the Editor and office force of the paper carrying this notice.

All former pastors are cordially invited. Rev. Butler Miller, of Calera, who was reared in Poplar Springs community, has been invited to preach on this occasion.

Hoping to see a large number from Shelby County next Sunday at Poplar Springs, I am,

Yours very truly,
John A. Darden, Goodwater, Ala.

Lobbying and Virgin Islands Investigations Develop Lively Scraps—House "Rebels" Are Tame Concerning TVA Amendments.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

FIFTY thousand dollars was appropriated by the house for investigation by the rules committee of lobbying for and against bills affecting utilities interests. Representative Rankin of Mississippi declared that Representative O'Connor of New York, chairman of the committee, was unfit to conduct the inquiry because he was antagonistic to the administration. O'Connor, rising to reply, was given an ovation by the house, and promised the investigation would be thorough and impartial.

T. G. Corcoran

Already the committee had begun its work, the first witness being Representative Brewster of Maine, who declared Thomas G. Corcoran, New Deal lawyer, had tried to force him to vote for the "death sentence" provision in the utilities bill by threats of stopping work on the Passamaquoddy project. Corcoran was then put on the stand and denied the main features of Brewster's story, whereupon the Maine congressman shouted, "You're a liar." Corcoran explained with facility his activities in behalf of the utilities measure. He said he was assigned to help with the original drafting of the bill "through a direct request from the President." Senators Wheeler and Rayburn, he said, asked him to help bring about passage of the bill.

The senate committee on audit and controls reported favorably on a resolution calling for a $50,000 appropriation to investigate lobbying in connection with all legislation at this session, and the resolution was adopted by the senate.

PERHAPS it was the summer heat in Washington; perhaps there was a lot of pressure from the direction of the White House. Anyhow, the backbones of the house Democrats, recently so stiff against "dictation" by the administration, weakened most noticeably when the house took up the redrafting of the Tennessee Valley authority act. Nearly all the recent "rebels" among the Democrats fell into line and the bill was shorn of every major provision that was objectionable to the President. These amendments were approved:

To delete a clause saying the TVA must sell power or chemicals at not less than cost after July 1, 1937.

To let the TVA operate without absolute control by the comptroller general over its expenditures.

To delete a section preventing the agency from constructing power lines paralleling existing private ones.

To let the authority decide whether private interests may build dams or appurtenant works on the Tennessee river or tributaries.

This victory greatly heartened the administration forces, and they pressed forward to try for another in the conference on the utilities bill. Also in the senate they carried on a determined fight for the amendments broadening the powers of the AAA. Senators Borah and Byrd were the chief opponents of the New Dealers in this latter battle.

ONE of the hottest scraps of the year developed between Secretary of the Interior Ickes and Senator Tydings of Maryland over the inquiry into the administration of Gov. Paul M. Pearson in the Virgin islands. The secretary accused the senator of "whitewashing" a witness before the Tydings committee; and the senator retorted by advising the secretary to "confine yourself to the duties for which you have been appointed." Both of them were thoroughly angry and Tydings in a letter accused Ickes of seeking "cheap publicity."

Sec'y Ickes

Federal Judge T. Webber Wilson of the Virgin Islands had given testimony that exasperated Ickes and the secretary demanded that the judge be removed from office for "official misconduct." Then Ickes wrote to Tydings a letter carrying his charge of "whitewashing" and saying of the judge's testimony: "There was no cross-examination to test his truthfulness, and if any statement ever needed such a test, it was his."

Judge Wilson had told the committee that there had been "administrative interference" with his court and that Morris Ernst, counsel for the Civil Liberties union, while a guest of Governor Pearson, had threatened to put him "on the spot" in the press unless he granted a rehearing to a government employee accused of theft.

Tydings accused Secretary Ickes of "gross deceit upon the American people" by stating in an Interior department press release that Paul C. Yates, administrative assistant of Pearson, had been discharged, when "you know and I know that Mr. Yates had resigned five days before your press release was issued."

TO PROVIDE quick employment and end the dole, the entire four-billion-dollar works-relief fund must be expended within the next twelve months. Such was the flat statement of President Roosevelt to the state PWA directors, who were gathered in Washington for a two day conference. After discussing the old PWA program, the President said: "You are now an important part of an even greater effort—one to be made during the next year which will provide quick employment, so that we can attain, if possible, the goal we have set within this year 1935. Before the year is ended we will end the dole we have been paying to employable persons during the last two years. In other words, we must give useful work to three and one-half million people and I believe we are going to do it.

"In order to do it, of course, we are faced by a problem of arithmetic which is comparatively simple. We have four billion dollars and three and one-half million people to put to work with it. That means we have to average things up. It means that we have on the average about $1,140 per man year.

"That has to include the cost of the material, so that the four billion dollars includes not only the amount we pay the men but also the cost of the material. It is a perfectly simple arithmetical problem—we have to work out an average that will come within the sum of money divided by the number of people we have to put to work.

"You know, of course, that we have spent a great deal of money during the last two years, but we find now not only that there are additional funds at our disposal but also that the need of permanent work all over the United States is not yet ended. We find that the deeper we go into it the more opportunities we have to do constructive work in almost every community in the country."

STANDING atop a cannon, Benito Mussolini told 15,000 Black Shirt volunteers and the world as well that in the matter of Ethiopia "We have decided upon a struggle in which we as a government and a people will not turn back. The decision is irretrievable."

W. P. George

Unless Emperor Haile Selassie gets right down on his knees to Il Duce, the war in his dominion will begin in September when the rainy season ends. No one expects the "king of kings" to submit tamely, so other nations are advising their nationals in Ethiopia to get out of the country. William Perry George, the American charge d'affaires at Addis Ababa, was authorized by the State department to advise American citizens to leave, or take whatever other steps he deemed necessary to protect their safety.

Mr. George transmitted to the emperor the rather curt reply of the American government to his majesty's appeal for aid in stopping Italy. Secretary of State Hull, writing by authority of the President, told the emperor the United States was "loath to believe" the two countries actually will engage in warfare as they are both signatories of the Kellogg pact. The note also pointed out that the arbitration proceedings might arrive at a satisfactory decision.

The chances that war might be averted by the arbitrators seemed slight. Those gentlemen met again at Scheveningen and their session was disrupted by the Italian representatives when a spokesman for Ethiopia set forth the fact that Ualual, scene of the bloody clash last December, is well within the Ethiopian border.

Emperor Haile Selassie made another attempt to get international action by calling for a meeting of the League of Nations council to thresh out the dispute with Italy. At the same time the emperor appealed to the world for fair play and protested to five European powers against their refusal to permit the shipment of arms and munitions to Ethiopia. It was said in Geneva the league council probably would be called into session within a few weeks. The protest about arms shipments was not likely to do Ethiopia any good. Indeed, it was said Great Britain had provisionally joined the nations banning such transactions.

NIKOLA TESLA, famed scientist, celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday in New York city by giving out the news of three astonishing developments in the sciences. They are:

A new method and apparatus for transmitting mechanical energy over any terrestial distance.

Passage of an induction current with a varying flux one way only through a circuit without use of a commutator.

Proof, after observation of cosmic rays, that many of the propositions of relativity are false.

COMPTROLLER GENERAL M'CARL doesn't care where the chips fall when he starts hewing. He has just given an opinion that ruins the President's plan to require bidders on government contracts to bind themselves to abide by any future legislation providing for minimum wages and maximum hours of labor in employment on such contracts. A proviso to this effect was being exacted of bidders.

Mr. McCarl holds that the proviso may be viewed as a "request" only and a bid could not be rejected because the person making it refused to subscribe to this principle.

The plan was advanced from the procurement division of the treasury, which proposed that the government replace the requirement for code compliance on all government bidders, knocked out when the recovery act was voided by the Supreme court.

THOUGH the naval treaties of Washington and London have been abrogated by Japan, the American government still keeps its eye on the maximum permitted for our navy by 1942 and is making a determined effort to reach it, much to the delight of the "big navy" men and to citizens generally who believe in adequate preparedness.

Secretary of the Navy Claude Swanson has announced that a ship construction program has been decided upon which calls for the construction of 12 destroyers and six submarines. These are in addition to the 15 destroyers and six submarines for which bids have been advertised and will be opened next month.

The airplane building program calls for 555 new planes during the current fiscal year. Of these, 282 will be replacement planes for those now in service and 273 will be new craft. Two airplane carriers and six cruisers now under construction and scheduled for completion in 1937 are to house some of the new planes.

FLOODS in several eastern states, following torrential rains, took about three score lives and did vast property damage. The Finger lakes and Catskill mountain regions in New York suffered most severely. The deaths there numbered forty, and thousands were rendered homeless. Gov. Herbert H. Lehman announced an immediate allocation of $300,000 for use in rehabilitation.

NOBODY who knew Ray Long well was surprised to hear that formerly famous magazine editor had committed suicide at his California home. In late years he had not been very successful in business, his most recent ventures being in the field of scenario writing. He was not one to put up with adversity very long, and it was characteristic of him to take the easy way out, of suicide.

CRITICS of the President's program have made up their minds that he is deliberately building up a "crisis" which will provide excuse for a demand for constitutional amendments in the campaign of 1936. Their conviction was strengthened by Mr. Roosevelt's letter to Congressman Samuel B. Hill, chairman of the interstate commerce subcommittee, urging the passage of the Guffey coal bill regardless of doubts as to its constitutionality.

President Roosevelt followed the suggestion of Attorney General Cummings that the legislation should be put through congress because "the situation is so urgent," and that the question of constitutionality should be left up to the courts.

The President, admitting that coal mining is in itself an intrastate transaction, nevertheless wrote that the final test of the validity of the Guffey bill would depend upon whether production conditions directly affect, promote, or obstruct interstate commerce. The Supreme court, in the Schechter NRA case, quoted a previous opinion that mining, manufacturing, and other forms of production were as local in their character as the production of crops, and hence beyond the reach of congress.

THE secretary of the treasury appeared before the house ways and means committee which was trying to formulate the new tax bill wanted by the administration, and declared that, depending on the rates of taxation adopted, the measure might bring in as much as $1,000,000,000 a year or as little as $118,000,000 annually. As the representative of the administration, the young secretary declined to advise as to the rates, though the Republican members of the committee tried to pin him down to details. The legislation outlined by the President includes taxation of inheritances and gifts, higher surtaxes on million dollar incomes and graduated income taxes on corporations.

Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon, Republican leader, predicted that congress either would recess and reconvene in the fall or would put off enactment of the tax bill until the session beginning January 3 next.

OUR army lost an able and distinguished officer in the death of Maj. Gen. Stuart Heintzelman at the army and navy hospital in Hot Springs, Ark. The grandson and son of army officers, General Heintzelman was graduated from West Point in 1899. After service in the Philippines and China he was sent to France as an observer, and when America entered the war he held high staff assignments. He won the D. S. M. and was decorated by France and Italy. From the inception of the CCC General Heintzelman was in charge of federal reclamation projects in Missouri until last February, when he was given command of the Seventh corps area.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—The so-called silver bloc in the senate—it is not so important in the house for the simple reason that most of the silver producing states are small in population, and hence do not have many representatives—is good and sore with the administration, but has not gotten to first base in making its resentment felt.

Having stampeded the administration in the last session, and enacted a law which seemed to promise to take the silver producers to the promised land—not to mention producing a fair degree of inflation—the silverites have watched with growing irritation the bogging down of the treasury's buying campaign.

The law on the books is ample to accomplish their purpose. It requires the secretary of the treasury to buy silver until the price reaches $1.29 an ounce, or until it becomes one-third of the government's metallic reserve.

But it does not fix a time limit!

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau is not in sympathy with the silver plan at all, save on one detail. He does like the idea of buying a lot of silver cheap, and then revaluing it, thus netting a fat profit for the treasury—as the treasury did on gold.

But to accomplish the most in this direction it is necessary to buy the silver at low prices. Every additional cent per ounce paid for silver bought cuts down the revaluation profit to the treasury when that day comes.

Experts on the sidelines believe that Morgenthau has played a masterly game at this, in view of the knowledge the whole world has that the law provides this $1.29 objective. For a while the price of silver spurted tremendously, holders not wishing to sell because they figured the price would be higher later on.

Treasury Maneuvers

Thereupon the treasury began its maneuvering. It let leak out stories that the administration was deeply sympathetic with the plight into which the American silver buying policy had plunged China. And so on.

Whereupon the price of silver banged down, and the silver senators got madder and madder.

But meanwhile the treasury continued to pay considerably above the world price for all newly mined silver, making it clear to the miners that the price paid them would not be revised downward no matter what happened to the world price.

So the miners were happy, or at least, not angry. Just a little disappointed at failure of the price to climb on up to $1.29, as predicted.

The silver senators, however, were not even placated by this. The reason is not merely that they felt cheated, believing they had provided for a gradual rise to $1.29, and then seeing it fail. It so happens that nearly all the silver senators are also inflationists. They put their bill over last session by a coalition with inflation senators from non-silver producing states. And they knew perfectly well they were not getting the degree of inflation from the silver purchases that they had expected.

Next session will see a much more militant silver and inflation bloc. Next session will be leading down the straightway to election day. And President Roosevelt and Mr. Morgenthau will be much more considerate of the feelings of the silver senators than they seem to be now.

But meanwhile the treasury will have bought a lot of cheap silver, and the profit to be boasted about in the campaign will be much sweeter!

Most Vital Factor

Possibility that stockholders in the big corporations of the country, taking note of what happened to President Roosevelt's public utility holding corporation "death sentence" in the house of representatives, may try to "save their bacon" on the White House tax drive against bigness, is the most vital factor today in the whole New Deal program.

The importance of that big house majority against the "death sentence" is what caused it. On a rough estimate, 200 members of the house voted against the President, not because they wanted to do so, but because they did not dare do otherwise. Their offices were flooded with letters from stockholders in the utility corporations—stockholders who lived—and voted—in their districts. Stockholders in many instances whose names they knew, and of whose good faith there was no question.

It was this flood of mail—not the operations of the much criticized power lobby—which caused that surprising overturn. It is perfectly true that the utility companies stirred up the letter writers. The attention of the security holders had to be called to the fact that legislation threatening their financial interest—or alleged to be so threatening—was pending.

Nothing like it ever happened before. Back in the days of the Esch-Cummins railroad bill there was not a single letter from any stock or bondholder affected written to the congressman then representing the Seventeenth district. This district includes upper Fifth avenue, Riverside drive and probably is the banner district for invested wealth in the entire United States. The percentage of all railroad securities owned by persons living in that district would be startling if there were any way of checking up on it. Yet no one of these wealthy owners bothered to write.

A little later in the same session in which the Esch-Cummins bill was passed there came up a little measure which would affect florists. The congressman from the wealthy Seventeenth New York district was overwhelmed with mail. He had not realized there were so many florists in his constituency.

Florists on Job

The point is that the florists were on the job, as far as watching against adverse legislation is concerned. The investors were not.

But this year has seen the investors mobilized for the first time. The question is: Can business in general do the same sort of job that the utility executives did this year in arousing their stockholders?

While no one knows what the final rates of the tax against bigness will be, the top rate in the preliminary figures—for which no one acknowledges responsibility—are 17½ per cent. This means nearly one-fifth of a company's net income.

Compilations as to what this would do to the big companies have been made, and general agreement is that this would be sufficient to put them out of business.

But the object of the sliding scale is avowedly to put them out of business, which means that the present bill is only an opening wedge. Obviously the investors most hurt by this program, if continued, will be the common stockholders. Their dividends will be endangered. For instance, even this year the American Telephone and Telegraph company is paying part of its dividends out of surplus, as it has been since the depression started.

Sharp boosting in the taxes would mean that it, and other large corporations, would be obliged to reduce their dividends. The question is whether the stockholders will begin a letter writing drive to their congressmen as the utility stockholders did. If they do, the corporation sliding scale tax will be beaten, as the "death sentence" was.

"Ding's" Big Job

Jay N. Darling—better known as "Ding," the cartoonist—is trying to do for wild ducks and geese, the mountain goat, caribou, antelope, and whatnot in the game line, what Mark Sullivan, serious writer on politics and economics, did in his youth for the buffalo.

Ding thinks Sullivan's job was magnificent, but rather amusing in view of the deeply serious nature of the Sullivan's mental processes. For example, Sullivan is probably the closest personal friend of Herbert Hoover.

When quite a lad, Sullivan read something in a newspaper about the American buffalo, or more correctly, bison, becoming extinct. At once he went into action. He wrote to every living person who owned a buffalo, including a British peer. He wrote to every zoo in the country, asking if they would like to have a pair, and if they would promise to take care of them and let them breed if they got a suitable pair.

At the moment a big rancher not far from Yellowstone park had a herd, which he found so unprofitable that he was obliged to dispose of them. It was the story about this, setting forth also that the bison was about to pass into zoological history, that started Mark off.

Before he was through he had disposed of every buffalo in that herd, placed them carefully in zoos that wanted them, in cities all over the country. As a result, the supply of buffalo today is so plentiful that every few years a herd is turned over to the Indians for slaughter.

The fact that Ding is now head of the biological survey is more out of the ordinary than Mark Sullivan's taking an interest, in his youth, in the buffalo. This man, who is now head of the biological survey, is a Republican and was a delegate to the Republican convention that nominated Hoover.

Called Smart Move

So a great many people think the smartest thing Mr. Roosevelt has done since he entered the White House was to put Ding at the head of the biological survey. The man is naturally Republican in his tendencies, and very hard-headed indeed, although a Progressive. And the fact that his pictures were printed in about 300 fairly important newspapers in this country every morning, before he arranged to lay off until his government job was completed, made him pretty nearly a nightmare for anyone in high office whose policies Ding might think humorous. He would be apt to get the whole country laughing at the unfortunate statesman.

Which is also the real answer to the fact that he may surmount the tremendous difficulties in the path of his plans to save game in this country. This despite his forthright declarations that $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money has been poured "down a rat hole" up to now by having stupid political wheel horses operate as state game wardens.

For the high bureaucrats and officials generally whose toes he occasionally tramples do not try to thwart him. Instead they grin most pleasantly, and at least half the time let him have his way. For they all realize it might be a terrible thing for them if Ding suddenly got mad about something and quit.

It is such a situation as Washington never saw before, and may not see again for many a long year. Meanwhile Ding is going serenely ahead, buying land at the rate of 600,000 acres a year for nesting areas, safety islands along the flyways of migratory birds, and winter refuges in the southern part of our country.

Little Lights on LIVING

WITHOUT WAX

WE WERE talking of antiques, when the Florentine gentleman of high birth said: "Come, let me show you my marble table in the garden." I followed him through the dark hall, stone paved, out into a beautiful sunlit Florentine inner court garden with great dark cypresses waving their tips in the breeze. Around the roots of these dignified old trees, centuries old, were little flower beds of bright posies confined by stone edges between which, in formal fashion, were inviting little paths.

It was a surprise garden in the rear of an uninviting looking stone residence set uncompromisingly on a none too wide side street in the city of Florence. Florence, Italy, is a surprise city anyhow, with its wealth of history, its tragedies, its bloody climb to light, its sacrifices in the name of power and religion, its wealth, its art and literature. What a panorama of human achievements and failures, Florence presents to a sympathetic heart, as one recalls the de Medicis, Savonarola, Fra Angelico, the Brownings and the host of others too numerous to name. When I am in Florence I never really know in what century I am living, for these old memories press persistently into my heart.

We have wandered far from our sunlit garden into which I had followed my host to see his marble table. "Is it an antique?" I inquired as I noticed great cracks across the beautiful marble slab. "No, it is not," my friend responded. "Listen to this story!

"The marble cutters of Florence are wily old fellows," he continued, "often when their chisels slipped too far they cracked the marble slabs. Into these cracks they poured soft wax. After the wax had hardened the slabs were polished and the tables sold for solid marble." The Florentines soon realized the deception and began asking when buying tables for those "sine cera"—(without wax).

Interesting it is to note that our word sincerity comes from the little phrase "sine cera," without wax, which is precisely what it means—for to be sincere is to be genuine, whether it be a table or an individual.

"To be without pretext or show
Exactly what men think I am."

If this be a good working rule for Florentine tables, to be genuinely sincere tables of solid marble, isn't it also a silver rule for you and me to follow in daily life, to be found always "sine cera"?

THE ABILITY FAMILY

THE best neighbors I ever had were the Ability family. There were eight in the present family, one child died young. The father's name was Reliability, the mother's Responsibility. They were each well named. The father had the respect and confidence of all he met in business—people, even strangers, felt him to be trustworthy. The mother played her part, too; after visiting her household, one could be assured that she carried her part of the home making for her husband and their six children, adding more duties each day to her already full program. Her name was Responsibility and she lived up to it. One would naturally expect a strong family of children from such parents, and such was the case.

Their first child, who grew to be strong and stalwart, they named Respectability. He was an upright chap. He thought well of himself and justly so, for he lived persistently at his best.

The second child was named Stability, for at an early age he evidenced decided firmness of character. He was sure footed and steady as a rock. His opinions were always real convictions to him.

After a few years passed another child was born to this interesting family, not as strong in health as the first two children, but patient unto long endurance, with never a word of complaint. This child was calm and often silent with an inner reserve and strength that won from his friends great admiration and love. His parents called him Durability.

The fourth child was a joy to its mother. Nothing ever seemed to go wrong when this little fellow was about. Everyone loved him as he grew up, because he was thinking constantly of others. He would change his plans to accommodate others if need be. Unselfishness was his watchword. His name was Adaptability.

One child died young. Peevish and ill-tempered, he grew quite apart from the family traits. His name was Irritability. He was too unhappy to live long.

After the death of Irritability the Ability family was again augmented by two, when the twins came. Happy, good natured, lovable pair of youngsters they were. They brought sunshine and joy wherever they went. Everybody agreed that they should be called Affability and Compatability!

So this is the Ability family. How many of them have you met in your circle of friends? Do you wonder the name of this family was ABILITY?

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to the girls' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt.

Ariel, after some interested questions regarding the day's plans, had said suddenly:

"Did you notice what happened to the Challenge last night?"

"No," Gail had said with a puzzled, expectant glance.

"I got rid of it!" Ariel had announced in a conspirator's tone.

"Got rid of it? What for?"

"Because," Ariel had murmured, with a cautious glance about for possible eavesdroppers, "because it said that Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chipp had gone down to their Los Gatos place on Tuesday and were opening it for the summer."

"Oh—" Gail had stammered, with a suddenly deepening color and a sickly laugh. "Oh—"

Her voice had dropped flatly. She, the mentor, the guide, the example of this little sister, had stood shamed and detected, trying to find amusing what was a most painful and humiliating moment.

"I don't blame you!" Ariel had said.

A quick protective instinct to add lie to lie had shaken Gail. But she was too unused to falsehood. She had stood silent, presently saying in a troubled voice:

"I was sorry to—to have to do that. But it isn't—it isn't as if Phil were my father. He has no right—and Edith has no right—

"Neither of them," she had recommenced, with a little difficulty, "neither of them understands how much—how awfully one wants to go places—do things."

"Phil, who runs around with Lily Wibser!" Ariel had helped her scornfully. And the younger sister had given her a sudden, passionate kiss. "I love you, Gail!" Ariel had said quickly.

But this rare demonstration from cool little Ariel had brought no responsive happiness to Gail's heart. To have Ariel protecting her, abetting her in deceit, in dealing with what was not open and fair, had given her a wretched sensation that the solid ground was failing beneath her feet.

Even the scornful reference to Philip had alarmed her. After all, Phil was the head of the family; Phil was sacred. There was no law nor order anywhere if Phil was to be scorned.

* * * * * * *

Driving along the country roads that were smothered in spring beauty, Gail's spirits rose. Nothing could prevent her from having a week-end in a Los Gatos country house now. On Sunday evening she would join the family at the dinner table, on Monday morning she would be back at work, and everything would return to normal. But she would have this wonderful memory as so much pure gain.

She was always in a gale of high spirits when she was with Van, anyway; it was impossible to be otherwise; he was the gayest of the gay.

She questioned him as they drove along.

"Who else will be on this house party, Van?"

"On this souse party," Van responded cheerfully, "will be, first, mine host and his buxom wife, Dame Martha. They will draw the ale, heap oaken logs in the great fireplaces—"

"Oh, for heaven's sake, you idiot."

His shout of joyous laughter.

"No, there'll be the Chipps," he began again seriously, "and three or four good auction players—they have to have those. They'll play all this evening, all tomorrow morning, all tomorrow night, and all day Sunday. In between games they'll eat, drink and ask if anyone wants to swim badly enough to take the bother of undressing.

"Then there'll be Lucia Tevis; she's a cute kid; she's eighteen. She goes to Vassar next fall."

"Miss Mary Tevis' niece?"

"Yep. Then there's Mary Spence; she's from Boston, visiting Lucia; she's a keen girl, too. And Jim Speedwell and Fred Hunter—Fred's a polo man, but he broke his arm, so he's resting—and Bill Billings, and maybe his sister, and the Duchess—Lenore Phipps—Mrs. Phipps. She was Lenore Murchison."

"She's your half-sister?"

"Yep. Step-sister. My mother married her dad, when she was about—oh, well, she's a year younger than I am. But she's lived mostly with her grandmother. She's getting a divorce!"

They drove through Los Gatos, sleepy in late afternoon sun and ringed with wooded hills, and turned southwest on the boulevard that led to the ocean, twenty-six miles away. The car mounted slopes, rolled smoothly under mighty oaks, left the paved highway for a comfortable dirt road.

Few houses were visible now. But the gates bore names: "El Nido," "Hillways," "Jackson Farm Road," "Hidden Paradise Road." The gate into which Van at last turned the car was marked "Far Niente."

There were fruit trees here, scattered in among the natural forest trees; there was a tennis court, dappled with shade and light and draped in a banksia rose vine heavy with golden bloom. Flower scents were everywhere, beauty was everywhere.

Under a loaded rose vine, on one of the porches, four persons were playing bridge. Gail, as she and Van approached, recognized one of these as her hostess.

Mrs. Chipp looked up at them sharply, and without changing her position concentrated her cards in her left hand and stretched a hand toward Van.

"Oh, hello, dear! How d'you do, Miss Lawrence?" she said, in a quick aside. "Van, they're all swimming, and there's nobody here to— Excuse me just one second, Hilyer," she interrupted herself, speaking to one of the players. "Van," she went on, "I'm not sure where the Duchess has put Miss—Miss Lawrence. But you take her up to the girls' cottage and just let her park herself somewhere until the Duchess explains. Will you do that, like a darling?"

Resolutely, Gail would not let herself feel that it was rude, that it left anything unsaid, undone.

"I'll be all right!" she said, with a smile and a nod, walking off with Van. Mrs. Chipp made no answer.

Van led the way to one of the cabins, a brown, enchanting place with geraniums and lobelia in the window boxes, and a wide open door into a central sitting room.

"I'll Be All Right," She Said With a Smile and a Nod.

"Take any of these rooms—gosh, they're all full of suitcases!" Van said, peering in at doorways. "Here—here's one—this must be you. Make yourself comfortable. Are you going to swim?"

"I think not. Not—well, maybe I will!"

She decided against the swimming, and walked out to meet Van, ten minutes later, looking her prettiest in a white frock, white shoes, a white hat.

The boy lingering in the garden path, waiting for her, was trim in a black bathing suit, with a towel across his shoulders.

Boys and girls, as wet and sleek as seals, were sprawled in the late sunshine on the grassy ramp beside the pool. They were drinking a pale yellow drink from tall ice-filled glasses; a cocktail shaker stood on the grass.

Gail found herself the only person who was not drinking, in the group. The circumstances seemed to alienate her from them. She listened, smiled, made herself appear at ease as a low-toned conversation that had evidently been interrupted was begun again among the girls.

The men merely roiled in the sun, yawned and exchanged monosyllables.

"You did not." "Quit that!" "Say, listen . . ." Gail heard, over and over again.

The girls, Lucia, Mary, and Lenore, murmured interestedly.

"Oh, come on," said the Duchess suddenly when there had been a good deal of this. "We'll never get dressed!"

Immediately they were all running down the path to the cabin, Gail with them. The only one who took any notice of her was the Boston girl, named Mary Spence. Mary spoke now and then kindly to Gail as they all began a flurry of dressing for dinner.

They left their bedroom doors open and ran back and forth lightly clad or not clad at all. Lenore and Lucia shed their bathing suits on the strip of lawn outside the cabin, and slipped into thin cotton kimonas, brief and almost transparent, to wander about brushing their hair, rubbing themselves with towels, and gathering garments and cosmetics.

Gail, who was not going to change, sat on the upper porch step a few feet above the path and stared at the beauty and luxury of Far Niente as it lay on the slope below her, and pretended to be satisfied and absorbed in what she saw. She knew now that all the vague, shy fears she had felt in anticipating this visit were going to be more than justified. She knew that Mrs. Chipp was not going to be nice to her, that the girls were entirely indifferent to her, and that she should not have come.

Her clothes were not right, her training was not right, her background was not right. She simply did not belong here, and they were all more or less conscious of it. This nice Mary Spence, herself a stranger in the group, was being cordial merely on general principles. It was nothing to her that these Californians had social distinctions between themselves; they were all the same to Mary Spence.

"I shall have to work!" Gail told herself grimly. She must work, talking, smiling, keeping herself occupied, for all this endless evening and all tomorrow and most of Sunday. It sounded like an eternity.

Suddenly she noted two of her companions in the cottage, Lucia and Lenore, walking with two boys named Bill and Jim, down the path to the house. They must have left the cottage by the back door, which faced toward the men's cabin. Perhaps the boys had called them.

That left only Mary in the house, and if she also slipped away Gail would have to go down to dinner, at some spot unknown, all alone. Her heart began to beat hard in nervous anticipation.

Presently a middle-aged woman came up the path toward her, and with a not unamiable half smile for Gail stood still, a few feet away, calling, "Mary!" Gail recognized her as one of the card players.

"Yes, Mrs. Billings!" Mary called, putting her head out of the porch door.

"Mary, you know what I asked you to do?" the woman said.

"Oh, yes!" Mary answered.

"Will you do it now, dear?"

"Oh, yes; instantly!" said Mary, running out of the cabin. She and Mrs. Billings, conferring, went rapidly down the path together. Gail swallowed once, with a dry throat. Then she got up and began to saunter slowly after them.

She encountered the boy named Fred Hunter in the path, and fell upon him with all the boldness of desperation. She laughed with him, narrowed her blue eyes in their thick black lashes at him, and when he said somewhat nervously that he had been going up to the cabin to wake Van, whose aunt felt sure he had fallen asleep, Gail said gaily that she would go, too.

They awakened the drowsy, surprised Van, and they all laughed together, and Gail, still holding firmly to the now manageable Fred, waited for Van on the porch of the men's cabin. She walked down to the house between the two of them, disposing of Van's good-natured attempts to shake young Mr. Hunter by a determined, if light, hold upon the latter's arm.

At dinner, which began immediately, she was between the two young men. So far so good.

But it was work. It was bitter, hard, endless work; all struggle, no relaxation anywhere. She was conscious of carrying a heavy handicap.

The girls were all against her. They ignored her; they looked bored when she spoke; they deliberately carried the conversation into channels where she must be ill at ease and unfamiliar.

Gail fought on. Her cheeks blazed, her blue eyes shone. She lost all consciousness of Van as the man for whom she was beginning to care, of the beauty of the place and the summer night, of the novelty of dining here with these fashionable folks. It was all a blur, through which she was determined to hold her own despite them all.

When Lenore, at the end of the long meal, during which they had all eaten, drunk, and smoked too much, said provocatively to Van something about needing him to conspire with her upon something that would surprise the others, Gail countered by saying that she and Mr. Hunter wanted to get up a charade.

"That's what they call it now, is it?" one of the boys said, and Gail joined in the loud laughter. The infatuated Hunter was by this time incapable of any emotion, even surprise, and he and Gail went down to a marble bench on the lawn, where she held him as long as she could, listening to his fatuous vague words, and laughing and keeping him laughing as if it were the greatest fun in the world. Later she annexed Bill Billings, and fell into a deep-toned conference with him about airmen and air records, pretending to be so absorbed in the conversation that when Van came to get her to dance she had to call a few last words over her shoulder to Bill.

They were dancing on a sort of platform, with vines trailed up over its latticed top. The moon shone down between the leaves, the radio droned and choked and droned again. Gail danced well, and loved dancing, and was happy for a few minutes.

Suddenly they were all disputing as to whether they should play bridge or go down to Mockerson's. Mockerson's was a roadhouse over on the Halfmoon Bay road, sixty miles away.

"Come on, let's go dance at Mockerson's! Maybe the place'll be raided."

"I am the captain of my fate, folks, I am the master of my soul!" Van observed, rising with a wine glass in his hands. "In the fell clutch of circumstances, what d'you thinuk I do? D'you think I wince, or cry aloud? I don't—"

He was hauled down.

"Well, do we go to Mockerson's?"

"Listen. Let's not, and say we did!"

"Well, I'll tell you a story!" Jim Speedwell said unexpectedly. He told it.

As Hi Ho Sees "Humility"

"Humility," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown, "is often the disguise of an arrogant spirit waiting to gather strength for a conflict."

MAKE NO CLAIM OF "SURE" CURES FOR HUMAN ILLS

Can all children be immunized against infantile paralysis as against diphtheria and smallpox? That is the question which the nation's anxious mothers have been asking of Dr. William H. Park since the director of New York's health department bureau of laboratories announced the discovery of a new vaccine for the disease. In the Parents' Magazine, Doctor Park answers with a qualified, "No, not yet."

"To begin with, the process of obtaining vaccine is costly and complicated," explained the doctor. "We can make only from 200 to 300 doses a week in the laboratories of the department of health, and we have not perfected methods of storing it for future use. Of course, if we had more money, we could produce more vaccine. As it is, there is not enough to inoculate every child in the United States. So distribution of the vaccine must necessarily be limited now to those who have actually been exposed to the disease and to groups of children under five years of age whose reactions can be studied over a course of years."

In addition to cost and complication, Doctor Park declares that science is hampered in its efforts towards wholesale immunization by its own lack of knowledge.

"We know that poliomyelitis is caused by a virus which we believe enters the nervous system, not the blood stream, through the nerves governing our sense of smell. We think there are 'carriers'—people who carry this virus from one to another. We believe it is not carried by insects nor have we found any indication of any other source of infection. We know that 80 per cent of the adults are immune."

Five months is the usual duration of an epidemic, and Doctor Park is hopeful the new vaccine will protect inoculated children through one siege of the epidemic at least, if not for a lifetime.—Kansas City Star.

LET US MAKE YOUR VACATION TRIP SAFER

BEFORE you start on your vacation trip, let us completely inspect your car. There is no charge for this service and it will assure you of a safer and more enjoyable trip.

For the convenience and safety of car owners Firestone has established more than 500 Auto Supply and Service Stores throughout the country, and thousands of Firestone Dealers are also equipped with complete Auto Supplies and complete Service Departments, to test and service your tires, brakes, batteries, spark plugs, in addition to power lubrication and crank case service.

AVOID THE DANGER OF BLOWOUTS

Firestone removes the danger of blowouts by preventing their main cause—internal friction and heat. This is accomplished by Gum-Dipping.

THERE ARE THREE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS THAT WILL SOLVE YOUR PROBLEM OF WHAT TIRES TO BUY:

1 "Will the tread give me the greatest traction and protection against skidding?"

— Recent tests by a leading University show that Firestone High Speed Non-Skid Tires stop a car 15% quicker than any other of the leading makes.

For eight consecutive years Firestone Tires have been on the winning car in the dangerous Pike's Peak Race where a skid means death.

2 "Are they blowout-proof?"

—Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires have the most amazing records for being blowout-proof of any tires ever built. In the gruelling 500-Mile Race at Indianapolis, May 30th, every one of the 33 cars was equipped with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires. Not one of the 33 drivers had tire trouble of any kind.

Ab Jenkins drove his 5,000 pound car on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires over the hot salt beds of Utah, 3,000 miles, averaging 127.2 miles per hour, with temperatures as high as 120°, without tire trouble of any kind.

3 "Without sacrificing these two important safety features will they give me longer mileage, thus making them the most economical tires I can buy?"

— Firestone High Speed Tires not only give you more than 50% longer wear, but also lowest cost per mile. In fact, unequaled mileage records of thousands of car owners add undisputed evidence of the longer wear and greater economy of Firestone High Speed Tires.

Equip your car with a set of Firestone Gum-Dipped Non-Skid Tires, the safest tires ever built and avoid the dangers of skidding and blowouts.

1 University tests show Firestone High Speed Tires stop cars 15 to 25% quicker.
2 Gum-Dipped cords give greater blowout protection. Gum-Dipping is not used in other tires.
3 Wider, flatter tread gives more than 50% longer non-skid wear.

STERRETTS

Many friends and relatives were grieved to learn of the death of Mrs. Sara Catherine Falkner who died at her home in Sterretts, Sunday, July 7th, at 7:40 p. m., after having been ill since February.

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 3:30 in the Grove at Beulah Baptist Church, with burial in the Beulah cemetery. The Rev. I. W. Inzer officiated, and Walton was in charge of funeral arrangements.

"Aunt Sallie", as she was affectionately known to scores of people in Sterretts and other communities in the county, would have been 62 years old September 2nd, having been born in 1873.

She is survived by her husband, Joel L. Falkner; one sister, Mrs. Liza Vick; one brother, Walton White, all of Sterretts; and a large number of nieces and nephews.

She had been a member of the Baptist Church since she was 18 years of age, and had lived in and near Sterretts most of her life.

She had a love and a thoughtfulness for people that endeared her to all who knew her.

"Aunt Sallie" was truly loved and will be sorely missed for many days.

We would recall for "Uncle Buddie's" comfort the faith which he and "Aunt Sallie" so devoutly cherished in life after death, and extend to him the utmost sympathy in his bereavement.

Amazed at Low Electric Rates For Home Use

P. H. Searcy, of Enterprise, Ala., Tells Why He Purchased Additional Electrical Appliances

Observing that his friends were making more liberal use of electricity in their homes, and wishing to give his family all modern comforts and conveniences, P. H. Searcy, prominent business man of Enterprise, Ala., investigated the cost of electricity under the new low rates, and found that even with additional electric appliances his bill still would be surprisingly low.

"Until just recently there has been in the minds of myself and my family a firm conviction that electricity came too high for more than the barest use, and consequently we economized in this direction all possible. Observing use our friends made of your current led me at last to investigate the actual cost of electricity. I was amazed to find that it cost me less than one-third of a cent to burn a 60 watt bulb for one hour." Mr. Searcy says in a letter recently addressed to Alabama Power Company.

"On making inquiries at my local office, I also found that the more current I used, the less it cost. This encouraged me to put in electrical equipment in the form of a range and water heater and to install the proper size bulbs in our sockets. We are now enjoying the many comforts and conveniences that electricity can bring one, in addition to protecting our eyes by using sufficient light, and are glad to report that our electric bills are much less than the amount we had imagined they would be.

"We consider the day we really investigated the price of electric current and found it so reasonable a very lucky day for us."—Adv. Alabama Power Co.

DOGWOOD NEWS

Mr. L. B. Vernon's family was represented 100 percent at a family reunion held at Brierfield, Ala., Sunday, July 14, 1935. There were all nine of his children and his adopted daughters present, plus seven grandchildren, two step-grandchildren, and non was represented with twenty-one four daughter-in-laws. J. P. Ver- relatives Marvin Vernon and wife. Mitchell Vernon had fifteen present. W. S. Vernon and wife with two sons present. Alice Vernon Lucas was represented with six present. In all there was seventy-six relatives of the family present plus nineteen friends of the family. E. C. Vernon was not represented on account of sickness. There were fifty-six known Vernon's absent. After everyone had eaten all they could hold, there was a short business meeting, and the reunion is to be held next year, July 11, 1936, at the same place. Swimming and talks were enjoyed by all.

(Signed) Mrs. L. B. Vernon.

Miss Gay Moreland, of Brierfield, visited Zella Vernon and Berry Friend in Dogwood, Monday and Tuesday.

Cecil Vernon is at home for a few days for the family reunion.

Herman Johnson, a friend and partner of Cecil Vernon, made the trip with him home from Fayette, Miss., where they are working. Johnson is a Berry student also.

Zella Vernon gave an ice cream supper in honor of her guest, Miss Gay Moreland, Miss Lillie Linholm, Herman Johnson and her brother, Cecil. A large crowd was present and reported a grand time.

Hectic Days Sleepless Nights

Miss Currier relieved of nervous days and sleepless nights.

IF YOU are nervous today, you probably will not sleep well tonight. If you don't sleep well tonight, you will probably be nervous tomorrow.

Don't allow yourself to become nervous. Take Dr. Miles Nervine. It will relax your tense nerves and let you get a good night's sleep.

Irritability, Restlessness, Sleeplessness, often lead to Nervous Headache, Nervous Indigestion, Hysteria—sometimes to a nervous breakdown and organic trouble.

Some of the people, whose letters are printed below, were as nervous as you are—possibly more so—yet they have found relief.

Three years ago I was so nervous I could not bear to go out in company and could not sleep nights. A friend recommended Dr. Miles Nervine. I now enjoy myself thoroughly and sleep every night. Miss Juliette Currier, New Market, N. H.

Christene Lanier finds Nervine best nerve medicine she ever used.

I have used Dr. Miles Nervine in liquid form and find it the best medicine for the nerves I have ever used. Christene Lanier, Middleton, Tennessee

Miss Redman takes Dr. Miles Nervine whenever she feels restless.

Whenever I have over-indulged and feel restless I take one or two Nervine Tablets just before I retire. In the morning when I awake I feel like a new person and can go about my work as usual. Dr. Miles Nervine Tablets quiet your nerves, brace you up and are the simplest, most convenient tablets to take I have ever found. Miss Grace Redmann, St. James, Minn.

Before using your Nervine I was very nervous and irritable. Since I have started to take it I feel so much better that my family notice the difference. I still take it from time to time and the good result is wonderful. J. H. Redding, 1027 18th Ave., Rock Island, Ill.

ELEANOR STROWD

Columbiana is especially happy this week to have the privilege of welcoming Miss Eleanor Strowd, of Gulfport, Miss., back to her former home where she has legions of friends who have followed with keen interest her unusual success in the land of Tennis.

In Gulfport's Third Annual Municipal Tennis Tournament, Miss Strowd won the singles championship, paired with Viola James they captured the Women's doubles, and climaxing her spectacular play, officials teamed her with Charles "Shots" Anderson to capture the mixed doubles.

Miss Strowd, singles champion of Gulfport High School, defeated her opponent in straight sets, making up a score of 6-3, 6-0. Her victory with Anderson in the mixed doubles was registered over their opponents in straight sets with score reading 6-2, and 7-5.

Helen Wills Moody and other famed Tennis players may well be practicing their fancy strokes—for unless all predictions fail, Columbiana friends have in their midst, at some not too distant date, the next world's champion of the Tennis Court.

While in Columbiana, Miss Strowd will be extensively entertained and is the guest of former high school friends, including Miss Elizabeth Taylor, Jeannette Niven and Jane Fowler.

A surprise party was staged at the home of Miss Agnes Wingard on Sunday, honoring her father's 74th birthday anniversary.

The celebration took the form of a picnic lunch and the guests and relatives brought well-filled baskets which were opened and spread on the spacious lawn. Many beautiful and useful gifts were tendered Mr. Wingard who passed this 74th milestone—elderly, perhaps—but not old.

Those who shared this joyous occasion included: Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Wingard and son, and Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Wingard and children, of Clanton; Mrs. J. W. Templin and children, of Columbiana; Mrs. Wales Milam and Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Finley and children, of Shelby; Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Merrell and children, of Talladega; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Johnston and children, of Bessemer; Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Williams and children, of Bessemer; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Crumpton and Walter Gaines, of Birmingham; Mr. Irwin Wingard, a brother of the honoree, of Wilsonville; D. S. Wingad and his daughter, Miss Agnes Wingard, of Columbiana.

Friends who were present to extend heartiest congratulations and hearts "best wishes for many happy returns" included: Dr. and Mrs. James Crawford and James Crawford, Jr.; Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Pitts; Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Leonard; Mr. and Mrs. Starl McClanahan; Mr. and Mrs. Luther Curlee and Mary Howard Curlee; Richard Ozley; Mr. and Mrs. Dennis Grimes, of Sylacauga; and Dr. and Mrs. V. J. Gragg, of Clanton.

The Democrat joins a host of friends in sending to Mr. Wingard a belated wish, but none the less sincere, for continued happiness and success along the way.

Mr. and Mrs. E. L. DuBose, of St. Louis, are visiting their sister, Mrs. J. H. Crawford, in Columbiana.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Chapman and Ed Chapman, of Dadeville, were being cordially received in Columbiana last week. Mr. Chapman thoughtfully came by the Democrat office and renewed his subscription to Shelby County's leading newspaper, for which courtesy we were grateful.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Parker; Dr. Sam H. Wallace; Sam H. Wallace, Jr., and Wales Wallace, all of Birmingham; and Mr. and Mrs. Willia mTeague, of Kingsport, Tenn., were guests at the Airport dance on Saturday night, and were honorees at a dinner party given by Mrs. Rosa Teague in her home after the dance. Mr. and Mrs. Teague, after spending a vacation in Columbiana, returned to their home in Kingsport, Sunday morning.

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats played for their regular dance at the Airport on last Saturday night, and the largest crowd of the season was present to enjoy their original interpretations of the popular melodies offered. Visitors from Birmingham, Vincent, Sylacauga, Montevallo and other points in the county were present to share the enjoyable occasion.

The 'Ristocrats will play tonight at Clearmont Springs for the guests and their friends at the weekly dance staged at this popular summer resort. Just watch these boys—they are going places before this summer is over.

Miss Charlie Verne Tinney, Jit Taylor and George Richardson spent last Sunday afternoon in Deatsville and Montgomery, Alabama.

Alabama College has been the mecca for many interesting and cultural groups during the summer season. It is interesting to note since June 1st, Montevallo has had the honor of having entertained the Epworth League Conference with an attendance of 900; the Writers Conrlave, 150 members; the Progressive Education Program brought to Montevallo the most distinguished group of instructors from many states in the Union and was attended by over 500; English Teachers also assembled within these college walls 150 strong. The Southern Conference registered 143 members and next Monday sees the opening program of the Adult Education School and over 500 are expected to take advantage of the excellent program arranged for those who have been members of the Adult Schools throughout the State. This Conference will be in session for one month, Judson Snead of Montgomery in charge.

W. F. Tidwell, prominent in Educational circles in Shelby County, and Principal of the Montevallo School, was a visitor in Columbiana, Monday.

We were delighted to have a chat with Mr. Tidwell who is successfully accomplishing many worth-while projects in the county. Mr. Tidwell will be one of the instructors in Social Science at the Adult Conference which begins next week in Montevallo.

Managers Robinson and McMillan cordially invite you to spend next Thursday in Yamakita. Bring your dinner and enjoy the delightful program now being arranged by A. A. Lauderdale for your entertainment. Barbecue, cold drinks, candy and ice cream will be sold on the grounds. Several hundred guests are expected. The pool has been drained, and is now ready for that cool plunge you have been waiting for.

Presume you saw the Moon in eclipse on Monday night- For the first time since 1927 Old Man Moon stepped aside to let Mother Earth stand in his light. This gallant gesture on his part in sharing the nocturnal lime light however, lasted only three hours and 35 minutes, then Mr. Moon slipped out of the shadows and shone even more brightly We watched this celestial performance with keen interest. A beautiful and spectacular stage brilliantly lighted by millions of stars. We shall not soon forget the night—nor the exclusiveness of the show, nor those who shared its beauty with us.

Mrs. Edgar Lightcap, of New York, has been the guest of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. D. S. Lightcap, in Columbiana.

A unique and very lovely entertainment was given by Mrs. C. W. Williams on last Thursday afternoon in her beautiful country home in Wilsonville honoring friends from Columbiana, where she formerly resided.

The program for the afternoon was staged on the lawn, and in true southern style. Darkies from the Williams plantation sang spirituals thruout the afternoon and songs from the sunny Southland so dear to the hearts of us all—Old Black Joe, Swanee River and other immortal Foster melodies. After the musical program, the hostess introduced Miss Weldon, of Wilsonville, dramatic reader, who charmed her guests with appropriate dialect readings. After this presentation, the guests were ushered into the yard and under the friendly branches of the oak trees, they were served brunswick stew, cake lemonade, tea and etc. prepared by the servants on this lovely old estate.

Mrs. Williams is spending the summer in Wilsonville and her many friends are happy to welcome her back to Shelby County. Mr. Williams is in New Orleans, but will join the family later

The Rhythm 'Ristocrats presented "The Flapper Grandmother" in Columbiana on Monday night. This musical comedy was coached by Miss Peggy Arthur of the Wayne P. Sewell Producing Co., Atlanta, Ga., and was a rollicking, tuneful production.

Mildred Curlee, as The Flapper Grandmother, was the outstanding star of the play, closely followed by Sara Nell Carter as Martha Spriggins. Both characters were cleverly and artistically portrayed. Miss Arthur left for Vincent on Tuesday morning where she is scheduled to stage the same production with local talent from our neighboring town.

About the cutest little bit of a manikin in this man's town that we have had the good luck to see is none other than John Charles McGhee, three month old son of Mr. and Mrs. Clayton McGhee. A chubby, happy-go-lucky cherub, whose smile will take him far in this old topsy turvy world. He was dressed just to suit the weather—only a one piece garment—and that's plenty these hectic days—but you have to be a "baby" to get away with it. At any rate, John Charles was holding the stage as the center of attraction and as far as the McGhee family is concerned and the Saxon family. Little Mr McGhee is the King of Hearts—and we are not so sure but his territory in this direction extends to his neighbors and many friends who unanimously proclaim him—PERFECT.

Mr. S. S. Moore, who has been the Louisville & Nashville Railroad agent in Columbiana for the past two years, left Monday for his home in Altoona, Alabama. His many friends regret to learn that he has left Columbiana where he is so well favorably known.

Misses Susie and Robbie Stone, of Uniontown, Alabama, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Stone.

The Alabama Press Association will hold its annual meeting at Camp Dixie beginning next Friday. Editors — would-be-Editors, have-been-Editors, and are-to-be-Editors will be present to lend "brains" and "brawn" to the colorful aggregation. It is with keen regret that we shall not be able to attend this "congregation of celebrities". The recreational part of the program has been arranged—and an attractive array of talent will be on hand to entertain the guests. Maybe "something will happen" and we shall yet "breeze by for a merry hello". Our disposition has not been improved since finding it impossible to make it. In other words, the submission to "unfortunate circumstances is far from a graceful performance on the part of Personal Mention."

Thanks to E. C. Hall for a personal invitation! A thoughtful and generous gesture on the part of this busy Editor. We appreciate it.

Mayor Harry Gordon "whizzes" by the office long enough to state that the Administration Building for Columbiana is also a certainty—and that construction will begin shortly. The building will be located on the lot where the Presbyterian Church now stands. This places another feather in the cap of Columbiana's popular and progressive Mayor whom all Alabama covets!

The next thing we want very much to happen is the ROAD to Chelsea—which will take us into Birmingham in about 30 minutes. This piece of road work would mean more to Columbiana than anything we could have happen to us. So, waive your fairy wand Mr. Mayor and let's get going.

John Cohoon, successful salesman with Towery Motor Company, of Montevallo, spent Tuesday in Columbiana and reports business on the "up and up". He also suggests that we continue to "Watch The Fords Go By"!

AN OLD ROMAN LAW
AND ITS PRESENT DAY SIGNIFICANCE

THERE was an old Roman law relating to bank deposits to the effect that a depositor who left his money only for safety ranked before a depositor who received interest for his money.

Today, in America, each of those depositors is protected against loss in insured banks. Whether or not their funds earn interest makes no difference. All depositors of an insured bank, share in the benefits of Deposit Insurance.

Big War or Little?
LaGuardia's G-Men
She Took It Seriously
Pretty Bluebirds

War is not coming; it is here. It may or may not be a war "setting the world on fire." Italy had an unpleasant experience in Abyssinia in the last century and wishes to repair that. It also wishes to keep Japan from gathering in Abyssinia's trade and controlling Abyssinia. Britain can understand how Italy feels, since Britain found it really necessary to gather in the Transvaal and other vast areas throughout the world.

Arthur Brisbane

Italy used to send 500,000 immigrants a year to the United States. Now they are shut out. They must go somewhere. They would considerably improve Abyssinia if they went there.

Mayors of others cities will watch New York's Mayor LaGuardia fighting racketeering and crime in general. Besides training his own police force to shoot straight and "to kill," Mayor LaGuardia will get some government "G-men," if possible, from Washington, to come and set the example.

If Mayor LaGuardia, who has an honest and energetic police commissioner, cleans up crime in New York, he will deserve a statue next to that of Hercules, who cleaned the Augean stables, and a bigger statue.

Women, before and since Heloise, have taken heart affairs more seriously than men. Margaret Jordan, an Irish girl, lonely, fell in love with a Mount Vernon, N. Y., policeman, because he came from her home town. He was married, with eight children, and after he had seen the girl for two years he decided that he must reform and see her no more. He told her about this pious resolution as he sat in his police car, and did not notice that she took his service revolver from the pocket of the car.

He learned what had happened next day when told that the girl had killed herself with his revolver. It was embarrassing for a married policeman with eight children.

At Fort George Wright, tiny bluebirds built their nest in the mouth of a big cannon, and mother bluebird laid four pretty blue eggs. Our kindhearted heroes at the fort are protecting the nest. Sentries do not come too near, cats are discouraged and to the orders of the day Maj. George S. Clark added these kind words, "and keep an eye on those birds."

In American churches Sunday, August 18, will be a day of prayer for peace in Africa and safety for little Ethiopia, which confronts war with powerful Italy.

That is the right United States interference in foreign affairs. The prayers will reach their destination, and the Supreme Being to whom they are addressed knows what is best, and has power to arrange matters in Ethiopia as he chooses.

To pray: "Lord, possessor of omniscence and omnipotence, we leave all in your hands," is right.

To send a million young American men, and several thousand million American dollars, to meddle in hot Africa would be wrong.

The country will welcome President Roosevelt's statement that the "four thousand million dollar works relief fund" will actually be invested in such a way as to increase the nation's capital assets. Many times four thousand million dollars could be spent advantageously, if it were really invested in wise, permanent improvements.

A financial letter from London remarks, casually, "Credit was plentiful at one-half of one per cent interest." Americans that cannot borrow anything, on securities once considered good, wonder how the British manage. The American government borrows at three and a half per cent, seven times the current English interest rate, money manufactured by itself, and thus adds one hundred per cent to taxes for interest that need not be paid at all. Queer finance, dearly beloved.

St. Louis reformers say women should not sit on high stools with their feet on a rail and drink at the bar. And, reformers rejoice to hear, the saloonkeepers say: "Amen."

Reformers and saloonkeepers are right. The saloon was bad enough before women moved in to make it worse, hitching up their dresses, climbing high stools, readjusting their dresses, or not readjusting them, calling for foolish drinks to show how foolish they could be.

The Methodist Federation for Social Service, surveying the cotton area, says the AAA, cutting down the cotton crop, has added to the sorrows of the little worker that raises cotton on shares, while enriching the owner of the land. You cannot please everybody.

Little Charles Mixon Armstead, 8 hours old, believed to be the youngest child in the state to successfully undergo an anesthetic operation, has been taken to his home on Opp Route 2, where he is recovering.

Elbert Lindon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Pat Lindon, of Leeds, has passed the governmental examinations for entrance to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis and has been sworn in as a midshipman.

With Linden as their headquarters, 15 veterinarians from the State Department are busily engaged in making a tuberculosis inspection and inoculation of around 32,000 head of cows in Marengo County.

Income tax collections alone for the fiscal year 1935 in Alabama, which amounted to $3,156,363.10 almost equalled the total amount of taxes collected for the fiscal year, 1933, which was $3,294,672.56.

In a county-wide beauty pageant held at Auburn under auspices of the Auburn Business and Professional Women's Club, Miss Ann Williams, of Opelika, won the title of "Miss Lee County—1935."

Gov. Bibb Graves has deferred action on the Street anti-sedition bill until the Legislature reconvenes July 30—but he told many members of the Senate and House he intended to veto the measure.

Due to the change in textbooks and the probable delay in receiving the new volumes, the Marion County Board of Education has decided not to hold a Summer school terms this year.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Science has been awarded by the University of Alabama to Dr. H. P. Smyth, veteran meteoroligist and retired chief of the Montgomery weather bureau.

Condemned prisoners should be sent to Kilby within 10 days after the death sentence has been passed, whether they have filed appeals or not, Atty. Gen. Carmichael has ruled.

Work on the grading and draining of 12.342 miles of the road between Collinsville and Fort Payne will begin immediately, the State Highway Department has announced.

Three emergency relief canning centers have begun operations at Huntsville under the direction of Government supervisors. Others are expected to start soon.

State teachers expecting to qualify for higher ranking certificates and corresponding salary adjustments will have to complete necessary requirements by Sept. 1.

Gov. Graves enacted into law over his signature the O'Neal bill appropriating $35,000 for the past and future costs of the "Scottsboro case."

Application for the paving of the five-mile road from Gardendale to Mt. Olive has been submitted to the Works Progress Administration.

A series of preliminary meetings are being held by a group of civic-minded citizens at Leeds in an effort to inaugurate a Lions Club.

Birmingham City Commission has awarded a contract for construction of a bridge over Village Creek on North Twenty-Fifth Street.

Without apparently touching the harness, lightning killed two horses hitched to a wagon near Decatur.

BIDS DEFIANCE TO HOT WEATHER

PATTERN 2319

The hot weather brings us to the problem every woman of generous proportions must cope with—how to keep cool and fresh looking on those wilting days? Well—Looking Cool goes a long way, and pattern 2319, with its loose, easy cape sleeve, soft treated waistline gives you a mighty cool outlook on life. And very flattering, too, are the graceful folds of the cape that does wonders to equalize proportions. The darts over the bust and at the waistline cleverly contrive to avoid a too-fitted look at the strategical points. Pick a summery printed voile or other sheer.

Pattern 2319 is available in sizes 16, 18, 20, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 takes 3¾ yards 39 inch fabric. Illustrated step-by-step sewing instructions included.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS (15c) in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Write plainly name, address and style number. BE SURE TO STATE SIZE.

Address orders to Sewing Circle Pattern Department, 243 West Seventeenth street, New York.

White Sheers Keynote Summer Chic

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE forthstanding note in summer fashions is the increased interest in femininity. Wherefore the glory of diaphanous materials of rapturous loveliness once more, as in the picturesque days of old, hold sway in the realm of pretty summery apparel. Everywhere dotted swisses, embroidered or plain organdies and nets, chiffons and dainty sheers of multi-type flatter the summer landscape. The call for white is insistent in these weaves of elusive ethereal beauty with new and delectable colors putting forth rival claims.

First and foremost among the new sheers is mousseline de soie. The important message about these voguish mousselines is that modern science has succeeded in producing a washable type—comes from a tubbing as fresh and lovely as ever was. Every woman who heretofore lamented the fact of the un-washability of the exquisite mousselines which are so dear to her heart will rejoice at the good tidings that there is a new mousseline de soie which actually can be laundered.

And here's some more good news—a mousseline de soie which is shadow-patterned in self-color. You'll love it! Makes up adorably over a taffeta foundation. Comes in white or pastels, with first honors going, however, to white, since white keynotes to summer chic. For that "one more" party frock to add to your summer collection, why not choose plain or shadow-patterned mousseline de soie?

The lovely, white frothy, filmy, vaporous frocks in the picture are typical of smartest midsummer trends. At the top to the left a cape and a ruche of crisp white net, which is really more of a tulle than a net, with two wax-white camelias, lend enchantment to a gown of the same tulle posed over white moire. A cluster of camelias snuggle in among the tulle flounces of the skirt.

The young girl seated below is wearing a darling ingenue gown. For this dainty frock Chanel uses yards and yards of ruffles edged with fine val lace on the cape and skirt of white mousseline de soie.

The pretty creature sitting opposite is gowned in finest of cotton net. The bodice top is modishly shirred. The bolero of matching net ties with a big casual bow at the throat. The voluminous skirt is the very picture of grace, walking, dancing or sitting down. There is a belt trimmed with gold kid leaves with garland to match in her hair.

Speaking of embroidered net, for a party frock which goes formal, who could think of anything more entrancing than the ensemble worn by the charming girl standing to the right in the group! Dots embroidered in delicate bonbon colors, pink blue and yellow, look confetti-like on their sheer white background. Pink satin ribbons tie the throat and the waist. In the graceful matching wrap with full cape sleeves, Mainbocher revives the "fascinator fashion" which is making a big hit with debutantes this season. The dainty tulle hood frames the face with an aureole of crisp little ruffles. It can be thrown back off the head with perfect ease.

FOR GARDEN PARTY

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Quaint, old timey frocks are new fashion for garden party wear. This one is of white mousseline de soie (a favorite fabric this summer). It is piped with mulberry. The broad-brimmed violet colored bally bunti hat is flowered in violet shades matching the corsage bouquet. It is a very pretty custom which has been revived—that of wearing flowers to match the posies on one's hat. Imagine a soft white straw encircled with a wreath of real African daisies with a necklace of the same daisies about your neck mounted on a velvet ribbon or a stiff old-fashioned bouquet posed at the front of a navy straw sailor, with a matching boutonniere in your buttonhole. And here is the real thrill to this story—the very fashionable set is wearing real flowers in this way, fresh plucked from the garden or the florist shop.

FROG FASTENINGS USED EXTENSIVELY

Frogs have hopped into the middle of the fashion swim this season.

Frog fastenings are used on everything from evening gowns to summer suits, and lend an opportunity for original color contrasts and a new casual air for more or less formal costumes.

Time was when the field of the frog fastening was limited to pajamas, but that time is no more.

You'll be seeing them on the newest shirtwaist frocks this season, on suits of wool and linen, on blouses and summer coats, on beach frocks and evening gowns.

Schiaparelli uses gold frog fastenings down the front of a green dinner gown, in a manner both decorative and military.

Evening gowns often employ one huge frog fastening at the neckline, and lightweight woolen coats for summer are shown with frogs all the way down the front.

London Fashions of 1910 Influencing U. S. Styles

Fashions of 1910, arriving via London and the silver jubilee, are influencing the styles of 1935 in the United States.

Flowers, feathers, silk ribbons, laces, lingerie touches, are being worn in the 1910 manner. The vogue for outdoor dining has transformed the afternoon dress and garden party frock of 1910 into the daylight dining ensemble of 1935.

Cartwheel hats, reminiscent of "Merry Widow" days, accompany dainty printed silk suits, with the most feminine of blouses. Black silk taffeta slips rustle under cream-colored lace daytime coats and dinner gowns. Accordion pleated silks in the manner of Fortuny make hostess gowns to be worn against tufted sofas and modern Victorian interiors.

Lesson for July 21

DAVID

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 26:5-12; II Samuel 1:23-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others.—Philippians 2:4.

PRIMARY TOPIC—David and the Sleeping King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—David and the Sleeping King.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—David the Great-Hearted.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Generous Attitude Toward Others.

David is one of the most prominent of Bible characters. His many-sided life and his close association with Christ give him a place of importance second to none in all the Bible. It is in this light that this great character should be viewed, and not merely as "David (The Great-Hearted)."

I. His Birth and Youth (I Sam. 16; 17:15, 34).

Bethlehem was the place of his birth, as well as that of his greater Son (Matt. 2:46). He was the youngest of Jesse's eight sons. His young manhood was spent as a shepherd. This was the first period of his schooling and preparation for life. From the brief descriptive word we learn that in his personal appearance he had auburn hair, fair eyes and a beautiful countenance (16:12). His life as a shepherd was attended with real hazards (17:34-37).

II. His Anointing (I Sam. 16:6-13).

God had revealed to Samuel that one of Jesse's sons was to be the new king. In determination of the divine choice, Jesse's sons passed before Samuel in order, beginning with Eliab, the oldest. Eliab was rejected in spite of his favorable physical qualifications. His inner condition as seen by God disqualified him. All glorying in the flesh must be set aside in the choice of a man for a place in God's program. David was chosen because of his fidelity as a shepherd boy. When the anointing oil was being applied, the Spirit of the Lord came upon him. David's attractiveness as a young man, and his unusual gifts were all to no avail without the Spirit.

III. David's Life at the Royal Court.

1. As a harpist and armorbearer to Saul (I Sam. 16:19-23). He was brought to play his harp before Saul in order that the evil spirit might be allayed.

2. His triumph over Goliath. For some reason David returned to look after his father's sheep. On being sent on an errand to his brethren in the camp, he saw the Philistine giant, Goliath, defying God and the army of Israel. He volunteered to fight, skillfully slung the stone which felled the giant, and with Goliath's own sword cut off his head.

3. Won the friendship of Jonathan. This friendship has been immortalized in the world's thought. It was unique in that it occurred between two men of rival worldly interest. Jonathan was the crown prince, heir to the throne. David was heir to the throne according to divine purpose. Knowing this, Jonathan waived his rights.

IV. David's Life as an Outlaw (I Sam. 21:10-31:13).

Though God anointed him king, David wandered for years as an outlaw to escape the murderous frenzy of Saul. During this time he did some foolish things, but he also learned many things in this bitter school which better fitted him to be a king, statesman, and poet, leaving to the world a rich heritage.

V. God's Royal Covenant (II Sam. 7:8-16).

On the ground of the setting forth of this covenant, he is the legal heir to the kingdom. Jesus Christ shall one day occupy the throne of his father David (Luke 1:31-33).

VI. David's Reign as King.

1. Made king of Judah at Hebron (II Sam. 2:4-5:3). A long war was waged between the house of David and that of Saul.

2. King over all Israel (II Sam. 5:4).

The elders of Israel at last invited him to be king over all Israel according to the purpose of God as expressed by Samuel when he anointed him king.

VII. David's Sins and Failures.

1. Refuge among the enemies of Israel (I Sam. 21, 30). This was a disgraceful act. Being the chosen and anointed of God, he should have trusted God to defend him against the fury of Saul.

2. Plurality of wives. He established a harem after the order of the heathen monarchs.

3. Crime as to Bath-sheba and Uriah (II Sam. 11, 12). Ammon's sin, the rebellions of Absalom and Sheba, and Absalom's attempt to seize the throne were the inevitable fruits of his polygamous life.

4. Numbering the people (II Sam. 25).

Religion

Religion, like morals and physics, has first truths which are incapable of being derived from anything more certain than themselves—which the human mind, at a particular point of its development, invariably recognizes, and the intuition of which is a direct result of its highest activities.—James Martineau.

Shining Qualities

Many individuals have, like uncut diamonds, shining qualities beneath a rough exterior.—Juvenal.

Offer Dukhobors New Sanctuary in Paraguay

Little has been heard in the last year or two of that strange Russian sect, the Dukhobors, several thousand of whom sought refuge in Canada at the close of the last century. Their clashes with the Canadian authorities and the habit of many of them of showing their defiance and manifesting one feature of their belief by parades in complete nakedness have, however, been a frequent subject of press dispatches throughout the years of their presence in Canada. Now come reports that some 15,000 Dukhobors, declaring weariness of religious persecution of which they accuse Canadian authorities, are preparing to seek a new refuge in far off Paraguay. This migration is new evidence of a tenacity of belief and purpose that various governments have found it difficult to understand and to deal with.

The sect had its origin, it appears, early in the Eighteenth century, and its difficulties with governments under the czars of Russia, due particularly to a faith impelling a refusal to participate in military service, caused action against it bringing about several long migrations in Russia. In 1898 through the efforts of Tolstoy and the Society of Friends of England, the czar's permission was obtained for departure of many of the Dukhobors from Russia. Finding Cyprus unsuitable, more than 8,000 of them made their way to Canada in 1899. There were early settlements in Saskatchewan and later in British Columbia.

Among the causes of clashes of the government authorities with the Dukhobors were refusals, owing to their community principles, to make individual homestead entries and their insistence on not becoming naturalized British subjects because of a long maintained principle not to become citizens of any country, but to remain citizens of the world. They objected also to registering births, marriages and deaths, and to complying with school and other customs contrary to their traditions and their opposition to all formal government. Whatever the virtues of the Dukhobors, which are said to be many, they have presented some difficult problems.

In view of the strong Dukhobor objection to military service, it seems strange that Paraguay, a country engaged in sanguinary warfare for the last two years, has invited them to settle in its territory.—Indianapolis News.

GAIN SEEN IN ALL TAX COLLECTIONS IN FIRST 6 MONTHS

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—A gain in tax collections of $1,680,562 was reported last Saturday by Henry Long, president of the State Tax Commission, in his report for the first six months of the Graves administration.

The report to Governor Graves included the period between January 19 and July 20, and showed an increase of $260,412 for income taxes and $236,000 for tobacco taxes.

Total tobacco collections were $1,059,876, including $32,876 in penalties, and compared with last year's collections to the same date of $826,378.

"At this rate," said Long, "our tobacco tax collections will surpass $2,000,000 this year without the new 10 per cent tax on snuff and chewing tobacco that likely will yield close to $200,000."

Stamps for the new snuff tax have arrived, and the revenue bill, recently signed by the governor, specified the tax was to begin immediately.

Income tax collections were shown to be $562,967 to date this year, compared with $302,555 last year. In addition, Long pointed out there was $106,381 agreed upon and assessed as "escapes and deficiencies" for 1933.

He said many persons owing "escaped or deficiency" income taxes were taking advantage of the 60-day period they are allowed without penalties being added.

Figured into the total gain of all taxes were automobile tags and privilege licenses, which showed respective increases of $238,088 and $45,557. These taxes are collected by the tax commission, whose actual total gain was $1,396 figures.

August, "Open House Month" For Visitors

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—The Alabama Power Company announces that the month of August has been set aside as "Open House Month" for visitors to six of its hydro plants in the vicinity of Clanton, Wetumpka and Tallassee. Customers of the Company and their friends are invited to bring picnic lunches and view the pioneer large power developments in the State. Roads to all of the dams are in good condition. Lay Dam is reached by way of Clanton, Alabama. To reach Mitchell Dam, turn off the Montgomery highway between Coopers and Verbena. Martin, Upper Tallassee and Thurlow Dams are reached by way of Tallassee, and Jordan Dam by way of Wetumpka.

All of the dams are in easy driving distance of practically any point in Alabama.

BUSINESS SCHOOL IS NEW ENTERPRISE FOR COLUMBIANA

The Columbiana Business School opened on Monday, July 22nd, and a number of pupils were enrolled.

Mrs. Clara Byrd, of Selma, Alabama, is in charge of this long needed commercial school, and is well equipped to offer the best methods now employed in the business world.

Mrs. Byrd is a graduate of the Sacred Heart Academy, in Selma, and has also completed the Teachers Course offered in this institution. She has had eight or 10 years in actual teaching experience, and personal secretarial work.

Courses now offered in this school have been those much needed in Shelby County. A new and wider field for employment is open, and it will pay those interested to equip themselves for service which will be remunerative.

Mrs. Byrd stated she could not guarantee a position to pupils, but she would guarantee any pupil who finished the course she offers, thoroughly capable of holding responsible positions.

The school is located in the heart of the business district in Columbiana, at the Blackerby Hotel. Phone 38J.

Heart Drifts

A LITTLE PARABLE.

I made the cross myself whose weight
Was later laid on me.
This thought is torture as I toil
Up life's steep Calvary.

To think mine own hands drove the nails!
I sang a merry song,
And chose the heaviest wood I had
To build it firm and strong.

If I had guessed—if I had dreamed
Its weight was meant for me,
I should have made a lighter cross
To bear up Calvary.

—(Aldrich)

THEY PITY ME.

They pity me who know that you are gone,
And see me tread familiar paths alone;
They search my face, half hoping it will own
My loss in haggard eyes and lips tight-drawn.
They gossip at my obvious gaiety,
"Her heart is calculating, cold as steel;
She simulated love she did not feel,
But retribution comes to such as she".

Poor silly souls! I cannot wish them ill
Who think my love unsure as flowing sand;
They do not know you walk beside me still,
That I can sense the nearness of your hand;
That, when I watch the sunset from yon hill,
I see the grasses bending where you stand.

—(Anonymous)

WHEN YOU ARE OLD.

When you are old and gray and full of sleep,
And nodding by the fire, take down this book,
And slowly read, and dream of the soft look
Your eyes had once, and of their shadows deep;
How many loved your moment of glad grace,
And loved your beauty with love false and true;
But one man loved the Pilgrim Soul in you,
And loved the sorrows of your changing face.
And bending down beside the glowing bars
Murmur, a little sadly, how love fled
And paced upon the mountains overhead
And hid his face amid a crowd of stars.

—(Contributed)

EMPTY HOUSE.

Never again can this house be
Home or love or dreams to me,
Never again—that has been all these
Comfort, too, and joy, heart's ease.

Empty house that was so much
Give me back for the faintest touch
Youth and the things I wanted most.
Empty house, with its silent ghost.

Never again my resting place;
Always I would miss your face;
See you come to open the door
You, who in flesh will never more.

Greet me tired, or great me gay,
Tell me the joys and the griefs of your day;
Oh, that this house should still be here
And YOU gone from it—who made it, dear.

RFC Earnings During Year Is $41,288,582

WASHINGTON, D. C.—[illegible] of $41,288,582 by the Reconstruction Corporation during the financial year ended June 30 were reported Saturday night in the annual statement of Chairman Jesse H. Jones.

Money repaid the corporation during the year exceeded by $119,062,819 the $1,218,346 in disbursements.

This trend prompted Jones to say at his last press conference that "when this thing is settled up in 10 or 15 years I think our earnings will offset our losses."

Assets and liabilities as of June 30, were balanced at $4,560,112,860.

During the preceding 1934 fiscal year disbursements totaled $1,940,862,128 and repayments amounted to but $932 996,627 a difference of more than $1,000,000,000.

Earnings for that year were $21,784,386.

The report for the year just ended showed authorizations and commitments amounted to $1,454,931,637; relief allocations for government agencies aggregated $590 467,130. Starting the year with $6,341,579 cash on deposit with the United States Treasurer, the corporation ended the year with $4,047,807 cash on deposit.

College Begins Second Term Summer School

MONTEVALLO, Ala.—The second Summer term at Alabama College started Monday, and will continue until August 24th. The term will thus consist of five weeks and classes will be held six days a week.

With the close of the first term last Friday, the demonstration schools in progressive education were also concluded on the campus. Held on both the elementary and high school levels, it has been of wide interest and has attracted observers from many sections of the South.

The first Summer term's enrollment was 40 per cent higher than that of the preceding Summer and a similar increase has enrolled for the second session.

PRESENTATION OF MUSICAL COMEDY SET FOR JULY 26TH

MONTEVALLO, Ala. — "Here Comes Arabella", a musical comedy published by the Wayne P. Sewell Producing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., will be presented in Montevallo on Friday night, July 26th, sponsored by the Methodist Missionary Society, and directed by Miss Thelma Hathorn.

A highly entertaining plot, with colorful Chinese and Gypsy choruses, make the musical comedy one of the best of the many hits from this popular Company. Some of the leading characters include: Taylor Hardy, Ruth Natthews, Warren Brown, Allen Gresky, Hoyt Stevens, Betty LeBaron, Dorothy Blanchard, Beatrice Looney, Mary Cobb Deshazo, Virginia Moore, Leon Perry, and many of Montevallo's popular young matrons.

The cast is wisely chosen and an enthusiastic audience is expected to be present on next Friday night.

Grouby Appointed B. H. P. Chairman

Carl E. Grouby, of Columbiana, has received the appointment of Local Chairman for the Better Housing Program now in progress in Columbiana and surrounding territory.

Persons who are interested in remodeling their homes, painting or rebuilding, are urged to get in touch with Mr. Grouby at the Columbiana Hardware Company's store.

Earl Wood is the Local Community Worker, and either of these gentlemen will be glad to discuss your housing problems with you and file necessary applications for work required.

STATE ASKS BIDS ON ROAD AND COUNTY SCHOOL PROJECTS

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Four highway surfacing projects estimated to cost $105,000 and five special projects involving an expenditure of $221,291 were announced from Montgomery last Friday night as part of Alabama's participation in the work relief program.

The four highway projects were advertised for bids Friday to be opened August 2, and contracts will be awarded upon approval of the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads.

The five special projects to use work relief labor include:

Chickasaw Creek dredging, at Mobile, $42,000; junior high school, at Florence, $67,909; drainage in Marion County, $19,828; extension of national cemetery, at Mobile, $39,600, and Shelby County 10 schoolhouses, at Columbiana, Shelby, Siluria, Montevallo, Calera, Harpersville, Helena, Almont, and two at Vincent.

The four road projects were:

Walker County, bituminous surfacing of 1.998 miles of Parrish-Oakman Road, $35,000.

Marion County, reinforced concrete paving of 0.496 miles in town of Guin, $20,000.

Colbert County, bituminous surface treatment of one mile in town of Cherokee, $20 000.

Etowah County, cement and asphalt paving of 0.531 miles in city of Gadsden, $30,000.

At the same time, Mr. Holt said money for the work's progress program will find its way into Alabama over the week-end if word is received from Treasury Department officials that sufficient money has been placed in the account of projects released.

Governor Vetoes One Of 216 Bills

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Governor Graves has signed all but three of the 216 bills that reached his desk although he first sent several of them back for minor executive amendments which in every instance the two houses approved.

Of the three unsigned bills, Gov. Graves vetoed just one-third of Representative Dominick providing for sterilization of habitual criminals, those with communicable insanity, and degenerates. While this bill had a technical legal flaw which could have been corrected with an executive amendment, the governor cited other reasons for his veto. A corrected bill has been introduced by Dominick and is pending.

The other two bills are merely reposing on the governor's desk. One is a local bill by Representative Bulger, of Tallapoosa, regulating the purchase of supplies by that county.

The second is the much debated anti-sedition bill by Representative Street, which many persons close to the governor have predicted he will veto. The governor has promised to act on this measure on the next legislative day, which will be July 30. Several public hearings have been held, with certain American Legion officials and industrial interests advocating the bill and labor and the press opposing it.

Alabama Dairy Herd Makes Good Record

AUBURN, Ala.—The Jersey herd owned by the estate of King Pharr, Catherine, Ala., established excellent production records during the ten-year period 1924-1934, during which time the American Jersey Cattle Club awarded individual cows in the Pharr herd seven gold and nine silver medals, reports W. H. Eaton of the dairy department of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute.

Non-Jury Term Circuit Court Opened Monday

The non-jury term of the Circuit Court for Shelby County opened on Monday morning, July 22, Judge W. W. Wallace presiding.

A number of non-jury cases were disposed of during Monday and Tuesday, and pleadings were settled in cases docketed for August term of the Court on Wednesday. The jury term of the Court will begin on August 19th, and will continue for two weeks. The Grand Jury will also be in session at this time, Solicitor A. L. Hardegree in charge.

New Deal Badly Hurt by Ruling That AAA Processing Taxes Are Unconstitutional—Democratic Senators Score Schall of Minnesota.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD
© Western Newspaper Union.

TWO to one against the New Deal was the week's score in Federal court decisions. The administration suffered severely. The Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati first held unconstitutional the condemnation of land by the PWA for slum clearance. Then the Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston dealt the AAA a terrific blow by declaring unconstitutional the processing and flour taxes. The one favorable decision was by the Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans and was that the sale of cheap electric power by the Tennessee Valley authority was constitutional.

Chester Davis

Harold Ickes, who is PWA administrator, said the slum clearance work would be carried on, though necessarily in modified form. But Chester Davis, AAA administrator, openly admitted that "the end of the processing taxes would mean the end of the Agricultural Adjustment administration in all its important aspects." He would not confess that he believed for a minute the Supreme court would confirm the ruling of the court at Boston. He asserted he had expected that decision to be adverse, saying: "That section around Boston is a hotbed of resistance to the processing taxes. Why, it's right up there among all those cotton manufacturers." This was most extraordinary comment from a high government official, but the Appeals court in Boston has not yet cited Davis for contempt.

Most well informed and unbiased persons have never believed the processing taxes would stand up under court test. The Guffey coal bill has some similar features, so that those who debate it should read these paragraphs in the Boston decision:

"The power of congress to regulate interstate commerce does not authorize it to do so by taxing products either of agriculture or industry before they enter interstate commerce, or otherwise to control their production merely because their production may indirectly affect interstate commerce.

"The issue is not, as the government contended, whether congress can appropriate funds for any purpose deemed by congress in furtherance of the 'general welfare,' but whether congress has any power to control or regulate matters left to the state and lay a special tax for that purpose."

Several hundred suits to enjoin collection of the processing taxes have been filed in Federal courts by processors. If they pay the taxes and the act is held unconstitutional by the Supreme court, they will not be able to recover, under a provision of the pending amendments prohibiting recovery suits against the government.

DROPPING all their rebellious indignation, the Democrats of the house did everything the administration wished in considering the social security bill as altered by the senate. The conferees had settled all differences after two weeks of hard work, but one of the amendments they accepted was that permitting private pension systems to function under the measure. The majority members of the house were informed that President Roosevelt was opposed to this, so they refused to accept it. The senate would not permit the elimination of the amendment, so back to conference went the bill.

THOMAS D. SCHALL, the blind senator from Minnesota, has been one of the sharpest tongued critics of the administration in the senate. Recently he described President Roosevelt as a "megalomaniac," and, though the word was subsequently eliminated from the Record, the Democratic senators were decidedly miffed. So a little later Senators Robinson, Black and Bone found opportunity to tell Schall what they think of him and to demand that he conform to the rules of "decency."

Senator Schall

The argument started when Schall had read by a clerk an editorial from a Texas editor, and an address of his own—all critical of the administration.

Robinson protested. He asserted "when one whose moral obliquities are so great as are those of the senator from Minnesota, it becomes necessary for some one to object." He added Schall "cannot shield himself behind an unfortunate affliction."

The Schall speech said President Roosevelt was imitating Mussolini, and that Ben Cohen, an administration aid and bill drafter, had "assumed the legislative functions usurped by the Executive."

Robinson called Schall the "misrepresentative from Minnesota" and expressed the opinion the senator had "employed" some one to write his speeches.

"It is small business and only could be done by a man of small mentality," said the Arkansas senator.

Replying, Schall said, "If the people knew what was behind this government they would not stand for it a minute."

SENDING floods of telegrams to senators or representatives for or against pending legislation will not be so effective in the future, as a result of the disclosures before the senate lobby investigators. They heard evidence to the effect that large numbers of telegrams against the utilities bill were sent from Warren, Pa., by an employee of the Associated Gas and Electric system, that the messages were signed with names taken from a city directory and that the originals were destroyed at Warren.

The senate committee, evidently planning a nation-wide inquiry, asked the Western Union Telegraph company to prohibit the destruction of any messages transmitted during the last year, and officials of the company promised to co-operate.

TWENTY months of apparently futile moves to revitalize the commercial relations between the United States and Russia, and then suddenly Washington announces that the two nations had concluded a one-year trade agreement under which the Soviet Republics agreed to increase their American imports by 150 per cent. In return for purchase of $30,000,000 worth of American goods Russia is to be granted wide tariff concessions by the United States.

Secretary Hull

Russia will buy railroad equipment, machinery for making new automobile models and other products of heavy industry. In addition the Soviets will buy cotton. The railroad equipment is needed badly for modernization of a weak transportation system.

In return Russia expects to sell sausage casings, certain grades of iron ore, manganese, furs and dairy products in large quantities to the United States.

The pact, concluded by the exchange of notes between Ambassador Bullitt in Moscow and Maxim Litvinov, commissar for foreign affairs, provides for no further loans to Russia and makes no mention of the more than $700,000,000 in debts contracted by former Russian governments. It is in line with Secretary Hull's policy of trade agreements. For these two reasons especially it is attacked by many Republicans and not a few Democrats in congress. Senator Pat McCarren of Nevada was one of the angriest of these gentlemen. He declared Secretary Hull was a "prize diplomatic dupe" and announced that he would demand an immediate modification of the reciprocal tariff act to rescind powers under which Hull is negotiating such treaties. Key Pittman, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, also is earnestly opposed to Hull's trade program.

SENATOR J. HAMILTON LEWIS of Illinois, a member of the foreign relations committee, long has urged that Great Britain be persuaded to cede to the United States her island possessions in the Caribbean sea in payment of her war debt. The other day he was moved to bring the subject up again and delivered an interesting speech in the senate. This time he based his proposal upon the "peace offer" of England to cede a portion of her territory in Somaliland to Ethiopia, which in turn would cede certain territory to Italy with a view of averting the impending war between those countries.

Senator Lewis

The senator also suggested that England surrender all rights she claims to privileges of constructing a Nicaraguan canal, recalling, as a precedent, that England compelled France to yield all claims to territory adjacent to the Suez canal.

The British islands in the West Indies, the senator said, are both useful as defense and necessary as protection for the United States. They "could be seized in time of war between nations fighting among themselves to possess the Caribbean and Southern seas. They could be used as the backyard of the United States from which supplies could be stored to be used in assault on America."

CHARLES TAUSSIG, who had served the administration for two years without official title or position, has been appointed chairman of the advisory committee of the National Youth administration. In announcing the creation of the NYA the President allocated to it $50,000,000 of work-relief funds.

SEEN and HEARD around the National Capital

By CARTER FIELD

Washington.—The fact that Senator Millard E. Tydings of Maryland is so far off the Roosevelt reservation is of far more political significance than most persons not interested in figuring electoral vote tables realize.

The Maryland senator had just been successfully called off in his Virgin Islands inquiry, and his row with Secretary of the Interior Ickes more or less muzzled, but that is not important, not to anyone who knows Tydings, and Maryland. Washington opinion about that particular row is that the people Tydings wanted to protect will be protected from the wrath of Ickes, in return for Tydings' piping down on his public utterances.

Maryland has only eight electoral votes, but is interesting because the state always goes Democratic in years when the Democrats win, nationally, and is as independent as the proverbial hog on ice at all times.

For example, in a Democratic sweep, in 1934, Maryland elected a Republican governor, the third since the Civil war. And each of the others served only one term. Yet at the same election, the state elected six Democratic members of the house, and a Democratic senator.

To make the situation clear, it should be understood that there were three or four important reasons why Albert C. Ritchie, the Democratic candidate for a fifth term, was not re-elected. He had angered the eastern shore section of the state by trying to prosecute leaders of a lynching mob. He was held responsible, probably unjustly, for the collapse of several important banks. And there was a good deal of sentiment against continuing the same man in office so long. No other governor of Maryland had ever been re-elected once. He was seeking a fifth term.

But it is interesting to note that the one man who was sure Ritchie could not be re-elected, and who as a result tried to get him to run for senator—which would seem at least to indicate the opposition was not personal—was Senator Tydings.

He's Top Dog in Maryland

Tydings very early in the game picked George L. Radcliffe for the Democratic nomination for governor. Later, on a compromise, Radcliffe ran for senator and was elected.

All of which means that Tydings is by way of being the top dog in Democratic politics in Maryland at the moment. Moreover, he is not worried about the immediate future, for he does not come up for re-election until 1938, two years after the Presidential election. And Maryland has a habit of always going Democratic in off years.

It so happens that Maryland is almost the most conservative state in the Union. Five of her six districts—all except that sixth—always send rather conservative men to the house. She once elected a practically unknown figure, Senator Joseph I. France, to the upper house because she was voting against a man she regarded as a radical—David J. Lewis. The chief charge against Lewis was that he was socialistically inclined—he had fathered the parcel post bill!

Maryland, a border state, always went Democratic in national elections until the free silver issue. She voted for McKinley in 1896 and 1900, split her electoral vote in 1904, voted for Wilson in both 1912 and 1916, and then voted for Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

There is little doubt that the state does not like the New Deal. If the election were held today, and any fairly unobjectionable Republican opposed Roosevelt, there is little doubt he would get Maryland's eight votes.

There is something ultra conservative about both Maryland and Virginia. It is rather interesting that Carter Glass, Henry F. Byrd, and Tydings are always found voting together. The other Maryland senator, Radcliffe, happens to be a close personal friend of Roosevelt, but, as pointed out, he was put in the senate by Tydings, and has yet to demonstrate either real power in the state or political sagacity.

Brings Up Borah

Talk of William E. Borah for the Republican nomination against Franklin D. Roosevelt next year is one of the most interesting political and economic developments since 1932. Not that there is actually very much of a possibility that the seventy-year-old senator will be nominated, but because of the various developments and repercussions which started the talk.

What it really means is that for the first time since the Republicans lost all but six states, in 1932, they are beginning to chirp up. They are beginning to think that there may be a possibility of winning in 1936. Until the last few weeks—in fact, right up to the tax message—they had been saying privately that 1936 was too soon to hope for; that 1940 would be their red letter day.

The whole psychology at the present moment is based on taxes. The American people are becoming tax conscious—federally as well as by counties and townships. When Clemenceau remarked to Woodrow Wilson that the average Frenchman would gladly die for his country, but he would not pay taxes to support it, his very accurate comment appealed to the American sense of humor. But not any more. The average American also is beginning to figure that it may be very glorious to go out and die for one's country on the battlefield, but it's tough to have to do without this or that or the other thing he wants, or his wife wants, just because taxes take so much of his total income.

Curiously enough this tax consciousness, though it may have been in incubation for some time past, did not hatch out until the President sent his tax message to congress. It was discussion of the amounts the various levies would raise, on top of all the fuss about processing taxes making the cost of bread and bacon and shirts and underwear and what not higher, that started folks talking out loud. It was the realization that sooner or later it was old John Taxpayer, in the middle walks of life, who would have to foot the bill for all these New Deal experiments.

More About Taxes

You are going to hear a great deal more about taxes, now that critics of the New Deal have realized what is happening. Plenty of oil will be poured on the smouldering fires. Attention will be called to many taxes which most folks pay without realizing they are taxes. For example, the federal levy of six cents a pack on cigarettes. And one cent of each three for a letter is pure tax, levied for tax purposes. Attention will be directed to how much of the cost of a pound of ham or bacon is tax; that the cost of everything is boosted by the fact that the producers and merchants have to pay such high taxes.

Meanwhile Senator Borah is a wonderful bridge between the conservative and progressive Republican wings. He happens to be opposed to most of the New Deal ideas, and no one has hit out more strongly on what the Republicans had been hoping would be the issue—preserving the Constitution.

But talk about Borah serves a very important purpose—it sidetracks speculation about Herbert Hoover. And talk about Hoover is regarded by most Republicans as the high water mark of defeatism.

"You don't re-employ the chauffeur who wrecked your car," as one of them put it.

If the Republicans could be gotten enthusiatic about some one else, and give full vent to their opposition to Roosevelt, some other candidate, against whom there might not be much serious opposition, might easily be nominated—and elected. Some one preferably who would not arouse animosity against himself.

Truth About Roosevelt

All sorts of weird stories are drifting back to Washington about President Roosevelt. Most of them relate to his alleged reactions to certain recent events. Particularly the Supreme court's NRA decision, and the tax message. An interesting point is that apparently all the stories have as their chief basis the way the President is alleged to have acted at press conferences.

The truth is nothing like as spectacular as the stories, but it is rather interesting. Being as the stories seem to center on the way Mr. Roosevelt acted at two press conferences, perhaps a brief summary of those two particular occasions would be worth while.

In the first, and most discussed, though actually less interesting one, the President met the newspaper men on Wednesday morning, following the decision by the high court of the NRA case on the previous Monday. Thus, he had nearly 48 hours in which to make up his mind what to say to the newspapers of the country.

Many stories have been printed, mostly by columnists who were not present, and got their information second-hand at best, though obviously more out of their own mental conceptions of how the President should have felt, that the President was visibly angered, that he was approaching the hysterical, etc.

The truth is that the President very carefully sent up a trial balloon, and planted the seeds of some excellent propaganda looking toward a constitutional amendment which would give congress the power to determine hours of labor and minimum wages in intrastate commerce.

He very obviously took the same pleasure from his talk with the reporters that a crack cabinetmaker takes in putting the finishing touches on a job, or that a lawyer takes when he thinks of just the right touch to give a difficult case, or a golfer when he successfully calculates the precise roll to sink a 20-foot putt.

Did a Good Job

The other, and more interesting, press conference was shortly after his tax message. This was far different, and far more difficult. The President fenced and parried with the newspaper men, because he had decided it was necessary to put over the idea that the White House had not changed its strategy in the middle of the play, but that two senators had entirely misunderstood him.

Roosevelt knew perfectly well, as he talked with more than a hundred fairly sharp newspaper men, that not a man in the room believed what he was saying. Every man there believed the senators had understood him correctly and had expressed the White House views—that the senators were now willing to take the blame as politicians have done from the beginning of time on the theory that the king is always right.

This destroyed the possibility of the normal Roosevelt approach in handling newspaper men.

Considering the difficulties, Franklin Roosevelt did an excellent job. He forced out to the public what he wanted out, but he was obviously fencing obviously at high tension. Yet he never lost his temper.

Little Lights on LIVING

100 PER CENT

NOT long ago I visited a friend, the personnel director of a large eastern firm. Her observation was keen. The interest of my visit centered around her summation of the 100 per cent business woman. Would you change these figures if you were hiring a young person of character in your business?

Mental Adequacy	15%	Initiative	12%
Health	15%	Cooperation	10%
Personality	15%	Industry	10%
Appearance	13%	Punctuality	10%

My job resembles a physician's, she said laughingly, "one look at the patient tells more than several reference letters." During her first interview she glimpses the individual's attitude toward life by what she calls "four success signals." They are:

a. What is the poise of the head?

b. Does she look as well going as coming?

c. Does she use or abuse the king's English?

d. Has she personality plus?

Posture was her first signal. Few people realize how self-revealing posture is. The set of one's head on the shoulders bespeaks one's degree of ambition, or lack of it. A straight front look reflects one's self-confidence. Too much self-confidence, however, is as bad as none, for that approaches conceit.

Appearance was second. Well-groomed does not imply expensively gowned. It implies, however, neatness, care in detail and cleanliness. Those who are careful, clever, and chic are "sartorially smarter" than some others who count figures into four columns for their year's wardrobe. More self-respect can be bought for 25 cents in a shoe shop, where heels are straightened, than any place in the wide world. This makes one look as well going as coming. Earrings and rouge can never reach as far in this matter of toilet, as a healthy well-kept skin.

The third was an unusually high hurdle—mental adequacy. My friend almost despairs at the linguistic paucity prevalent today, even among our college graduates. The English language and the "American slanguage" are farther apart than the ocean wide.

The fourth and last X-ray test was the most subtle. "I have several ways of proving the innate refinement of my visitor," she said, "this I call personality plus. Absolute indifference to my telephone conversations brings her score one. I watch her emotional reactions and self-control when she discusses with me her hobbies, how she spends her leisure time, or the qualities she likes best in her new friends."

These four success signals recall what Emerson said: "What you do speaks so loudly I cannot hear what you say!"

THREE REASONS

"HOW did you like my sermon this morning," inquired the young theologue of the little old Scotch lady walking slowly and totteringly on a cane out of the little village church one Sunday morning. "I did na like it," she responded with full vigor and conviction. "I did na like it for three reasons!" "What are they"? inquired the young student preacher becoming more and more interested. "Weel," said the little old lady, stopping and planting her cane in front of her with a definite grip as if to punctuate her forceful sentence, "first, ye read it, second, ye didna read it weel, and third, it was, . . . it was," she began hesitatingly as if to spare his feelings, "it was na worth the readin'."

Splendidly did this young theologue respond. Clasping her hand he said, heartily, "thank you, indeed, for your help; I am the one getting a sermon this morning instead of giving one."

Years went on, the young theologue in time became one of the golden orators, and great men of the cloth of his time. Always when speaking before a group of youth, he never failed to mention the greatest friend of his youth, as he loved to call the little old Scotch lady who, by her unafraidness and sincerity, up-stepped him professionally, for as he left the church that morning, he vowed secretly to overcome each criticism the little old lady had given in her three reasons.

Our friends are truly those who care enough to tell us of our faults because they love us more, not less.

I remember talking with a lovely young woman student, who had only one bad fault as I could see, nervously biting her fingernails. "Mary," I said to her one day, "I have something to say to you that will be worth pure gold to you, but you will have to ask me for it!" She looked out of the window and then turning suddenly, she said, "please tell me, for I know you do want me to succeed." I did tell her and also suggested a remedy even at a cost to her to keep her nails beautifully manicured until she mastered this habit. In a month she came gratefully smiling to show me her progress.

"Life is only an adventure in understanding." If hearts are willing to give and receive, mutual benefit comes to each from the other.

The Lucky Lawrences

SYNOPSIS

The luck that had brought the Boston Lawrences to California at the beginning of the gold rush has deserted the present generation. From a 4,000-acre ranch, their holdings have shrunk to a small farm, and the old family home in Clippersville. The death of their father forced the three eldest children to work so that Sam and little Ariel might continue their education. Phil, now twenty-five, had gone into the iron works, Gail to the public library and Edith to the book department of Clippersville's largest store. Seventeen-year-old Ariel is becoming a problem, and Phil is fascinated by "that terrible" Lily Cass, whose husband has deserted her. Young Van Murchison, scion of a wealthy family, returns from Yale, and Gail has visions, through marriage with him, of the turning of the Lawrence luck. Dick Stebbins, Phil's best friend, has the run of the house. Ariel is sneaking out of the house at night for joy rides. Phil suggests, to the girls' consternation, that they invite Lily Cass to the house. Gail goes with Van for a week-end with the Chipps, his uncle and aunt. She is received coldly by Mrs. Chipps and her guests.

For a moment Gail could not see the point. Then it came upon her with sickening force, and she felt choked and a little nauseated. The men roared; the girls laughed briefly, and Lenore said, "Jim, don't be so revolting!"

"You low swine!" Lucia Tevis, who was eighteen years old, added affectionately.

"Well, what can you do?" Gail asked herself fiercely. She couldn't shame Van by getting up and walking away from the group. Her face burned wretchedly for half an hour. She would not give in. She slept, waked, breakfasted, went to luncheon at some club in whose chintzy dressing room the girls were notably rude to her, watched her first polo game. She would not give in.

Fight, fight, fight. She made herself pretty, she made herself amusing, she fought back the constant impulse to say, "Oh, Van, take me home!" No, no, no! This was her chance; she would not lose it. She grew almost feverish, her clear skin unusually pale, her blue eyes unusually bright, and was the prettier for it.

Van saw nothing. He was in great spirits, rushing from one thing to another—cocktails, bridge, tennis, swimming, polo, golf—at breakneck speed. By Saturday night all these were exhausted, radio and victrola had done their worst, and it was decided that Mockerson's offered the only possible amusement.
